On December 3, 1982, Taylor was sent a letter informing him that he was discharged. On December 4, Taylor filed a grievance pursuant to the National Master Freight Agreement protesting his discharge. As Respondent notes, the grievance does not specifically allege that the truck was "unsafe" for Taylor to drive. Nor does Taylor specifically refer to article 16 of the collective-bargaining agreement dealing with an employee's right to refuse to drive unsafe equipment. The grievance does, however, grieve the fact that "other drivers have been allowed to turn these Fords down because of the steering wheel being in their stomach." A hearing was held regarding Taylor's grievance which Taylor attended. After the grievance was deadlocked at the Multi-State Committee, the grievance was referred to the area committee, which denied the grievance. Taylor did not attend the area committee meeting. Respondent did not offer into evidence a transcript of any stage of the grievance proceeding.

[6] I find Taylor's refusal to return the instructions to be of no consequence. There was no indication it was considered insubordination or played any part in Respondent's decision to discharge Taylor.

[7] I also find this incident to be inconsequential. Taylor had already been discharged when the incident occurred.

Analysis and Conclusions

Regarding the issue whether the Board should defer to the Teamsters Multi-State Grievance Committee's denial of Taylor's grievance regarding his discharge and, as a result, dismiss the complaint herein, Respondent in its brief recognizes "the relatively recent, misguided, decisions of the Board which hold contrary to Respondent's position." American Freight System, 264 NLRB 126 (1982); Propoco, Inc., 263 NLRB 136 (1982); Suburban Motor Freight, 247 NLRB 146 (1980). These are, of course, the same cases relied on by the General Counsel in support of the argument that the Board should not defer, and they clearly support the General Counsel's position. Accordingly, I find that it would be inappropriate to defer to the Teamsters Multi-State Grievance Committee's denial of Taylor's grievance regarding his discharge where there is not even a written decision by that committee from which it would be possible to tell whether the committee considered the statutory issues presented here.

With regard to Taylor's discharge, the General Counsel argues that when an employee complains about safety matters which are subjects of the collective-bargaining agreement, he is engaged in protected concerted activity because such conduct affects the rights of all unit employees. McLean Trucking Co., 252 NLRB 728 (1980); Interboro Contractors, 157 NLRB 1295 (1966), and other similar cases. The General Counsel argues that in refusing to drive Ford 79–597, Taylor was exercising a right pursuant to article 16, section 1, of the collective-bargaining agreement which provides, "The employer shall not require employees to take out on the streets or highways any vehicle that is not in safe operating condition." Thus, according to the argument, Taylor's refusal of Ford 79–597 was the result of complaints about a safety matter which is the subject of the collective-bargaining agreement, and he was thereby engaged in protected activity. Additionally, the General Counsel argues that Taylor's refusal to drive Ford 79–597 was protected because he was exercising a right pursuant to Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations which provides, inter alia, that motor vehicles shall not be driven unless the driver satisfies himself that the steering mechanism, brakes, lighting devices, and other parts and accessories are in good working order. As a result, the argument continues, Taylor's refusal to drive Ford 79–597 was of common concern to all employees, and was therefore "concerted" activity accorded the protection of the Act.

This theory of concerted activity has been specifically adopted and applied by the Board in Interboro Contractors, supra, and its progeny.

Respondent argues that in refusing to drive Ford 79–597, and in his actions which led up to that refusal, Taylor was not acting in concert with other employees, but rather was acting by himself and only for himself. Respondent further argues that the Interboro doctrine has been rejected by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit in which this case arose[8] and therefore should not be applied here. Respondent argues that even if the Interboro principle is applied here, in refusing to drive Ford 79–597 Taylor was not attempting to enforce any provision of the collective-bargaining agreement and had no reasonable belief that the vehicle was unsafe. In a nutshell, Respondent argues:

> A review of the transcript reveals clearly that what this entire case amounts to is that for reasons of personal comfort and convenience Taylor did not want to drive that Ford tractor on the night in question, and he was bound and determined to get out of it.
>
> The real crux of the matter is to be found in Taylor's statement:
>
> > I don't drive them [Fords] when I can get out of it, I agree with you. Because they hurt my stomach.

After hearing this case, there is no doubt in my mind that, in refusing to drive Ford 79–597, Taylor was concerned solely for himself. There is nothing in the Act, however, which requires an employee to be motivated by altruistic concerns in order to be afforded its protection. Nor does it follow from the fact that Taylor was concerned solely for himself that Taylor was therefore acting by himself and not in concert with other employees, even though he may have been the only one to refuse to drive a truck on the night of December 1, 1982.

My analysis of the facts herein leads me ultimately to the conclusion that in refusing to drive Ford 79–597 on the night of December 1, 1982, Taylor was acting not only in conformity with the Motor Carrier Safety Regulation which provides in part that a driver must satisfy himself that the steering mechanism works properly and that provision of the collective-bargaining agreement which states that an employer shall not require employees to drive any vehicle that is not in safe operating condition; nor solely because Taylor reasonably believed it was dangerous to drive Ford 79–597; and, lastly, not solely as a result of concerted activities engaged in with other employees. Rather, all of these factors are present in Taylor's refusal to drive Ford 79–597.

That Taylor was acting in conformity with the Motor Carrier Safety Regulation described above and article 16, section 1, of the collective-bargaining agreement is so apparent as to require no further explication. Taylor's belief that driving Ford 79–597 on the night of December 1, 1982, would present a dangerous situation was indeed reasonable, for I find that the result would have been in fact unsafe. This is not to say that driving Ford 79–597 was necessarily unsafe for all drivers. When Taylor refused, McLaurin drove the vehicle without incident, and the record shows that many miles have been put on that vehicle since that night. As the vehicle existed on the night of December 1, 1982, however, it was unsafe for many large drivers, including Taylor, because the steering wheel in fact protruded into Taylor's stomach and no doubt would have done the same for other drivers of equal girth. On the night of December 1, as well as throughout this proceeding, Respondent reacted to Taylor's complaints about the steering mechanism as if they arose only from his desire for comfort. I specifically credit Taylor that he explained to Miller that he could not fit behind the steering wheel of this truck because he was too big and the steering wheel would not adjust properly. Not once did dispatcher Miller bother to check to see whether Taylor could fit reasonably behind the steering wheel. Miller asked Floyd to be his witness, and yet did not himself bother to witness the problem being complained of, even when Floyd himself insisted on doing so. Floyd, Miller's witness, testified credibly before me that in fact the steering wheel protruded into Taylor's stomach. By simple inspection Miller could have determined that even though the steering column may have been worked on by the repair shop, the steering wheel did not recess as far as it was intended to, that the truck could not safely be assigned to a driver of Taylor's girth but could be assigned to a thinner smaller driver. Miller, who had it within his power, could then have simply reassigned the vehicle. The problem on the night of December 1 did not represent a conflict between Taylor and the repair shop, nor between Miller and the repair shop. The unsafe condition could easily have been corrected by Miller without any conflict, but Miller turned a deaf ear to Taylor's complaints that the steering wheel would not adjust as far as it was intended to and Taylor could not fit behind the wheel. Miller assumed, and Respondent now argues, that Taylor was motivated solely out of a desire for personal comfort. This argument would have me ignore, as Respondent itself ignored, the fact that on Ford 79–597 the steering wheel in fact protruded into Taylor's stomach to such a degree as to impair proper steering of the vehicle. While Respondent may have chosen to ignore this, I cannot.

Turning now to the concerted nature of Taylor's action, I wholly reject Respondent's argument that Taylor did not seek out other employees and solicit their opinions regarding the condition of the truck he refused to drive. Rather, this record is replete with evidence that throughout the night of December 1 and into the early morning hours of December 2, 1982, Taylor solicited the opinion and the support of other employees that it would be unsafe for him to drive Ford 79–597. Taylor attempted to confront Shop Superintendent Mize about the problem and was rebuffed because company rules prohibit drivers from communicating directly with the repair shop. Taylor then approached employees Jack Simpson and W. R. Worthington. Worthington told Taylor that Taylor could not drive the tractor in question, that Taylor was too big. Taylor asked shop mechanic John Smith, who had been dispatched to repair lights on the trailer, to inspect the steering column. Smith found that the steering column did not slide properly and did not allow the driver to have all the room the cab was designed to allow. Employee Floyd also inspected the vehicle with Taylor, and he too found that the steering wheel would not recess against the dashboard as it was supposed to and that it hit Taylor in the stomach. In summary, Taylor not only spoke to but had the support of other drivers before he ultimately refused to drive Ford 79–597.

[8] Roadway Express v. NLRB, 700 F.2d 687 (11th Cir. 1983). See also Enerhaul, Inc. v. NLRB, 700 F.2d 748 (11th Cir. 1983).

I find that Taylor's refusal to drive Ford 79–597 was concerted activity for yet another reason. In the past, other large drivers have complained because they could not fit in Ford tractors, and specifically the 1979 model, without the steering wheel touching, or even being imbedded in, their stomachs. The fact that such a condition presents not only an uncomfortable but a hazardous situation because it interferes with steering the vehicle must necessarily have been part of the reason for Respondent and the Union entering into an agreement to exempt certain drivers from driving Fords. Further, numerous complaints have been made, and at least two grievances filed, regarding the adjustable steering column. Neither the General Counsel nor Respondent offered these past grievances as exhibits. Instead, both chose to rely on oral testimony with regard to them. Whether those grievances still exist is not revealed by the record. Thus, while there is no direct evidence to prove conclusively that the complaints and the first grievance regarding the telescoping steering mechanism were related to complaints by large drivers that they could not fit in Ford tractors, I believe it is reasonable to draw the inference that they were. Initially, large drivers complained because they could not fit behind the steering wheel. Other drivers complained because, when the adjusting bolts were left loose so that the telescoping mechanism would adjust, there was play and vibration in the steering wheel.[9]

Respondent attempted to resolve all of these complaints by exempting certain drivers from driving Ford tractors and welding the steering columns in a fixed position with steering wheels as close as they would go to the dashboard, thereby eliminating play in the steering wheel and at the same time providing most room in the cab. A later grievance in 1982 resulted in Respondent agreeing to remove the welds and return the steering mechanism to their original condition. It was Respondent's inability to do this successfully on Ford 79–597 which resulted in the steering wheel not being able to retract as far as it was intended to be that caused the wheel to protrude into Taylor's stomach. In order for activity to be concerted, it does not necessarily have to be simultaneous, or even contemporaneous. It is sufficient if the actions of various people, though engaged in at different times, are in fact shown to be related to the same subject, or are sufficiently related to be of a common concern. Taylor was fully aware of the history of complaints and grievances regarding the steering mechanism and the lack of room in Ford tractors when he refused to drive Ford 79–597 on the night of December 1, 1982. Respondent was equally aware of this history of complaints and grievances. I find that in refusing to drive Ford 79–597 on the night of December 1, 1982, Taylor was engaged in activity in concert with other employees who had complained in the past, and filed grievances, regarding the steering mechanism and the lack of room in Ford tractors.

Accordingly, I find that because Taylor's refusal to drive Ford 79–597 on the night of December 1, 1982, was in conformity with Motor Carrier Safety Regulations; was a right accorded him pursuant to the collective-bargaining agreement; was the result of a condition which was in fact unsafe; was action that Taylor took only after speaking to, and obtaining the support of, other employees; and was activity engaged in in concert with other employees who had complained in the past, and filed grievances regarding, the steering mechanism and the lack of room in 1979 Ford tractors, Respondent's discharge of Taylor for engaging in this activity violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent, Ryder Truck Lines, Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Taylor's refusal to drive Ford 79–597 on the night of December 1, 1982, was in conformity with Motor Carrier Safety Regulations; was a right accorded him pursuant to the collective-bargaining agreement between Respondent and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America; was the result of a condition that was in fact unsafe; was action that Taylor took only after speaking to and obtaining the support of other employees; and was action engaged in in concert with other employees who had complained in the past and had filed grievances regarding the steering mechanism and the lack of room in 1979 Ford tractors, and Taylor was thereby engaged in concerted activity protected by the Act.

3. Respondent discharged Melvin D. Taylor on December 2, 1982, because of his protected concerted activities described above, and Respondent thereby violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. The unfair labor practices which Respondent has been found to have engaged in, as described above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

[9] Testimony here shows that this vibration was not so excessive to affect actual steering of the vehicle. It was, however, of such a degree that it tended to mask or hide various malfunctions which might arise and which would otherwise have been detected through their effect on the steering.

[Recommended Order omitted from publication.]

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION

PHILIP P. MCLEOD, Administrative Law Judge. On September 21, 1983, I issued my decision in this proceeding finding, inter alia, that Respondent discharged Melvin D. Taylor in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act). I also concluded that the issues involving the alleged unlawful discharge of Taylor should not be deferred to the grievance-arbitration procedures of the parties' collective-bargaining agreement. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions to my decision with the Board.

On January 19, 1984, after the issuance of my decision, the Board issued its Decision and Order in Olin Corp., 268 NLRB 573 (1984). In Olin Corp., the Board articulated the standard it would use for the deferral of cases to arbitration as that policy was renewed in United Technologies Corp., 268 NLRB 557 (1984), issued that same day.

By Order dated April 30, 1984, the Board remanded this proceeding to me to prepare this supplemental decision setting forth further findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a recommended Order regarding the applicability of Olin Corp. to the instant case.[1] Accordingly, the record in this case was reopened to afford the parties the opportunity to introduce evidence and to file supplemental briefs setting forth their positions on this issue. Supplemental reply briefs were also provided for. Both counsel for the Acting General Counsel and Respondent filed timely briefs with me. Respondent also filed a reply brief. These briefs have been duly considered. Neither party desired additional hearing to introduce further evidence. In the brief filed by the Acting General Counsel, the representation was made that the parties telephonically stipulated to the authenticity and admissibility of certain documents attached to its brief which constitute minutes of the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee and the Southern Conference Area Grievance Committee which reviewed and considered Taylor's grievance regarding his discharge.[2] In its reply brief, Respondent does not dispute the accuracy of the Acting General Counsel's representation regarding this stipulation.

In Olin Corp., supra, the Board stated in relevant part (268 NLRB at 574):

> Accordingly, we adopt the following standard for deferral to arbitration awards. We would find that an arbitrator has adequately considered the unfair labor practice if (1) the contractual issue is factually parallel to the unfair labor practice issue, and (2) the arbitrator was presented generally with the facts relevant to resolving the unfair labor practice. In this respect, differences, if any, between the contractual and statutory standards of review should be weighed by the Board as part of its determination under the Spielberg standards of whether an award is "clearly repugnant" to the Act. And, with regard to the inquiry into the "clearly repugnant" standard, we would not require an arbitrator's award to be totally consistent with Board precedent. Unless the award is "palpably wrong," i.e., unless the arbitrator's decision is not susceptible to an interpretation consistent with the Act, we would defer.
>
> Finally, we would require that the parties seeking to have the Board reject deferral and consider the merits of a given case show that the above standards for deferral have not been met. Thus, the party seeking to have the Board ignore the determination of an arbitrator has the burden of affirmatively demonstrating the defects in the arbitral process or award.

It should be noted from the outset that this case does not involve the usual situation in which a grievance has been presented to an independent outside arbitrator who has individually heard the facts and rendered a written decision considering those facts in disposing of the contractual issue presented to him. Rather, this case involves a grievance filed by a discharged employee pursuant to the National Master Frieght Agreement in which an arbitration panel is made up of equal numbers of management and union representatives. If those individuals, who in this case comprised the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee, are not able to reach a majority decision with regard to the grievance, it is considered "deadlocked." Such a grievance is then referred to another committee, also made up of equal numbers of management and union representatives, which in this case was the "Southern Conference Area Grievance Committee." It is at this latter stage that Taylor's grievance was resolved.

The issue which was placed before the grievance committees regarding Taylor's discharge arose pursuant to article 45 of the collective-bargaining agreement which provides in part that "the employer shall not discharge . . . any employees without just cause." The issue in the unfair labor practice proceeding is whether Taylor's refusal to drive a truck assigned to him was protected activity within the meaning of the Act, such that his discharge for such conduct violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. As the Acting General Counsel argues, the grievance committees were not asked to consider whether Taylor was engaging in activity protected by the Act. On the other hand, the minutes of the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee reflect that an issue which was fundamentally similar to the issue before me was at least given passing consideration. During that grievance meeting the point was made that "In accordance with the national interpretation to guidelines handed down by the Safety Committee . . . it says that if a man because of his physical size cannot drive a unit and you have other equipment on the yard, you will switch it out for him." Moreover, the minutes of that committee reflect that substantial argument was devoted to Taylor's position that the truck he was assigned to drive was unsafe. That committee was also presented with Taylor's claim that regardless of whether the truck was safe for drivers smaller than Taylor, it was unsafe for him because of his physical size. Finally, I note that the minutes of the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee, which was first asked to consider Taylor's grievance, are contained on nine legal-size typewritten single-spaced pages. After reviewing this document, I am satisfied that in all major respects it is a capsulized version of the record in the trial before me. Based on all the above, I find that the contractual issue raised by Taylor's grievance, though not identical, was factually parallel to the unfair labor practice issue and that the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee was presented generally with the facts relevant to resolving both issues.

---

[1] I note that Meyers Industries, 268 NLRB 493 (1984), which might also be argued to be applicable herein, issued on January 6, 1984. The remand, however, only directed me to consider the deferral issue raised by Olin Corp., supra. Accordingly, I did not direct the parties to brief, nor have I attempted to consider herein, the applicability, if any, of Meyers Industries, to my earlier decision.

[2] I note that the minutes of these meetings attached to the brief of the Acting General Counsel are misnumbered by oversight. Minutes of the January 25, 1983, Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee are referred to in the brief as appendix 1 but are, in fact, marked appendix 2 as attached to the brief. This misnumbering should cause no confusion because the two appendices speak for themselves.

If the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee had decided the merit of Taylor's grievance, I would have little trouble deferring to that decision. Despite the differences between the joint-panel procedure utilized here and the more usual situation, the Board has deferred to decisions of such a joint panel. See United Parcel Service, 270 NLRB 290 (1984). The last sentence of the Board's footnote in that decision, however, when viewed in the context of the administrative law judge's findings in that case, leaves considerable room for doubt whether the Board would accord equal weight to the decisions of such joint panels in every case. In the instant case, the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee, which heard the actual evidence, could not reach a majority decision and instead became "deadlocked." The grievance was then referred to the "Southern Conference Area Grievance Committee." The minutes of that committee are contained on a single typewritten page. The only reference to the lengthy proceedings before the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee is a single line which reads, "The transcript of the Multi-State hearing will be made a part of the record." The parties, who at this later proceeding were only the Employer and the Union, were then given the opportunity to "add anything at this time." Respondent's representative then made a statement which comprises the vast majority of the minutes of that committee meeting. Following Respondent's statement, the minutes contain the following: "Local Union don't have anything to add." Following that is the single line which reads:

> DECISION: Case number 15 DENIED, COST TO THE UNION.

In my judgment, the brief cursory minutes of the Southern Conference Area Committee are not sufficient to show that it was presented with the facts relevant to the unfair labor practice, much less that it adequately considered those facts, and I would not defer to this award. Though the issue before the Southern Conference Area Committee was identical to that before the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee, and the contractual issue therefore remains factually parallel to the unfair labor practice issue, the minutes of the Southern Conference Area Grievance Committee are wholly inadequate and provide no basis for finding that it was presented generally with the facts relevant to resolving the unfair labor practice or that it adequately considered that issue. The only reference in the minutes of the Southern Conference Area Grievance Committee to the minutes of the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee is the single line quoted above that "The transcript of the Multi-State hearing will be made a part of the record." The minutes of the Southern Conference Area Grievance Committee contain nothing to show that the facts contained in the minutes of the Southern Multi-State Grievance Committee were discussed or considered in any way. They were simply "made a part of the record." I find that it would be inappropriate to defer to the decision of the Southern Conference Area Grievance Committee where the minutes of that committee are so cursory so as not to reflect whether it was actually presented with the facts relevant to resolving the unfair labor practice, and I reaffirm my earlier decision herein.[3]

[3] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

Signetics Corporation and The United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America. Case 32–CA–4606

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND DENNIS

On 9 December 1983 Administrative Law Judge David G. Heilbrun issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief to the Respondent's exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Signetics Corporation, Sunnyvale, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

In adopting the judge's credibility resolutions, we rely solely on his findings based on demeanor and disavow all other gratuitous comments.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

DAVID G. HEILBRUN, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried on various dates between January 6 and May 11, 1983, at hearing locations in both Santa Clara and San Jose, California. The proceeding is based on a complaint alleging that Signetics Corporation (Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by issuing written warnings to Rachel Marshall, placing her on 60 days' probation and then terminating her from employment, all in sudden succession during June 1982 and assertedly because she joined or assisted The United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America (the Union) or engaged in other protected concerted activities for the purposes of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

On the entire record,[1] my observation of witnesses and consideration of posthearing briefs, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT AND RESULTANT CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

I. CASE BACKGROUND

Respondent is a major electronics firm employing approximately 4000 persons in numerous buildings spread primarily throughout the high technology industrial area popularly termed "Silicon Valley." Michael Eisencher has, since at least mid–1981, been principal field organizer working on a campaign of unionization among Respondent's employees. One technique in the campaign is the preparation and dissemination of a printed flyer entitled "The Union Voice," which is expressly attributed in its publication to the "UE Electronics Organizing Committee."[2]

Respondent's corporate information services (CIS) department includes a telecommunications center known as the TWX room. This is housed in a building on Lawson Lane that is several miles distant from the firm's headquarters, and is also separate from a related facility located on Tannery Way in which one TWX employee is assigned for a late shift. The function is managed by John Dinan, while actual TWX room supervisor from mid-1981 onward have been Richard Bartels, Michael (Mike) Barrett, Joseph S. (Steve) Lindsey, and Brian Fukuba. Personnel services have from that same point in time been provided by Mary Monfared, who on August 17, 1981, was promoted from an entry-level administrative position to industrial relations manager for CIS. Relatedly the TWX room was then perceived as having various problems, warranting the involvement of an organizational development consultant named Jerry Pike.

At material times approximately a half dozen employees staffed the TWX room on day shift, while the afternoon "swing" shift was comprised of Rachel Marshall, the most senior telecommunications operator, Esther Singh, Peggy Martin, and Mary Serna. Marshall and Singh, and more prominently the former, had become early supporters of the Union. This manifested by their talking openly of benefits to be derived from unionization, and the wearing of UE buttons while at work. On January 28, 1982, Eisenscher filed an unfair labor practice charge alleging that during the preceding 6 months Respondent had violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by, among other things, surveillance, threats, intimidation, retaliatory disciplinary actions, and discriminatory enforcement of rules. Stephen Kociol, Respondent's associate house counsel, filed an appearance in the matter and [1] Certain errors in the transcript are noted and corrected.

[2] Respondent, a California corporation with an office and place of business in Sunnyvale, California, has engaged at all material times in the business of manufacturing electrical semiconductors, in the course of which it annually sells and ships goods or services valued in excess of $50,000 directly to customers located outside California. On these and other admitted facts I find Respondent to be an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Sec. 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act, and otherwise that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Sec. 2(5).

responded by letter setting forth the Employer's position on relevant issues. Ultimately on May 6, 1982, a bilateral settlement agreement was approved by the Regional Director. The document was expressly confined to a resolution of the specific case and it contained a nonadmission clause. The related notice to employees recited that Respondent would not promise additional benefits to employees, would not create the impression of surveillance over lawful distribution of materials by employees on behalf of the UE or any other labor organization, would not threaten to discipline employees or order them to leave company premises when so engaged, would not discipline employees for serving as representative of fellow employees at investigatory interviews, and would not threaten to take adverse personnel action against employees who exercised rights under the National Labor Relations Act, such as transfers to .solated work areas or increases in workload. Such notices were posted commencing May 26, 1982, and by letter dated July 27, 1982, Kociol advised the Region's compliance officer that a full 60-day posting period had been completed.[3]

II. NARRATIVE CHRONOLOGY FROM MID–1981 UNTIL JUNE 1982

Shortly after Monfared assumed her industrial relations position she became involved in a payroll problem. Singh had been newly hired in September 1981, and mistakenly not paid a night-shift differential. She complained about this to Dinan, but quickly became exasperated with failure of prompt adjustment and chose not to report for work on a Friday in protest. On the following Monday Singh was offered a private meeting to discuss resolution of the problem, which was arranged at Monfared's office with Dinan also to be present. Singh sought to have Marshall accompany her as a representative, but this was prohibited by those from management. In connection with the incident Bartels isxued Singh a memorandum dated September 15, 1981, which was confirmatory of a verbal warning for not coming to work on the given Friday. Soon thereafter, on November 3, 1981, Bartels placed Singh on 30 days' probation for excessive absenteeism, using Respondent's official "Corrective Action/-Probation" form.

After having been recruited to the cause around late 1981 by Marshall, Singh began openly wearing a union button to work in January 1982. Late that same month Marshall was engaged in passing out a current issue of "The Union Voice" to day-shift employees. She collaborated in this with Joseph Sacco, senior electronic technician in Respondent's calibration lab, and a person who had been active on behalf of the Union for more than 2 years. This took place at 6 a.m. and neither Marshall nor Joseph Sacco were on working time while so engaged. They were challenged in this activity by supervisor Mike Ogle, and after inconclusive debate concerning their entitlement he simply stationed himself nearby and prominently positioned a trash can for approaching employees.[4]

On February 1, 1982, the first of several relevant changes occurred with respect to staffing the TWX room on swing shift. One change involved Serha transferring to days for personal reasons, and being replaced by Gina Daugherty after the latter underwent 2 weeks training on the day shift. Events of early February 1982 caused Martin to commence keeping extensive notes of what she was experiencing at work. She ultimately transferred to the Tannery building, a move that involved switching with Carol Jordan who moved to swing shift at Lawson Lane. There was, however, about a 2-week overlap during which Martin and Jordan worked together at the Tannery on swing shift. Martin later transferred to a senior data entry operator position in a separate department around April 1982, and unrelatedly Dina Maracut was hired and assigned to the TWX room on swing shift as an additional operator.

Preceding and about the time of these changes there had also been turnover in personnel that provided immediate supervision to this operation. Around late 1981 Bartels had been replaced by Barrett, who was in turn succeeded by Lindsey. In early February 1982 Lindsey became head of the TWX room on days and was replaced by Fukuba, who had bid into the job from his prior position as a fabrication supervisor.[5]

Singh testified that on February 5 she had filled out her timecard in advance as expected by supervision for the Friday night shift, but thereafter became ill to the point that she left for home 2 hours ahead of normal quitting time. Singh recalled telling Marshall, the "lead operator" as most senior of those on swing shift, that she would make an appropriate correction of actual hours worked the following Monday. At start of the new week, however, Lindsey had spoken to her about the incident, saying first that there would be no trouble. She then participated in a meeting with Monfared, Dinan, and Dinan's superior, in which she was given a written warning for "leaving the work area 2 hours early on 2/5 without prior approval" and "falsifying the total time worked for 2/5." Lindsey elaborated on the pertinent "Corrective Action/Written Warning" form that the infraction actually constituted a "serious matter and was the second falsification of time during the same week," because it involved not only the early leaving and failure to correct time when given the opportunity but the same dereliction for a separate lateness of 45 minutes. Marshall was allowed to attend the meeting at which discipline was administered to Singh, after management personnel deliberated for a time over her entitlement to do so.

[3] During that same period the instant charge was filed, and by letter dated June 17, 1982, Eisenscher unsuccessfully requested that the settlement agreement be revoked.

[4] This episode was a basis for one aspect of the previously described bilateral settlemeht agreement. In correspondence during the pendency of the pertinent unfair labor practice charge, Kociol referred to occurrences on January 25, 1982, as "isolated" and representing an "atypical supervisory response." By memorandum dated February 8, 1982, a superior counseled Ogle on the subject of "Solicitation/Distribution/No-Access Rules" as set forth in Respondent's formal personnel policies and procedures. The memorandum noted that the two involved employees "appear to have been acting within their rights."

[5] All dates and named months hereafter are in 1982, unless shown otherwise.

Marshall essentially corroborated these happenings, including statements by her and Singh that a legal right existed for Marshall to serve as such a representative and failure to accord this would result in the filing of charges.

Martin's recollection of February 5 is that Singh had left early on a night when the workload was fairly heavy. Martin testified that Singh had left abruptly without logging out her work or performing any necessary copying. She had told Martin to say, if questioned, that Singh had left work ill at 10 p.m. The next day, a Saturday, Singh was due into work and Martin was scheduled to work at the Tannery building. Believing that trouble would occur because of the manner in which work had been left undone on February 5, Martin wrote out a statement before finishing her shift that Friday night. It read:

> Steve—
>
> From 5:30 to 2:00 a.m. on 2/5/82 there were a total of 179 messages to be sent during my shift. At the close of my shift, there were 33 messages left in the room to be typed. This equals 146 messages typed during 5:30–2:00 a.m.
>
> I typed a total of 73 of those msgs. leaving 73 for the other 2 persons on my shift. I don't think it's fair. I have run into similar circumstances recently & it seems to be forming a pattern, I don't feel I should have to do half the work of 3 people.
>
> Please check the figures like I tried to "hint" at before & the times. I can't continue on like this. I feel responsible for the work left in the room and I feel like I'm the only one who cares.
>
> I am "getting along" with the girls & I don't want to complain & upset the apple cart. But I think we need some "pushing." If they knew I'm complaining they'd really make it hard on me and I don't want to go through that again. But I honestly feel like I'm caught between a "rock and a hard place." I need help. I don't want to leave the company but I don't know how much more I can take. Call me at home when no one's around. We need to talk!
>
> Peggy

The following day, while at the Tannery, Lindsey telephoned her to angrily ask what had happened the previous eveining, and he then came over to speak personally with Martin. At that point she presented the handwritten statement to him and asserted, as Singh had requested she do, that Singh had left work early the night before at 10 p.m. On the following Monday Martin had a conversation with Singh, and learned to her surpise that Singh had told Lindsey she did not leave work on February 5 until 12 o'clock. This resulted in a realization between the two of them that Singh had been "caught in a lie."[6]

Martin continued her testimony by recalling that on February 9 she had a conversation with Marshall during which the latter accused Martin of insinuating to Lindsey that a missing key, with which manipulation of actual hours worked as shown on a timecard could be done, was something attributable to Marshall. Martin described Marshall's tone as "elevated" but not "really harassing," and that the gist of her remarks were that while Singh or Martin might have "snitched" on the subject Marshall tended to think it would be Martin because of general probabilities between the two of them and Martin's "gutless nature."[7] This experience was followed shortly by another in which Singh was thought to be complaining to Lindsey about Martin not doing her share of work and leaving early. This prompted Martin to write out a three-page statement at home, which she delivered personally to Lindsey on arriving for work on February 13. This document traced a Variety of incidents, remarks, and perceptions leading Martin to feel "pressured" in her work, and it included the following passage as well as a request that confidentiality be maintained:

> I feel that the reason for most of the pressure I have undergone and still have has derived since both girls have joined the union. Because I am not for the union at Signetics, then they automatically assume that I am against them and what they stand for. Therefore, I am continually suspect and continually questioned.

Lindsey was switched to day-shift supervisor of the TWX room and replaced by Fukuba on February 15. Martin's regular assignment at Lawson Lane had overlapped by only 1 day with Fukuba as new incoming supervisor for swing shift. She remained in TWX room operations through March, and although typically working at the physically separate Tannery facility she continued to report unpleasantries emanating from Singh or Marshall, particularly as to the latter's abruptness during telephone contact. Martin submitted a formal transfer request to Monfared in early March, citing constant discord with Singh and Marshall as her chief motivation for wanting a change. A transfer to data entry work soon materialized, and by April Martin was in the new department. On April 8 Fukuba entered an "Incident Report" respecting Marshall and his perception of her written notations to the TWX room log book as these might reflect on Lindsey. The recording stated, "Talked to Rachel.

[6] Martin testified how during January Singh claimed that Supervisor Bartels had accused Martin of "back stabbing" and "snitching," causing everyone else to be "against" her for being that kind of person. Martin denied this and promptly contacted Bartels at his home, receiving his assurance that no such things had ever been uttered about her by him. The next day Martin confronted Singh at an on-premises cafeteria frequented by employees, and told of Bartels' denials. From this Singh admitted that Martin had "caught [her] lying," and this concession was relayed to Serna so that she, at least as among TWX room operators of the shift, would know the truth.

[7] This experience was associated by Martin to earlier exchanges with Marshall. These followed the occasion of Martin having accompanied Marshall and perhaps other employees to a meeting in late January at a restaurant where representatives of the Union were in attendance. Martin remained noncommittal on the matter of supporting the Union's organizing attempt, and subsequent to this she recalled that Marshall later accused her of being promanagement simply because she was seen in private coversations with Barrett and later with Lindsey.

Told her not to make personal remarks in log book—that it could be construed as undermining the authority of a supervisor [Steve]."

On April 19 Marshall received written confirmation of a "30 day verbal warning period" based on "Insubordination." This was issued by Fukuba concerning an incident in which Lindsey had removed a posted cartoon from the TWX room. As originally prepared this "Corrective Action" read that it was based on "Comments made to S. Lindsey in the TWX room in front of other operators referring to him as childish and a liar." Fukuba reissued the document as a final version bearing the same date with the phraseology "in the TWX room in front of other operators" deleted.

In early May a bimonthly issue of "The Union Voice" was disseminated. It contained an article for which Singh and Marshall had supplied material, but which employee editor Patricia Sacco shortened considerably as a matter of publication logistics. One column, mockingly entitled "Supervisor's Spotlight," read in part as follows:

> John Dinan takes the cake for recruiting union members. His repeated harassment of Corporate Communications Center (TWX Room) workers has led Rachel Marshall and Esther Singh to put on U.E. buttons.
>
> But John did not give up; He tried twice to assign Rachel to an isolated work area as a first step to "getting rid of trouble-makers." Due to support she got from co-workers and other union members, both attempts failed. "WAY TO GO" Rachel & Esther and friends!

This condensation of what had involved a day's effort by Singh and Marshall in what they composed annoyed the former, and she voiced this disappointment to Marshall. In the several weeks that followed Singh cooled toward the Union. This was manifested by her discontinuing the display of a button on her person, by disinclination as voiced to Marshall toward participation in further authoring of material for the Union's publication, and by explanation to Marshall, when the latter inquired, that Singh wanted to concentrate on promoting her boyfriend's computer-related business enterprise. As to this Singh carried out at least on meeting with an official of Respondent, during which she commenced specific promotional efforts in terms of her boyfriend's business and associated invention. Singh was continuing on generally friendly terms with Marshall during this period, and on learning of such contacts the latter termed her "naive" to think that industry functionaries would not look askance at such overtures by readily associating her with the subject of unionization.

III. PRELIMINARY EVENTS IN JUNE

By early June Singh had refined her thinking with respect to how she might best contribute to the boyfriend's entrepreneurial goals. She decided to seek self-improvement by transferring to Respondent's computer operations function, and broached this prospect with Dinan. At this point in time Singh assessed her relationship with Monfared as poor, based on a perception that they could not communicate well after the sequence of incidents in which Singh was clearly aligned with Marshall in matters that arose at work. Dinan however directed her to "proper channels," and in consequence of this Singh requested a meeting with Monfared.[8]

Such a meeting occurred at the Industrial Relations office with only Singh and Monfared present. Singh announced her desire for self-improvement transfer, adding that she was no longer associated with the Union. Singh's version of how the meeting continued is that Monfared seemed startled about the gratuitous revelation, and asked why such disassociation happened. Singh testified that she termed the Union "lowlife," but continued to highlight her basic objective of contributing to the boyfriend's business enterprise. Singh recalled Monfared then asking if Marshall was harassing her about the Union, to which Singh replied this was not the case at the time. Following this Monfared assertedly said that the transfer would not be a problem, if justified by a written statement showing a "special reason" that was "work-related" and not merely "personal" as had affected Martin.[9]

Monfared's version of the meeting agrees that Singh had begun with the statement that she wanted management to know she was no longer interested in the Union. Monfared testified to telling Singh that her chances for a transfer were not promising because of a dearth of current or anticipated openings, and that a response of Singh was that she wanted the transfer because Marshall was harassing her. From this Monfared advised that any complaints about Marshall should be put in writing, to which Singh assertedly said that she could take care of such problems herself.

The meeting with Monfared caused Singh to be slightly late in starting her shift on the afternoon of June 7. She recalled having spoken to Fukuba before he left work that day, asking whether she could do crocheting if it turned out that work was slow on the shift. He assented.[10] During early phases of the shift she performed

---

[8] Monfared recalled that in February Singh had attended a "job fair" designed to accommodate CIS staffing needs, and at that time expressed an interest in transferring. Monfared's further recollection was that she had explained to Singh at the time how Respondent's internal "job opportunity system" worked, with reference to bidding procedure and attention to stated job opening qualifications. Monfared concluded her testimony on this point by adding that Singh seemed at the time only eligible for a change to data entry work, and after interviewing for this function Singh then lost interest. Singh contradicted this testimony by recalling that she once dropped in to an "open house" being held on what was for her a Saturday workday, but as to which she had no then current desire in transferring out of the TWX room. Singh asserted that Monfared solicited her to consider a transfer as had (or was) occurring with Martin, premising this, to Singh's recollection, as an escape from "any sort of harassment." Singh did confirm that she interviewed, but soon told Monfared that aside from the marketing function she was not really interested. The matter then went dormant except as a "seed planted" in Singh's mind.

[9] Singh testified that the context of these remarks was her general awareness of Respondent's "bid board" system Monfared had previously acquainted her with, and that a "freeze" on job transfers was in effect at the time.

[10] Fukuba testified that on several occasions prior to June 7 he had explained job transfer procedures to Singh in "general conversation." In the period around June 7 Fukuba was temporarily working a split shift of noon–8 p.m. because of Lindsey being on vacation from his day-shift supervisory position.

logging, copy work, and distribution, then avoided further assisting as work "piled up" and instead sat crocheting. Marshall spoke to Singh asking why she seemed so gripped by indolence.[11] Singh testified that she responded by accusing Marshall of "picking on" her because of no longer being associated with the Union. Singh escalated her remarks to Marshall by shouting that unions were "lowlife," and it was simply "tough shit" that Marshall was "pissed" about this new attitude.

The next day Singh reported to Monfared that Marshall had fought with her the previous night and, from this, a meeting ensued between them in the cafeteria with Fukuba joining in. Singh testified that Monfared verbally envisioned Marshall being fired, but alluded to Martin's earlier situation in which there were not enough witnesses. Monfared continued by emphasizing that any transfer of Singh or termination of Marshall would necessitate a written statement and could not be founded on a personal matter.

Marshall's version of the episode is that she was herself working the "Hong Kong" machine at the time, which had both receiving and sending capacity. Incoming messages were piling up and not undergoing distribution as she understood Singh was to do. Marshall testified that in this context she asked Singh what the procedure was "regarding her assignment that week," and was loudly told in response that Singh was "sick and tired of you expecting everybody in here to kiss your ass." This upset Marshall and her riposte was to ask Singh rhetorically why she didn't "kiss management's ass." Singh accused Marshall of not liking people who were not in the Union, and Marshall testified that while she made some reply to this it did not involve further swearing.

This exchange stimulated both Marshall and Singh to contact Eisenscher by telephone. Marshall did so on June 7, reporting the seeming strangeness of Singh's behavior, and hearing Eisenscher advise that she should exercise caution while at work. Singh's call occurred on June 8, one in which she was ostensibly demanding that Eisenscher get Marshall "off her [back]" in relation to further support of the Union.

Monfared's version of her involvement on June 8 was that Singh had requested a meeting with her but it could not be arranged until late afternoon. She went to the TWX room at that time and a meeting at the cafeteria evolved between her and Singh with Fukuba also present. Monfared testified to Singh telling of pressured discord with Marshall the night before over "writing an article for the newspaper." Monfared added that Singh had "divulged" many vulgar details of what had been said to her, and vowed that Marshall would not intimidate her as had happened with Martin. Singh also told of telephoning Eisenscher to complain about Marshall, but that he felt an exaggeration was present and was disinclined to help. In closing Monfared prompted Singh to write out a statement as a basis for her to be assisted. She did so, signing and dating it before returning to work as then instructed. This handwritten statement by Singh expressed the wish that Respondent would "get Rachel Marshall off my back" and listed "fucken cunt-snitch/no respect for anyone who betrays the Union/I will be a child if I please to become one/I don't need you nor your support in the Union," as among remarks Marshall had directed to Singh on June 7. Fukuba testified in only limited fashion with respect to this cafeteria meeting of June 8, generally corroborating Monfared.

Monfared and Fukuba then drafted out a written warning to Marshall dated June 8. The "plant rule violation" was stated as "harassing co-workers and others; and interfering with production by making the work environment [sic] tense." Previous warnings of note were listed as "comments to Steve Lindsey (4–16), notes in log book (4–8)." The specific infractions or incidents on which the written warning was based were couched as "personal remarks to and about Peggy Martin, abusive statements about Steve Lindsey, personal remarks made to Esther Singh [including] name calling and innuendos." Immediate improvement was demanded insofar as Marshall being expected to "cease from making such remarks and creating a tense non-productive working environment (sic)." Fukuba signed and presented this to Marshall on June 8, however, she refused to acknowledge it with her own signature. In regard to the immediate moments of delivery, Fukuba testified that he got "input" from Daugherty about what had happened during the incident this written warning addressed, while Marshall testified that her response to being handed it was to voice a blanket request to TWX room employees for somebody to "tell Brian what exactly happened." Marshall recalled that Daugherty volunteered how Marshall had only asked a work-related question the night before, to which Fukuba dismissed her from the conversation. Daugherty's own version was memorialized with notes taken from her by Monfared, in which Marshall was remembered as only making a polite inquiry to Singh about the handling of incoming messages.

During the evening lunch break on June 8 Marshall went to her sister's house nearby, and told her of having an upsetting experience of receiving the written warning. Later that evening the sister telephoned into the TWX room. Marshall soon received word of the call, and on returning it was told by her sister that there had been vulgar words exchanged between the sister and Singh. Fukuba testified that on the evening of June 8 he was prompted to telephone Marshall's sister, who complained to him that she had been repeatedly calling into the TWX room and was being hung up on until after several such calls a person answered, cursed at her, and hung up again. Singh testified that she had seen Marshall make a telephone call from Fukuba's office during the shift on June 8, and that shortly thereafter a callback came for Marshall. Singh answered this. It turned out to be Marshall's sister, and on identifying herself, the sister asked if she was "the whore who's trying to get my sister fired." The two then exchanged peevish remarks and their conversation ended as another factor causing tenseness on the shift that night.

All witnesses agree that tension existed in the TWX room during the balance of that week as bickering continued between Singh and Marshall. Among the occurrences were Singh trashing a supposedly radical tabloid regularly read by Marshall, ominous talk about the possession of knives or purchase of attack dogs, cross-accusations about car-scratching, general verbal sniping about the giving of a lobotomy or particular family slurring, and Singh taunting Marshall with the statement that Singh could get Marshall fired. On June 9 Fukuba, who was working a shift that extended to 11 p.m., spoke pointedly to both Marshall and Singh, telling them that the fighting between them had created an intolerable work atmosphere and must stop. He warned that if either did anything "antagonistic" toward the other he would react strongly and could impose termination. He specified that such cautionary words covered name calling, innuendos, or demeaning reference made to others. Fukuba summarized this verbal warning in an incident report record he had kept on TWX room employees since arriving there. These same incident report pages contain the basis of a second written warning given Marshall on June 10. As to this, formally a "Corrective Action/Probation," Fukuba testified that he had heard Singh reminiscing about feeling apprehensive when first hired and finding former TWX room employee Mary Marra "on her case" (equating this to a then current situation of day-shift operator Karla Fessenden bothering Daugherty). On this Marshall had "interjected" aloud that Singh was "scared shitless." The second entry, reflecting what Fukuba had heard, was that noting a remark by Marshall to Daugherty "about how insecure people jump from organization to organization."

[11] It is concededly customary that a senior operator, as Marshall typically represented on this occasion, would take a lead role in seeing that work proceeded appropriately throughout a particular shift.

Singh testified that she had maintained daily contact with Monfared during this first full week of June. Ostensibly these contacts were to report continuing harassment by Marshall, and to press the increasingly persistent inquiry as to whether or not her transfer request could be accommodated. Much of what Singh reported was meticulously recorded by Monfared, and Fukuba's incident report documentation covered several pages of remarks or episodes that involved Marshall and arose during the same time period. On the composite basis of these recitations, Monfared and Fukuba composed a probation notice for Marshall dated June 10 which he presented to her that night. Its context largely paralleled the written warning 2 days earlier, except for reference to a prior warning on June 9 (and omission of reference to one on April 8), plus that it expressly established a 60-day probationary period, during which, by its printed terms, any infraction "could result in further disciplinary action, which could [include] termination."

Fukuba left Monfared a note that the creation of probationary status had yielded a "peaceful night," although Singh continued to claim that when he left the room Marshall made snide remarks. He also noted that relatedly Marshall complained to him of Singh's threat to have her fired, and he felt that the many conflicting views paralyzed any ability to act on the matter. For her part Marshall had protested the probation to Fukuba when it was presented, arguing that her "interject[ed]" remark of the night before had been made to Jordan and so should not be deemed an innuendo toward Singh.[12] The point was discussed between them with Marshall being left unclear as to what she might permissibly say while at work.

On June 11 Marshall sought out Monfared and met with her about the imposition of probationary status. Marshall complained that the warnings were unfair and asked inconclusively about an appeal process within the organization. She also alluded to the then posted notice to employees for settled Case 32–CA–4238, recalling that this caused Monfared to opine that the National Labor Relations Board was chartered to help unions organize. Monfared made notes during this meeting, and caused them to be transcribed from which a typed "documentation" was later produced. As further refined in detail by Monfared its complete text read (grammatical and spelling errors disregarded):

> Rachel came up at 5:30 p.m. to appeal her probation base on the objection that all the information was given to us from Esther Singh who was doing it because she was receiving favors from the company. Rachel stated that John Dinah had said to Esther that she would be able to bid out of the TWX area which was a favor and I indicated to her that bidding out of the TWX area was normal procedures for anyone who had been in there more than six months, which certainly Esther had been and that I had several sheets of paper from various individuals stating they wanted to get out of the area and that I keep track of that as a normal basis and call them when I find positions that are open. Rachel said that she felt she was being harassed based on one person's statement. Namely Esther's statement and that was totally unfair.* She wanted to also say that Esther had made innuendos and threatening remarks such as Esther being on the phone and describing breaking peoples arms and other things like that. She had also stated previously how she could not get Rachel fired. My response was that I had yet to have heard that, and that I would certainly look into that. At this point, however, we didn't know who to believe. We tended to respond to things we could reasonably believe were true. She said we were believing everything Esther said. I said "that wasn't true." We had asked Brian to monitor the room and we were going on things he had witnessed, which she proceeded to write down in her book. I also remarked that we at this point needed a witness because they both were telling us so many stories that we didn't know who to believe and that we were going to act upon things overheard by Brian, their supervisor. I indicated to her that Brian was to spend all the time he could in the TWX area to monitor the room. Rachel replied we are believing one person and not the other and we are discriminating against her. I told her that wasn't the case. We again could not believe either one of them because they were retaliating and fighting between themselves we didn't know what to believe, they had us in a tizzy. Rachel then said she would object formally through the union to all these things and if we wanted to go ahead and post another order by the National Labor Relations Board that we could go ahead and do this. She said that the National Labor Relations Board had found us guilty of previous acts like this and we were again in violation. I told her that they didn't find us guilty that indeed whenever there was an issue between a company and an employee they tended to take the employees' side. She disagreed with me and said the National Labor Relations Board was not pro-union it was pro-management. I told her that I felt the National Labor Relations Board was there to protect the union, the organizer and was not there for management. I asked her to tell me in which way she felt it was pro-management? She asked me if I had ever read the National Labor Relations Act, instead of replying to my question. I replied, I had read it. I looked at my watch and then said to her "unless she had other issues she wanted to bring up I didn't have time to discuss the philosophy of the National Labor Relations Board with her." She said "oh-oh-okay, you're out of time." Then she left.

[12] Marshall testified that the actual episode had involved Singh boasting to Jordan about how Marra had not really intimidated her and that, in late 1981 when the circumstances existed, Singh had effectively deflated Marra. Marshall conceded that she seized the moment to remark aloud, intending Singh to hear and think about the mimicry, "Gee Carol, Mary Marra sure must have been terrified or scared shitless."

* Rachel said "I don't expect you to be fair, never have."

 I called Brian and asked him if he had heard anything at all that could have sounded like "breaking arms etc." Brian's remarks are in the log. "Said Esther did make phone calls last night but he didn't hear anything like that, if he had heard anything Esther would be on a warning also." I reinforced we must handle them both fairly and consistently.

IV. THE "COOLEY" INCIDENT

Marshall was suspended and later discharged on the basis of happenings during an afternoon shift in the TWX room on June 14. Previously, beginning on June 9, Marshall had spoken repeatedly to Fukuba about possibly transferring out of the TWX room saying that she did not want to stay because of Singh's behavior. He had disclaimed the authority to grant this, explaining instead that he would check things with Monfared. Her request became formalized to the point that beginning June 14 she was expecting a meeting with Fukuba in order to be updated on its status. When he was free to meet with her in his office he so informed Marshall, and the two of them poised to start in that direction. At that moment a telephone call came into the TWX room, and was answered by Maracut. For reasons that will become apparent later in this Decision, I shall first set forth Marshall's version of how this call originated and what transpired from the point Maracut took it.

Marshall testified that by June 14 she and Singh were not on speaking terms. Singh's assignment on the shift that night was to work the Hong Kong machine. A company functionary named Cooley originated a message for transmission,[13] and this had been indiscriminately routed to Marshall's incoming message box by Maracut. Marshall recognized the message as one that would necessarily be transmitted on Singh's machine, and that an appropriate TWX identification number for its Tarrytown, New York destination was missing. Marshall spent a few minutes with source books, but was unable to establish what the missing number might be. She therefore telephoned Cooley's office to leave a message that she was calling from the TWX room to say his message could not be transmitted that night unless the missing information was supplied. This routing background to the incoming callback taken by Maracut and passed to Marshall, who spoke with Cooley only briefly enough to advise that another person would handle the matter. This remark associated to her then current understanding that the Cooley message was fundamentally one for the Hong Kong machine and, since this was Singh's bailiwick, Marshall got Singh's attention and handed the phone over to her saying, "Esther, it's for you." Marshall then observed Singh react immediately to the call by expressing an unawareness of what it concerned, at which point Marshall stated to the nearby Fukuba that "It should be obvious, Brian." Fukuba and Marshall, with the former leading, then resumed their movement toward his office as that had been interrupted only moments before by the incoming call. When they were ensconced inside his partitioned and physically separate office, she clarified for him what the message was about. Marshall testified that she continued by expressing a concern for possible repercussions, because Singh had seemed upset about having been given the call. Fukuba voiced a bland reassurance to Marshall, adding glibly that Singh was just being "wacko."

Discussion of Marshall's prospects for transferring out the ensued, following which she returned to her work station located just in front of Singh's and typed away on messages for approximately 15 minutes. Fukuba reappeared in the TWX room and stood near Singh as she worked. Marshall testified that Singh remarked to Fukaba that Cooley was really upset about his "important" message, and she did not understand what the situation was all about. Singh continued by referring to Marshall with the assertion that "Her actions are interfering with the work process./Can't you get her fired?" With this Marshall entered the conversation by contending to Fukaba that Singh's words were innuendos and accusations, adding her own interrogative about whether Singh would be allowed to say such things. Fukuba attempted pacification while Marshall pressed the distinction that she had assiduously confined her responsive remarks to Fukuba himself. Fukuba asked again for a cooling off and Marshall sat down to resume work. Marshall testified that Fukuba then turned to leave the TWX room, and as he did Singh launched a tirade of insults against Marshall saying, "Fuck you and fuck the Union./You fucking Union bitch." Singh continued screaming and followed Fukuba into his office where for the next 5–10 minutes Marshall could still detect her being loud and upset. Ultimately about an hour passed before Singh returned to the TWX room; however, Fukuba also came in and announced they were both being suspended for fighting.

[13] Respondent's brief further identifies the individual as "Jerry Cooley from Purchasing" (p. 29).

Singh's description of the incident was that after the Cooley call was passed from Maracut to Marshall and on to her, she instantly recognized his voice and attempted to return the phone to Marshall as she and Fukuba proceeded toward his office. Failing this she hung up on Cooley and spoke through the sliding window to Fukuba's office, urging that he clear up the matter with Marshall because Singh did not know what to do about it. When they returned a quarter hour later, Marshall to resume typing and Fukuba to stand near Singh, she reminded him about the unresolved Cooley call. Singh asserted that Fukuba perfunctorily asked Marshall about it, who said all that had to be done was to look through the messages at Singh's terminal. Fukuba pulled the message and while looking at it asked Marshall what was wrong. Marshall persisted in saying that the deficiency was there to see, and this triggered Singh into feigned anger. She loudly labeled the moment a "work-related matter" and began screaming at Marshall. Singh recalled saying that Marshall was a child who would have her "fucking ass kicked," and that if Marshall should get a knife about what Singh had to put with in the office then Singh would get a gun. Her agitation and screaming increased as Marshall remained oddly tranquil, and momentarily Fukuba guided her out the door.

Fukuba's testimony tracked the essential unfolding of this episode, adding that when Singh first signaled that Cooley's was a problem call he searched her message stack and took it out. Fukuba recalled starting to explain what the situation was about, and sensing that Singh seemed to feel she was being made a tool of by Marshall. Within moments Singh became upset and initiated name calling of Marshall, saying too that the incident was "work-related" and Marshall should not "be interfering in the work process." Fukuba termed Singh as "pretty hysterical" at this point, and recalled her calling Marshall "a Union bitch." The response noted by Fukuba was that Marshall nonverbally sneered, smiled, or smirked at Singh for a few seconds,[14] and then remarked that innuendos were really emanating from Singh. Ultimately Singh's increasingly "hysterical" conduct impelled him to escort her out of the room. While then in his adjoining office with Singh, Marshall appeared at the sliding window to say that Singh's messages were getting late and inquired if Marshall should send them. Singh flared again at this remark and she told Marshall not to touch her work. Soon following this Singh calmed again, and returned to the TWX room saying to Fukuba that she needed to "protect" her messages.

It still being late afternoon, Singh hurriedly fulfilled a previously requested appointment with Monfared, during which she explained some details of the just-experienced Cooley incident and said she had lost her temper. Fukuba then appeared at Monfared's office and, after excusing Singh, the two of them decided to suspend both employees pending an investigation. This was carried out by Fukuba, who prepared a summarizing note which read:

> Pulled both Rachel & Esther out and told them they were both on a 3 day suspension. Rachel asked if this was the coup de grace, and I didn't reply. Esther said that she could use the vacation." Then Rachel asked why she was being suspended, and I said because of the incident in the room. She said what incident and I said the phone call, and the blow-up. Then Rachel interrupted and said "you mean Esther's blow-up." I replied, "The whole thing." I confiscated their badges, and then presented them to security to be escorted out.

V. AFTERMATH

Monfared spearheaded Respondent's inquiry into what had happened and what should be done. After copiously recorded preliminary groundwork interviews, she convened a meeting on June 17 with Dinan, Corporation Employee Relations Manager Judith Ann Williams, and Corporate Compensation Manager Gil VanValkenberg present, as well as Kociol participating by long-distance telephone. Monfared testified that she presented all relevant versions of the Cooley incident, and fielded questions about the significance of Marshall's concededly strong showing during her several years as an operator. Monfared described deliberations in which Marshall was associated with past harassment of Serna on "union issues in the TWX area," as well as the countervailing thought that Respondent would surely be faced with a claim of unlawful discrimination should it terminate Marshall. Ultimately Monfared obtained a consensus that discharge was the appropriate course as to Marshall, while Singh's less extensive disciplinary record of merely one recent verbal warning warranted only a confirmation of 3 days' suspension without pay.

Fukuba notified Marshall of this action by telephone, stating the reason to be "violation of probation." A few days later she went into the facility to retrieve personal belongings and obtain her last check. She also conversed unconsequentially with Williams while there. Singh was presented a corrective action/written warning dated June 17 which referred to her last "confrontation" with Marshall as a rule violation that made the "work enviornment [sic] tense" as well as involving the infractions of "abusive statements and innuendos against other operators." Singh received this at Monfared's office with Fukuba also present, and testified that when she protested being disciplined Monfared said the action was only "to make the company look good in court" as a technique to "cover our tracks" for firing Marshall.

Singh returned to Monfared's office about a week later to again press her transfer request and say that TWX room work was becoming unbearable. This arose in part because other operators seemed resentful over the unfairness of Marshall having been hired. Singh testified how on that or a related occasion Monfared had asked whether she was then truly disassociated from the Union by having resigned. She recalled Monfared expressing distrust of her, and advising that she resign by letter and keep a copy. This episode later influenced Singh to tell Serna how to similarily resign from the Union, and to claim that she could retaliate through her power to get other employees fired if Serna (or Fessenden with whom Singh was on the outs) did not comply. Singh continued in checkered employment with Respondent until about July 29. During July she was suspended for harassing Daugherty and ultimately Singh telephoned her resignation to Fukuba.

[14] Jordan was called as a witness by Respondent, and she testified that the "flare-up" of June 14 involved Singh screaming about how it was "job-related" which spurred Marshall to assume "a slight grin on her face."

VI. THE GENERAL COUNSEL'S FURTHER EVIDENCE AS EDUCED IN SUPPORT OF THE COMPLAINT

Marshall testified that around late September 1981 she spoke with Dinan about his seeming change in attitude toward her. He was attributed as then saying that he disliked her having sided with Singh about the pay differential matter, saying that she should refrain from "being someone's witness" in the future.

Singh testified uncontradictedly, but with prompting, that about November 25, 1981, Barrett had labeled Marshall a "troublemaker" in the course of saying that she could be constructively discharged by creative supervisory tactics.

Patricia Ann Wheeler, a wafer fab operator, testified that she had become active for the Union during 1981, and in January had also distributed "The Union Voice," accompanied by Joseph Sacco, in front of the lobby of the OM building where she worked. Her supervisor, Larry Phillips, was ridiculed in an article of this particular issue. When conducting her formal job review on January 27, Phillips alluded to the "slander[ous]" nature of the article, adding that she should see him about problems and not think that the Union could do more for her. Wheeler testified that Pillips continued with a reference to her $6-per-hour wage rate and, in connection with the review process resulting in a 4-percent pay increase, added that she should think about having to pay dues should the Union get in.

Serna testified that in January she had affirmatively responded to a supervisory inquiry about persons interested in transfer to solo work at the Tannery, but was told that Martin was similarly interested. In the course of this experience as a proposed volunteering transferee, Serna was further told by Bartels that Marshall would be the person moved. Marshall had, to Serna's best knowledge at the time, made it known that she was not interested in work at the Tannery. This sentiment became clearly known to Respondent in connection with events that commenced on February 19. On that date Fukuba called Marshall to his office to say that she was being mandatorily transferred to a new afternoon shift at the Tannery. The transfer was to be effective February 22, and she would have worked alone as a communications employee stationed there after all corporate employees finished their day shift. Marshall testified that she expressed dismay over this, saying that she was a high seniority person who had not sought such a change. Fukuba did not relent, but Eisenscher interposed himself to Monfared via Kociol, and the plan to transfer Marshall was dropped in lieu of sending Martin instead. Monfared testified that this adjustment was a managerial recognition of the "volatile" situation in the TWX room, one from which Martin in any event wished to escape.

This was also the approximate point in time at which the timecard falsification involving Singh occurred. Lindsey prepared a corrective action written warning to her about this dated February 11 and, in that connection, Marshall attempted to witness for her at a meeting called in Dinan's office. On arrival there, Dinan attempted to disassociate Marshall from the matter; however, after checking with Monfared, this was not pressed and Marshall was present when Singh's discipline was administered. Marshall testified that in the process Singh became upset to the point of using loud and obsence language.

The General Counsel also contends that a periodic written employee performance review of Marshall done by Fukuba on April 15 was "unlawfully . . . substandard." I find insufficient materiality in this regard to warrant setting forth any particulars, noting, too, the numerous variables that would impinge on such a review by a new supervisor and given the business climate at that time.

The principal evidence of this case, taking on, by its very nature, more that of a pervasive theme than mere testimony, is the composite of Singh's offerings. She had executed three prehearing affidavits, one in February, one on July 7, and one on October 19. The first affidavit is inconsequential, however the second one dealt largely with events of early to mid-June when Marshall was being progressively disciplined for assertedly disruptive conduct in the workplace. Singh repudiated all salient aspects of her July 7 affidavit which would relate to the issue of Marshall's discharge, and correspondingly affirmed the contents of what she later advanced on October 19. This final affidavit was a total about-face, and depicted Singh as having deliberately orchestrated, with Monfared's conniving knowledge and assent, a series of confrontations with Marshall that were designed to show the insufferableness of working in proximity to Marshall. Singh expressly told of how her bona fide interest in a departmental transfer was cleverly deflected by Monfared into a vehicle for spawning the notion that Marshall was exasperatingly antagonistic, disruptive, and uncooperative in work-related matters. Singh explained that from an opening suggestiveness to full-blown confirmation, Monfared induced and encouraged her to vex Marshall, while at the same time acting victimized by the process. Singh claimed a careful schooling by Monfared in how the duplicity must not, as in the case of Martin earlier that year, be personal in nature or insufficient of proof, but must, instead, meet the narrower test of work-relatedness and preferably involve a stream of documentation. On the deeper motivational level Singh spelled out the twin dynamics of how she frantically provoked Marshall (Tr. 338, 598–599), and that Monfared was at all times fully implicated (Tr. 341, 464, 466–468, 526–529, 633).

This then, according to Singh's testimony, was the unvarnished basis of how, why, and when during June's first half the TWX room was bedeviled with vulgar discord ranging from crocheting's effect on productivity to the normal, prudent handling of an intracompany business call made by Cooley late on a Monday afternoon. Singh fully admitted to these unworthy motivations and staunchly depicted Monfared as a cool participant in the conspiracy, one who constantly spurred her on with the undertaking and, in the process, showed total awareness of its audacious artificiality plus chortling amusement at Marshall's presumed bewilderment.

VII. RESPONDENT'S FURTHER EVIDENCE AS EDUCED IN OPPOSITION TO THE COMPLAINT

Here the countervailing theme of defense is that Monfared was suddenly faced with the perplexing problem of how to assist Fukuba in maintaining order and decorum as two prominent staffers were suddenly at such odds after a history of overt sisterhood. In the process Monfared accumulated a mass of documentation that tracked or confirmed much of what was advanced by Respondent's witnesses.

Fukuba testified that he had personally heard Marshall's name-calling of Lindsey in mid-April, and that both in the supervisor's office and the TWX room itself, with operators present, she had termed him a "liar and childish." Fukuba explained that the reason Marshall's reprimand on April 19 required modification was because Lindsey could recall only the name-calling in his office where rank-and-file employees would not have heard what was said. In regard to happenings beyond this, and particularly the eventful period of early June, Fukuba verified that he had counseled Marshall in late May concerning attendance, and was then soon immersed in the Singh-Marshall "rift" as first pointed out to him by Daugherty about June 7. Fukuba monitored their respective behavior closely from that point, making detailed notes of interpersonal badgering, obscenities hurled, and miscellaneous pugnaciousness. In the process he communicated closely with Monfared, testifying that they were each looking for an effective way to root out the cause of the discord and eliminate it from the workplace. Fukuba testified that his inability to be present in the TWX room each moment of the shift seemed to be a factor that permitted the situation to fester.

Williams was the authenticator of personnel records showing 13 instances during 1981–1982 in which employees were disciplined as a result of disputes with other employees. She recounted the important "decision-making meeting" of June 17, and how her own recommendations became that of terminating Marshall after taking into account all background and the "immediate" situation of what had been occurring in 1982. Williams was also best situated to describe the "shift wars" that had once wracked the TWX room. This "continuum" was associated to early 1981 onward, when Marshall was perceived as feuding with shift counterpart Suzi Parlette, and these two being "primarily" responsible for an undercurrent of conflict. Williams testified that she was mindful of this facet of Marshall's overall employment profile while participating in the June 17 meeting.

Monfared was presented as Respondent's "key witness" with her extensive documentation constituting the "heart of [its] case" insofar as reflecting employer reliance on the diverse information coming to its officials' attention. Monfared's elaborating testimony was in essential accord with her documentation about Singh's originating visit on June 7, a recording that reads, in part, as follows:

> Esther . . . said there was a lot of pressure, especially from Rachel, to remain active in the Union. It took her quite a while to gradually withdraw from the Union. Esther at first told Rachel that she forgot her button, then later that she wasn't going to wear it. Finally she was able to stand up to Rachel and tell her she wasn't going to be in the Union. Esther said, with all the other activity in her life, she didn't need the extra pressure from Rachel to be a part of the Union. Esther said Rachel could do a lot to hurt an employee's performance. Rachel has been in the TWX area 3 years and could erase a person's disk or affect their performance so they got in trouble.
>
> I asked Esther if she'd be willing to sign a statement that Rachel was pressuring her and her peers in the TWX area. She said she wouldn't do that, she was afraid of what would happen to herself or the others in the area. She explained that an effort to stop Rachel might adversely affect the group and they might be pressured to unionize. I told Esther, the company was very concerned about the mental anguish people like Peggy Martin went through in these situations and that I wanted to be able to stop Rachel.

Monfared told of applying discipline to Marshall during June, and departing from the strict form of Respondent's written corrective action policy because of the delicacies involved in so dealing with one of Respondent's "strongest" operators. She recalled that by June 9 Fukuba was advocating termination of Marshall, while Singh visited her office several times that week to report Marshall having made aggravating comments without Fukuba around. Monfared termed the week as one in which Fukuba was extremely tense and TWX room operators generally upset. Also, responding to persistent reports of Marshall possessing a dangerous knife, Monfared authorized Respondent's security department to confront Marshall about such a weapon but nothing of consequence materialized. Monfared testified that by the end of that difficult week she reflected on things with Fukuba, and they took satisfaction in feeling that by then Marshall should have a "clear understanding" of the resolve to put a stop to the "sort of behavior" being exhibited.

Monfared expressly denied that she was "working together" with Singh to frame Marshall, or that in any remote way an agreement of that type existed. Further, she denied having conversed with Singh about how a person might go about resigning from the Union.

VIII. THE GENERAL COUNSEL'S CONTENTIONS (AS GENERALLY ADOPTED BY THE CHARGING PARTY) AND FURTHER COLLATERAL EVIDENCE

The General Counsel contends that a prima facie case has been presented to the effect that disciplinary actions against Marshall in June leading soon to her termination were unlawfully motivated. This argument was premised on the "basic contention" that is embodied in Singh's testimony, plus an array of points to the effect that Respondent's actions are illogical, arbitrary, inconsistent, and generally so unexplained that in the aggregate an inference of actionable discrimination is warranted. The General Counsel claims that secret motivation was rife in how Respondent evaluated Marshall's overall employment history, in its belated concern for Martin's serenity, in carping criticisms of Marshall's minor foibles, in generating a spurious sheaf of reprimands during the June gyrations, and finally by a perverse analysis of who was at fault, how so, and why during the Cooley incident. In an overall regard the General Counsel contends that Marshall has been nothing but a dedicated, superior employee at all times, that the entire phase of the trial involving Martin's experiences favored its case at best and was irrelevant at worst, and that Respondent has utterly failed to rebut a showing that Marshall was discharged for totally pretextual reasons.

IX. RESPONDENT'S CONTENTIONS AND FURTHER COLLATERAL EVIDENCE

Respondent contends that the General Counsel has failed to meet its burden of proving that Marshall's protected activity was a motivating factor in employer decisions affecting her. Alternatively, it is contended that in either event any prima facie showing of discrimination has been "neutralized" by sufficient evidence to establish that her failure to correct "disruptive ways" would have resulted in the discharge at issue. Respondent impugns Singh's general credibility, other than the extent to which Singh attributed vulgar name-calling to Marshall as on June 7 during the crocheting incident. Respondent also claims that Marshall's testimony is discreditable, and that she has sought to dodge a conclusion that her seriously disruptive behavior, coupled with menacing characteristics of thought, deed, and capacity, was a sufficient basis for termination after fair warnings were to no avail.

X. CREDIBILITY

In the course of her testimony, but particularly during cross-examination spanning 2-1/2 days of trial, Singh was successively and variously contrite, argumentative, earthy, impertinent, whimsical, or defiant. More importantly, however, she was assiduously consistent in explaining, conceding, and confessing that she shamelessly pounced on Monfared's adroitly oblique invitation to insidiously incriminate Marshall as a prelude to her extirpative removal from employment.

Singh has shown herself often to succumb when situations present in which the advancement of self-interest is done at the expense of truth. She is admittedly devious, manipulative, streetwise, caustic, and, above all, driven by consumingly selfish motives. I recognize that, as with most individuals, she has personal and daily problems with which to cope, and she liberally told of these in the witnessing process insofar as they entailed child care by a single parent and an arthritic condition in a relatively young person. I am thus influenced by a totality of how this witness presented herself, and have attempted to compile telling factors of demeanor as observed in the course of her extensive testimony. I note, too, that on at least four occasions she sought excusal from the rigors of cross-examination and, in the process, made mildly ingratiating remarks from her position in the witness seat a scant few feet away from me. I have extensively reflected on this intriguing credibility resolution and, in the course of the effort, have carefully considered classic demeanor factors such as hesitation, seeming discomfort, body language, tonal change, and visible emotionalism. The undertaking is complicated further by her candid admission of having totally fabricated practically the entire investigatory affidavit of July 7, and the fact that she is a dramatizer of some skill by training, experience, and, I suspect, naturally ingrained talent. After undergoing this process, I am satisfied that, fanciful as many of her embellishments might have been, and even on noting the several instances in which she was pointedly contradicted by Marshall, Singh has nevertheless now truly revealed her role in a deliberately conspiratorial, diabolically tacit, and patently unlawful scheme to rid Respondent of a key union activist. I am satisfied that the strategem arose as a fortuitous opportunity for an industrial relations functionary to self-delusionally forge a coup. I find that the original seeds of what would unfold were planted when Singh made her initial early June visit to Monfared seeking a job transfer for strictly personal reasons. There was a fast-dawning realization of potential which imbued the situation as to both participants and that, scorpionlike in the same bottle, they stumbled onward with the amateurish farce. It is this much of Singh's testimony that I emphatically credit, for while she may be a legend of prevarication in her time, Respondent's contradicting witnesses are woefully unpersuasive, and the overall fact situation leaves its defense more than improbably suspect; indeed, instead, pitifully unworthy of belief. In summary, Singh persuasively established that she has eschewed all past disingenuousness, and for purposes of this case finally made a clean breast of things.

The counterpart of this credibility assessment is my rejection of Monfared's testimony, finding that in every crucial sense it scaled from the dubious to the absurd. Beyond a fundamentally preposterous rendition of how Respondent honestly deemed Marshall to be suddenly a source of disruption, how the Cooley incident could tar Marshall, and how her overall employment history, but with particular reference to Martin's troubles, could have made her vulnerable to discharge, Monfared's delivery was shifting, inconsistent, evasive, vague, and advanced with such demeanor characteristics as cause me to fully discredit what she depicts. As with Singh, the extensive amount of time spent on the witness stand by Monfared provided ample opportunity to ponder her veracity and, having done so, I am unreservedly convinced that her important testimony is false.

Fukuba is discredited insofar as any conflict with Marshall is concerned; however, generally, his testimony amounts to little more than continuity as a docile participant in bizarrely swirling events either beyond his capacity to control or, equally significant, based on secret tactics to which he was not fully privy. Williams, a functionary of rich labor relations experience and personal sophistication, is even further removed from the crucible of events. As to her I observe only that there is no sincere way for the subordinate Monfared's intricate fable to be swallowed without Williams making a conscious decision to depart from prudence and reason in this one instance. It becomes anticlimatic to write the obvious: that Marshall is the one person among key witnesses in whom I have total confidence. Her impressive testimony stands every appropriate test of demeanor, internal harmony, brightly delineated distinguishing, and candor. In few words she is a superbly convincing witness, and credited in full as to all recollection, assertion, or denial.

XI. ANALYSIS

The principal accusation made in the General Counsel's amended complaint has merit for two distinct and independent reasons. The first of these is grounded directly on Singh's credited testimony for, when this is accepted as truth, the entire case telescopes into a narrow finding that Marshall was deliberately discriminated against. As so revealed, the dynamics of June were all nothing more than the maneuverings of a particular employer agent, done in smug expectation that enough puppet strings had been pulled. The undertaking was so brazen as to defy much conventional analysis, for there is little basis or reason to consider routine indicia of animus, disparate treatment, or even timing of the action. Singh's testimony, standing alone, establishes that Monfared, as a sufficiently experienced industrial relations official of Respondent, engaged in a course of behavior that coaxed a rank-and-file opportunist into manufacturing job-related incidents from which fault could claimedly be found with Marshall. Singh's description of how she and Monfared gleefully lauded progress of the tacit conspiracy, coupled with Monafred's telling remark that she wished also to "look good" after the discharge was achieved, leads automatically to a holding that unlawful motivation was at work within Respondent's management circles.

Beyond this, and separately, the "routine indicia" alluded to above are vividly admitting of belief that such discrimination was practiced. It must be inferred from substantial evidence considering the record of this case as a whole that the only reason for Respondent to rid itself of Marshall was because of her near-solitary role as a main union activist. If traditional evidence of animus is not shown, it must be presumed from the awareness present here and employer action taken, coupled with Respondent's pervading desire to avoid unionization.[15]

Thus, on a second theory, I also reach the compelling inference that Respondent's claim of Marshall having opened herself to disciplinary action is a totally rebutted pretext. It is not only true that Marshall did not engage in uttering obscenities during the kickoff crocheting incident, but Respondent had heard from coworker Daughtery, as an objective spectator, that criticism of Marshall would have no foundation. Thus, aside from the dubious nature of Fukuba's adverse notations about Marshall during April and May, the first written reprimand in June was a transparent sham. This assessment applies to all other factors conjured up by Respondent, for taking only the subject of a knife on Marshall's person the evidence is ample and uncontradicted that the rumor was unfounded (Tr. 249) and that pointed objects of lethal capacity were routinely present in the TWX room with management's knowledge (Tr. 303, 2288). Beyond this, Respondent's agents blew out of all proportion the routine instances of profane crosstalk which Marshall might have uttered, and exhibited a peculiar tendency to scandalize Marshall without good cause. The reality is that jealousies and backbiting have long existed in the TWX room, a condition that Williams was well aware of, that Fukuba faced initially to his surprise, and that by all normal standards would have spotlighted Singh's outrageous behavior in June for disciplinary action long before turning in any regard to Marshall. The latter point is of much significance because Singh's past with Respondent was spotted with well-justified disciplinary actions, while Marshall was respected as to abilities and carried near-unsullied record. The entire subject of perturbing Martin is but a free-floating commentary on human nature in a clash of values, but the notion that Marshall was demonstrably at fault, recognizing certain noncondonation as the General Counsel concedes to be in order, is unsupported by the facts and a mere afterthought in terms of personnel administration. It is true, as the General Counsel most vehemently contended throughout trial and in brief, that Monfared sufficiently conceded this point in her initial testimony as a Section 611 witness. From this, and given untrustworthiness that I attach to her testimony, I expressly label the shadings she later advanced, in an effort to associate Marshallk to wrongdoing that affected coworker Martin, as tactical fabrications developed in the face of a progressively damning configuration of facts. Respondent's action here also invokes the principle of assessing disparate treatment, for its handling of the fast-breaking, emotion-laden events of June shows a reckless disregard for fairness, that can only be explained by the presence of an obsessive desire to undermine Marshall's proven value as an employee and her balanced response to the despicable mischief suddenly mounted by Singh.

Regarding the sole allegation independently premised on Section 8(a)(1), I am not persuaded that Singh's testimony is a reliable indicator of any conversational exchange with Monfared in which impermissible interrogation of an employee's "activities, sympathies and desires" with respect to the Union occurred. This matter, raised by an amendment successfully made during trial, is based exclusively on Singh's recollection that during late June [15] In this regard, I see no real significance to the remote remark of November 25, 1981, that may have been made by Barrett.

Monfared had queried her about whether a disassociation from the Union had occurred in the recommended manner of submitting an unequivocal letter of resignation. Singh flavored this with testimony about Monfared having, in that context, expressed distrust of Singh's known deviltry.

Implicit in the credibility resolution above is my strong belief that while Singh is generally truthful as to the intrigue now revealed, her accuracy falls off sharply concerning lesser unrelated details. There are numerous examples of this, among them direct self-contradiction on making the knife/gun remark (Tr. 371, 520), recalling the Cooley message as going to Poughkeepsie, New York (Tr. 360), whereas a clear consensus of other involved persons, Marshall included, gave Tarrytown as the destination, admitted error in having said that Fukuba heard obscenities spoken by Marshall during the crocheting incident (Tr. 871), and jumbling of simple chronology (Tr. 682). Conversely, while I believe that Monfared's denial of plain conspiratorial involvement is mendacious, she reconstructed many of her experiences with a satisfactory ring.[16] This might be expected, given the administrative nature of her position, an academic background, and seeming meticulousness of approach to the churning humanisms of her assigned overview. Her version of the subject is that Singh had been present in the cafeteria during a conversation in which Fukuba inquired about how employees might appropriately respond to the Union. Monfared placed this as possibly on June 8, and testified that she "assume[d]" the prospect of employees resigning from the Union then came up. She recalled the details only "vague[ly]," but doubted that Singh had directly inquired about the process.

On balance I am not persuaded that Monfared committed unlawful interrogation as alleged. On such collateral points Singh's memory is demonstrably faulty, and I note that here her own version includes a tie-in to how she had told Serna to taunt Fessenden on the subject. I suspect that petty annoyance, as was Singh's habit, is not accompanied by accurately detailed recall and, as part of overall demeanor evaluation, reject her testimony of having been interrogated by Monfared as only a muddled, unreliable memory in this particular respect. I therefore hold that the General Counsel has not satisfactorily supported this allegation of the amended complaint, and recommend its dismissal.

Accordingly, my ultimate conclusions of law are that Respondent, by issuing a written reprimand to Marshall followed by imposition of probation and a resultant discharge from employment,[17] has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) and Section (2), (6), and (7) of the Act, but that it has not violated the Act in any respect other than as specifically so found.

Disposition

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[18]

ORDER

The Respondent, Signetics Corporation, Sunnyvale, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Discharging or in any other manner discriminating against employees because of their activities on behalf of The United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.[19]

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Rachel Marshall immediate and full reinstatement to her former position of employment or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to seniority or other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and make her whole for any loss of earnings she may have suffered due to the discrimination against her by paying what she would have earned, less net interim earnings, plus interest, in the manner provided in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289, and Florida Steel Corp, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[20]

(b) Expunge from its files any reference to the written warning, probation, and discharge effected on June 8, 10, and 17, 1982, respectively, and notify her in writing that this has been done and that evidence of this unlawful discipline will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against her.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records, and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its Sunnyvale, California facility[21] copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix." Copies of the

---

[16] A renowned principle of resolving conflicts in evidence was pronounced by Judge Learned Hand as, "It is no reason for refusing to accept everything that a witness says, because you do not believe all of it; nothing is more common in all kinds of judicial decisions than to believe some and not all." NLRB v. Universal Camera Corp., 179 F.2d 749, 754 (2d Cir. 1950).

[17] For purposes of remedy Marshall's backpay entitlement is to be counted from June 14. While technically she was on suspended status for 3 days, her discharge from employment effectively commenced immediately after the Cooley incident. The General Counsel has not pleaded nor argued this distinction, and there is no reason to dwell on it beyond confirming June 17 as the date of discharge from employment for an unlawful, pretextual reason. The expunction remedy to be fashioned shall expressly be deemed applicable to any personnel documents of or related to the June 14–17 time span.

[18] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[19] I expressly decline to categorize the unfair labor practices here presented as involving a proclivity toward violating the Act, and thus fashion only a narrow recommended Order. See Hickmott Foods, 242 NLRB 1357 (1979).

[20] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962)

[21] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the Na-

Continued

notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 32, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the amended complaint be dismissed in all other respects.

---

tional Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT discharge or in any other manner discriminate against employees because of their activities on behalf of The United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Rachel Marshall immediate and full reinstatement to her former position of employment or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to seniority or other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and WE WILL make her whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from her discharge, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL remove from our files any reference to Rachel Marshall's written warning, probation, and discharge effected on June 8, 10, and 17, 1982, respectively, and notify her in writing that this has been done and that evidence of this unlawful discipline will not be used as a basis for furture personnel actions against her.

SIGNETICS CORPORATION

Jenkins Index Company and Southern California Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union, Local 388, affiliated with the International Printing and Graphic Communications Union. Case 21–CA–21994

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND HUNTER

On 15 February 1984 Administrative Law Judge Earldean V. S. Robbins issued the attached decision. The Respondent and the General Counsel each filed exceptions and supporting briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.

The judge found that the Respondent laid off employees Celedon Armenta and Michael Negrete in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. We agree. The judge further found, however, that the General Counsel did not make a prima facie case in regard to the layoff of employee Ambrosio Contreras. We find merit to the General Counsel's exception and find that the Respondent acted unlawfully when it laid off Contreras.

According to the credited testimony, employees met with a union representative to discuss organizing on 29 January at Negrete's house. A few days prior to the meeting Contreras telephoned the Respondent's supervisor Jose Curiel to inquire if Curiel were attending the meeting. Curiel was unaware of the meeting and asked Contreras a series of questions, including the time and location of the meeting and whether Contreras had joined the Union or signed a union authorization card. In response to Contreras' affirmative answers to these final questions, Curiel said, "You're making a big mistake because if in the office they find you signing a card, they will fire you." Immediately following Contreras' layoff with eight other employees on 10 February, Curiel telephoned Contreras and told him, "I told you they'd [sic] get fire if you signed."

We find that the General Counsel has established a prima facie case of unlawful discrimination. We agree with the judge's analysis which imputes to the Respondent its supervisor's knowledge of Contreras' union activity and sentiments. While this knowledge is combined with the timing of the layoff so close to the organizing campaign and the Respondent's animus expressed by Curiel to Contreras, including a threat of discharge for signing a union authorization card, the General Counsel has met its burden.

We find that the Respondent has not established that it would have laid off Contreras in the absence of his union activity. The Respondent asserted that Contreras was selected for layoff because he operated only a vertical press, which it did not use very frequently, and because he had an absenteeism and tardiness problem. Both Contreras and his supervisor testified, however, that Contreras also operated two other presses. While the Respondent's vice president testified that Contreras had an attendance problem, the Respondent introduced only two written warnings, marked as "first offense," received by Contreras on 17 August 1981 and on 19 October 1982. The judge found that the Respondent did not contend that such a record was sufficient to justify discharge but rather was one factor in the decision. As it appears to be the only factor, we do not find that it rebuts the prima facie case made so directly by the General Counsel. In this regard we note that, although the Respondent's vice president Anderson testified that the Respondent obtained input from department heads on employees to be selected for layoff, Contreras' department head, Kamoto, testified he had no input into the layoffs and no one informed him beforehand of the layoffs. Accordingly, we find that the Respondent laid off employee Contreras in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act and we shall modify the judge's order and notice to conform with our finding.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the adminstrative law

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] The judge found that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act by interrogating, threatening, and creating the impression of surveillance of its employees. The Respondent has failed to state any grounds for an exception to these findings. Although citing in a numbered list to the page and line of the judge's conclusions of law on this issue, the Respondent makes no argument in its brief that the judge erred. Rather, the Respondent's brief focuses exclusively on the judge's findings concerning layoffs of employees. The Respondent concludes its brief by requesting only that the judge's decision be amended to dismiss the findings of an unlawful layoff. It thus appears that the Respondent has limited its exceptions to the 8(a)(3) issue. Accordingly, without passing on the analysis or cited authorities, we shall adopt the judge's findings that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(1). Member Hunter adopts the judge's finding that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(1) under all the circumstances but does not rely on those cases cited by the judge.

judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Jenkins Index Company, Montebello, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraphs 2(a) and (b).

"(a) Offer to employees Celedon Armenta, Ambrosio Contreras, and Michael Negrete immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

"(b) Remove from its files any reference to the layoff of Celedon Armenta, Ambrosio Contreras, and Michael Negrete on 10 February 1983 and notify each of them in writing that this has been done and that evidence of their unlawful discharges will not be used against them in any way."

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the adminsitrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

In recognition of these rights, we hereby notify our employees that:

WE WILL NOT lay off or otherwise discriminate against any employees for supporting Southern California Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union, Local 388, affiliated with the International Printing and Graphic Communications Union, AFL–CIO or any other union.

WE WILL NOT coercively interrogate employees as to their union activities and support and the union activities and support of fellow employees.

WE WILL NOT create the impression that the union activities of employees are under surveillance.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees with discharge, plant closure, or other reprisals if they engage in union or other protected concerted activity.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer to employees Celedon Armenta, Ambrosio Contreras, and Michael Negrete immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed and WE WILL make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from their discharge, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL remove from our files any reference to the layoffs of Celedon Armenta, Ambrosio Contreras, and Michael Negrete on 10 February 1983, and notify each of them in writing that this has been done and that the discharges will not be used against them in any way.

JENKINS INDEX COMPANY

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

EARLDEAN V. S. ROBBINS, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was heard before me in Los Angeles, California, on October 27 and 28, 1983. The charge was filed by Southern California Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union, Local 388, affiliated with the International Printing and Graphic Communications Union, AFL–CIO (the Union) on February 17, 1983, and a copy thereof was served on Jenkins Index Company, Respondent, on February 18, 1983. The complaint which issued on July 26, 1983, alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act. The basic issues are whether Respondent discharged or laid off employee Celedon Armenta, Michael Negrete, and Ambrosio Contreras because they engaged in union or other protected concerted activities, and whether Respondent unlawfully interrogated and threatened employees and created the impression that the union activities of their employees were under surveillance.

On the entire record,[1] including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the parties, I make the following

[1] The General Counsel's unopposed motion to correct the official transcript of the proceedings is granted.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

At all times material Respondent, a California corporation, with a facility located in Montebello, California, has been engaged in the manufacture of paper folders and binders. Respondent, in the course and conduct of said business operation, annually sells and ships goods and products valued in excess of $50,000 directly to customers located outside the State of California.

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that Respondent is now, and at all times material has been, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that the Union is, and at all times material has been, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

Respondent is a job shop engaged in the production of paper folders and binders. In February 1983, it had 40 to 50 production employees and about 9 production department heads, including Jose Curiel, an admitted supervisor, who is head of the cutting and tabbing department, and Kenneth Kamoto, head of the printing department. Jerry Biggins was vice president and general manager, Gene Nicool was vice president of administration, James A. Anderson was vice president of operations, Marvin Berman was plant foreman, Virginia Califano was personnel manager, and Bob Frantz did purchasing and preparation of samples for the production and sales department.

In October 1982, Respondent laid off about five employees. According to Anderson, these layoffs were for financial reasons and were not by seniority. Rather, Respondent basically laid off higher paid employees.

In November certain of Respondent's employees discussed the desirability of obtaining union representation and Armenta contacted the Union in this regard. Thereafter, in November, union representatives Dennis Hayden and Jeff (last name unknown) visited Armenta in his home, gave him union authorization cards to be distributed to employees for their signatures, and cautioned him that signatures on the card should be solicited only during nonworking time. From November until February, but principally from the latter part of December to mid-January, Armenta and Negrete distributed between 20 and 25 union authorization cards to fellow employees. Insofar as they know, no supervisor observed them doing this. By mid-January more than 50 percent of the approximately 45 production employees had signed union authorization cards. Armenta signed a card on January 10, 1983,[2] and Contreras and Negrete signed cards on January 18. Armenta then called Hayden and arranged for Hayden to meet with some of the employees at Mike Negrete's home on January 29.

Contreras testified that he and Curiel are friends and that in the third week of January he telephoned Curiel and inquired if he was going to the meeting. Curiel asked, "What meeting?" When Contreras explained that he was referring to the union meeting, Curiel said, "I don't know anything about it." Contreras said, "I made a mistake." Curiel asked why, and Contreras explained that he thought Curiel knew about it. Curiel said, "I don't know," and asked where the meeting would be. When Contreras said it would be at Mike Negrete's house, Curiel asked when. Contreras said, "Next Saturday." Curiel then asked, "Are you in the Union?" Contreras said, "Yes." Curiel then said, "Oh, you're making a big mistake because the office, they don't want anything to do with the Union." Curiel then asked, "Did you sign already that card for the Union?" Contreras said, "Yes." Curiel said, "You're making a big mistake because if in the office they find you signing the card, they will fire you because they don't want anything with the Union. The Union is not good because they take only 20,000 a year as employees. And if somebody comes from the Union to Jenkins, they will close the door. They don't want anything. And if they come, they will close down all the plant. They will send out the jobs to Universal."[3] Contreras asked who told Curiel this; and Curiel said, "Bob Frantz explained everything to me about what they are going to do if the Union comes. They don't want anything to do with the Union. They were going to close the plant and send the jobs out to another company and if they find you signing already that card from the Union, you are going to get fired." Curiel then said, "This is a secret between you and me. Bob Frantz told me."

The meeting was held as scheduled on Saturday, January 29, at Negrete's home. From 10 to 12 employees attended including Armenta and Negrete. Hayden and another union representative were also present. Contreras did not attend.

Armenta testified that around 6:15 on Monday morning, January 31, shortly after he reported to work, Curiel asked him, "How was the meeting Saturday?" When Armenta did not reply, Curiel said, "Sal, I know all about it. You guys had that meeting down at Mike Negrete's house. For having those kind of meetings you can get into a lot of trouble." Armenta said, "Those meetings are not secret, the next time we have one you are welcome to attend." Curiel said, "Well, by the way how many employees showed up to that meeting." When Armenta made no reply, Curiel laughed and returned to his work area.

On January 31, Biggins had a meeting of employees at which he announced a freeze on wages. He further said that they did not know how long it would continue but the freeze would stop any further layoffs. That evening, Negrete and his girl friend had a social engagement with

[2] Unless otherwise indicated, all dates herein will be in 1983.

[3] Universal Paper Products and Respondent are both owned by Office Products Corporation, a holding company.

Curiel and his wife. According to Negrete, during the course of the evening he mentioned the adverse effect the wage freeze would have on him and said what the employees needed was a union. Curiel responded, "I know what you guys are up to. You guys are making a big mistake," and further said that all unions were "fucked up." Negrete said that a union was as good as "you make it." Curiel said that employees had previously tried to get a union in and the Company had said then that they were going to close down the plant. Curiel further said they would do it again, that before they would go union, they would close the plant. Negrete said there had been a meeting with union representatives and employees at his house and it was illegal for the Company to close the plant when the employees were trying to unionize it.

Negrete further testified that he said Universal had tried to get a union and, from what he understood, the union lost there by only a couple of percentage points, and that the employees had to stick together. Curiel said the employees were just making a big mistake by doing that. Curiel also said he knew who was behind this. Negrete asked who and Curiel replied, "Sal Armenta." Negrete then said, "I'm one of the main people involved too, because I believe I am going to benefit the most of it." Curiel asked if Lupe Rubio and Esther Barrios had signed a card for the Union.[4] Negrete said he did not know. Curiel said he had told Rubio she should not go for the Union, that she was just asking for trouble if she did. Negrete asked why Curiel did not want a union. Curiel said the Company would change a lot of things if the employees were represented by a union. He said his job was good and, if he lost it, it would be difficult for him to find another job that paid as well. Curiel further said if Negrete wanted the Union that was his business, but he did not want anything to do with it. Curiel then concluded the discussion by saying that they were friends and the conversation would end right there and nothing else would be said about it.

Employee Carlos Ortado testified that on February 10 Curiel approached him at his work station, told him to turn off his machine and go to the warehouse. When Curiel and Ortado were in the warehouse, Curiel told Ortado that the guys who were going to start up the Union, Sal and Mike, would be fired that day. Ortado asked how he knew and Curiel said that Bob Frantz had told him. Ortado said he felt this was going to happen. Curiel said he felt bad about it.

On that same day, eight or nine employees were laid off, including Armenta, Negrete, and Contreras. Negrete testified that he first learned of his layoff about 5 minutes before the end of his shift when he opened his paycheck and found a notice headed, "Employee Termination Record," which indicated that he was laid off. The reason checked was "lack of work—indefinite." According to Negrete, he immediately asked Kamoto if he knew about his layoff. Kamoto said yes, he had just found out about it and he was surprised that Negrete was one of those laid off. Kamoto further said that he had just talked to Berman because he had some questions about Negrete being laid off and that Berman told him that it was management's doing, that they were the ones that selected Negrete for layoff and that even he did not have any say about it.

On the following day, when Negrete returned to the plant to pick up his belongings, he asked Berman if he had prior knowledge of Negrete's layoff. Berman said that he had just found out the day of the layoff, that he did not have anything to do with it and it was all management's doing. Berman further said he could not sleep that night because of all of the people who had been laid off, that Respondent expected him to get production out, but they were getting rid of his employees. Berman said he was going to try to get Negrete's job back for him. Negrete said the only way he was going to get his job back was through the agency because Jenkins did all its hiring through a temporary agency. Negrete then asked why he was laid off for lack of work when everything was picking up. Berman said he brought that up to management and they said it was dollars and cents, that Negrete was making too much money from the Company.

Contreras testified that Califano also gave him his paycheck on February 10, and that it contained a termination notice that he was laid off for "lack of work—indefinite." He showed the notice to Kamoto and said he did not understand. Kamoto said, "Today is the last day." Contreras asked why. Kamoto said, "I just knew about this a few minutes ago and I'm sorry." Contreras said he had more experience and more seniority than other employees. Kamoto said he did not know anything about it.

Contreras further testified that Curiel telephoned him about 2 hours later at his home and said, "I told you they'd get fired if you signed," and asked what Contreras was going to do. Contreras said he was going to collect from unemployment.

Armenta's paycheck, which he did not open until after he got home, also contained an unexpected termination notice stating that he was laid off indefinitely. According to Armenta, he immediately telephoned Berman, told him he had just seen the termination notice, and asked why he had not been told that he was being laid off. Berman said he did not know anything about it. Armenta asked why he was being terminated. Berman said he did not know anything about it, that there was nothing he could do. On the following day when Armenta returned to the plant to pick up his tools, he asked Berman, who was at the compressor, if the compressor was broken. Berman said no, he was teaching Ted Dazies how to maintain the compressors. He further said he was so upset he couldn't sleep last night because of what management had done by terminating his best employees." Berman said he had a meeting with management that morning and he was going to try to get Armenta's job back.

Armenta further testified that, on the following Monday when he returned to the plant to get reimbursement for a mileage claim, Berman said he was glad Armenta had come in, that he was having a lot of trouble in maintenance with all of the requisitions, that he did not know where they stood and that Ted did not know anything about it, and asked Armenta if he would help him. Armenta did help him to sort out what parts had been ordered and what parts to pick up. Berman then told him he had the meeting with management and tried to get Armenta his job back, but that management was "real mad and upset." Berman said he told management that Armenta was the best mechanic and that his production was going to drop because of letting his best people go. Berman said management told him they knew what they were doing, that they were running the plant, not Berman. Berman said, "My best people are gone, my best mechanic is gone, what am I supposed to do," and he said management was real mad and upset but did not say why they were. Berman said he was told by management that they were running the plant and knew what they were doing, and that he was further told if he needed any help to get Rudy from Universal Paper to repair the machines.[5]

[4] According to Negrete, Curiel, Rubio, and Barrios are good friends.

B. Respondent's Defense

Respondent adduced no testimony in contradiction of the testimony of employee witnesses as to statements made by Curiel. However, Respondent did adduce testimony with regard to the layoffs. James Anderson, Respondent's vice president of operations, testified that the February 10 layoffs, as well as the earlier layoffs in October, were financially motivated. In both instances, the layoffs were not by seniority. Rather, according to Anderson, they laid off the higher paid employees. For the fiscal year ending June 30, Respondent had a loss of a quarter of a million dollars and, as of the time of the hearing herein, had lost $112,000 for the current fiscal year. As part of Respondent's economic retrenchment, within the 6 weeks prior to the hearing, Respondent terminated its vice president and general manager, its vice president of administration, its personnel manager, and its plant foreman. At the time of the hearing, their various functions were being performed either by other management personnel at Jenkins or by management personnel from Universal and OPC, who continued on the payroll of Universal and OPC while working for Jenkins. Anderson further testified that the selection of persons to be laid off on February 10 was made by him and Biggins. Virginia Califano was also present at the meeting where the decisions were made. According to Anderson, they had input from department heads. However, he does not recall whether the department heads actually attended the meeting or whether they were contacted individually at the plant.

1. Celedon Armenta

Armenta commenced working for Respondent in April 1980. As a maintenance mechanic, his duties were to repair and maintain all of Respondent's machinery. There was only one other maintenance mechanic in Respondent's employ, Ted Dazies, who had been employed about a year and had been trained by Armenta. The only other person who worked in maintenance was a trainee who had been in Respondent's employ about 6 months. Of the three, Armenta was the highest paid employee and was the only one who worked throughout the plant on all the machinery.

Anderson testified that during the meeting when he and Biggins were making the determination as to whom to lay off, they discussed the maintenance department. At that time they had three people in maintenance and Armenta was receiving the highest wages of the three, so the determination was made to lay him off. Since Armento left Respondent's employ, Respondent has used an outside contractor and employees from Universal Paper to do the work previously performed by him. Anderson testified that since Armenta left, Respondent's maintenance cost has decreased. However, he also testified that work previously performed by Armenta was done by an outside contractor and an employee from Universal. This employee is paid at time and a half the rate he is paid at Universal. The outside contractor is paid in the range of $30 an hour.

Anderson testified that the rationale for the selection of Armenta was his wage rate and the fact that he could be replaced by the other two employees in maintenance and, if required, help could be received on a part-time basis from Universal. However, no documentation was introduced into evidence to corroborate Anderson's testimony that maintenance cost in fact decreased after Armenta left. Armenta testified that no one asked him if he would take a cut in pay in order to keep his job.

2. Michael Negrete

Michael Negrete, whose employment commenced in November 1978, worked in the printing department which is staffed by about 12 employees and is divided into the letterpress and the offset areas. Except for a short period of time, he has worked principally in letterpress. At the time of his layoff, he was assistant printing department head with responsibilities in the letterpress department. As such, if other pressmen needed assistance, he would assist them if he could and would check the quality of some of the work coming off the press.

Negrete testified, without contradiction, that at the time he was made assistant department head, Berman told him the printing department was going to grow and they were going to start thinking about a printing night shift which would start in January 1983. He told Negrete that being night shift supervisor would be more money for him but would also mean more responsibility, he asked if he wanted the position and who he thought should be on the night shift. Negrete named some employees he would like to have on the night shift. Both Berman and Kamoto told Negrete they wanted the night shift to be a strong shift. However, about the last week in December, Berman told Negrete that he did not think they were going to start the night shift in the beginning of January as planned, but that they were going to have a night shift and would just have to take it day by day and maybe towards the end of January the night shift could be started. Berman said Respondent had enough work at the moment but in order to start a new night shift they would have to have about six to eight more people and there was not enough work to start a whole new shift. Annette Williamson, Berman's secretary, was present during this conversation. However, neither Williamson nor Berman testified.

[5] According to Armenta, Universal Paper does similar work to that done by Jenkins; sometimes Rudy would help him repair some of the Jenkins machines and sometime Armenta would go over to Universal and help Rudy repair some of the Universal machines.

Anderson testified that, in making the selection of employees to be laid off, Negrete was discussed. Specifically, they discussed that when Negrete was running the department when Kamoto was absent one day, they had a couple of problems. Also they tried him on the Solna, a large two-color offset press which is the most difficult press to operate at Respondent's facility, but Negrete could not operate the Solna, so they had to move him back to the press that he had been running. Negrete was unhappy about that and Biggins and Anderson felt that he was not going to be happy being moved back so they decided to let him go.

However, Kamoto testified that about a year prior to Negrete's layoff they had started to train him on the Solna press and that he worked full time on the Solna for about a month. Negrete testified that he started operating the Solna in November 1982 and ran it every time there was a job for the Solna, which was about half of the time. According to Kamoto, Negrete was removed from the Solna because they thought they had mechanical problems with the press and needed someone with more experience.[6] Later, prior to Negrete's layoff, they discovered that the poor quality they were experiencing in the product was caused by a chemical problem with the ink and the solution.

In February, Respondent placed an ad in the paper for a Solna operator and, as a result of that ad, hired James Hill after Negrete's layoff. Kamoto testified that he considered Negrete as a good worker in the letterpress department and that he was not working on the Solna at the time of his layoff.

Anderson testified that Negrete was not selected for layoff because he could not operate the Solna but because it was felt his attitude would be bad as a result of his demotion. When asked specifically what he observed about Negrete's attitude after he was taken off the Solna, Anderson testified as to an incident when he entered the production area and heard Negrete tell one of the other pressmen something to the effect that if he did not receive a raise that day he was going to tell them what to do with it. Negrete then turned around, saw Anderson, appeared to be embarrassed and that was the end of it.

Anderson testified that offset presses were becoming more important to Respondent and he and Biggins just felt that since Negrete could not run the Solna, he could not be the assistant department head and thus had no opportunities for advancement. He was young and bright and they just felt he would be frustrated. Anderson admits, however, that Negrete was only assistant department head in the letterpress area and that he does not recall whether he was removed from that position. According to Anderson, when Negrete was reassigned to the letterpress, he did not have the same dedication. He was wandering around more and had more conversations with employees in other departments when he should have been tending the press.

Kamoto testified that Negrete was a trainee on the Solna and his production was slow on that press, but admits that he never gave Negrete a warning for his production on the Solna or for his attitude and that after Negrete was removed from the Solna machine he did not notice any negative change in his attitude at work. Further, Negrete was never removed from his position as Kamoto's assistant.

At the time of his layoff, Negrete was making $8.10 an hour and was the highest paid person in the department, other than Kamoto. Negrete was receiving training in printing at Los Angeles Trade Technical School at night. His superiors at Respondent were aware of this and encouraged him to continue. Negrete testified that, on February 10, the work load was increasing and they were working a full 40-hour, 4-day week. In addition to running the letterpress machines, Negrete also ran the Harris offset machine on occasion which in terms of difficulty is the second or third most difficult machine in the department.

Negrete testified that prior to his layoff he did hear from some supervisor, a member of management, that the Company was going to hire a Solna operator. He also testified, without contradiction, that he was not actually told he was being transferred from the Solna press. Rather, he was told they wanted him to watch employee Earl Luevano closer because he was having a lot of problems at the time and he, Negrete, was not going to be spending that much time on the Solna. This was within a couple of weeks prior to February 10. Negrete further testified that he continued to work on the Solna off and on up to the time of his layoff. He does not recall whether he worked on that press on his last day of work, but he testified, again without contradiction, that he did work on the Solna within his last week of employment. He denies ever stating in the production area that if Respondent did not give him a raise he would quit or take some action against the Company, or making a statement in the production area indicating hostility for some management action; nor did anyone in management ever tell him that his attitude was improper.

3. Ambrosio Contreras

Contreras began work for Respondent in October 1980 as a pressman in the letterpress area of the printing department. At the time of his layoff he was paid $7.20 an hour.

Anderson testified that in reaching a determination as to who should be laid off, they considered Contreras' absenteeism and tardiness and the fact that he ran the vertical press, which was not used all the time; and decided they could do without him because it was not one of the presses that ran continually. They also discussed another person in the printing department, Earl Luevano. The reason Contreras was selected instead of Luevano was probably because Luevano ran the big presses and Contreras ran the vertical, a small press which was not used that much. The other operators in the printing department, according to Anderson, were offset pressmen, all of whom were busy and had good production.

[6] The General Counsel does not contend that the transfer of Negrete from the Solna press back to the letterpress was unlawful.

Kamoto testified that Contreras operated the vertical press and also two other presses. He further testified that he had no input into the layoffs, that no one told him beforehand that layoffs were going to take place and he was not asked whom he would select to be laid off. He also testified that the same was true as to the October and November layoffs. Kamoto further testified that Contreras had an attendance problem and that, although he does not recall issuing a warning to Contreras for his absences or tardiness, he does recall bringing it to his attention. He admits that some of Contreras' absences were excused. He also testified that he does not recall if other employees in the department also had attendance problems although other employees admittedly had absences. According to him, absenteeism was not a consistent problem for most of the employees in the department.

C. Conclusions

1. The alleged unlawful statements and interrogations

All the alleged statements and interrogations were by Curiel, an admitted supervisor.[7] I credit Contreras, Armenta, Negrete, and Ortado as to these undenied statements.[8] They impressed me as honest, reliable witnesses who were endeavoring to tell the truth. Further, their testimony tends to be mutually corroborative. Thus, although they testified as to separate conversations, their accounts of their conversations with Curiel contain a similar thread of warning by Curiel that there would be reprisals from Respondent because of their union activities.

I find unlawful Curiel's interrogation of Contreras as to where the union meeting would be, whether Contreras was in the Union and whether he had signed a union authorization card; his interrogation of Armenta as to how many employees attended the union meeting; and his interrogation of Negrete as to whether Rubio and Barrios had signed union authorization cards. Interrogation of this nature is inherently coercive and is therefore violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Quartrol Corp., 266 NLRB 120 (1983); Fruehauf Corp., 237 NLRB 399 (1978); General Electric Co., 264 NLRB 953 (1982); Knogo Corp., 262 NLRB 1346 (1982); Washington Beef Producers, 264 NLRB 1163 (1982); Airborne Freight Corp., 263 NLRB 1376 (1982); United Sanitation Services, 262 NLRB 1369 (1982); Marion Rohr Corp., 261 NLRB 971 (1982); Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., 256 NLRB 626, 629 (1981). It is immaterial that Curiel is a friend of Contreras and Negrete and that the interrogation of Negrete occurred in a social setting. Quemetco, Inc., 223 NLRB 470 (1976).

I further find violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act Curiel's threat to Contreras that he would be fired if the office learned he had signed a union authorization card and that Respondent would close its plant if the employees were represented by a union; to Armenta and Negrete that employees could get into a lot of trouble for attending union meetings and otherwise supporting the Union; and to Negrete that the employees were making a big mistake by seeking to obtain union representation. Such statements constitute clear threats of reprisal for engaging in union activities. Marion Rohr Corp., supra; Donnelly Mfg. Co., 265 NLRB 1711 (1982); Cumberland Farms Dairy, 258 NLRB 900, 905 (1981); Han-Dee Pak, Inc., 249 NLRB 725, 727, 729 (1980). It is immaterial that Curiel is a friend of Negrete and Contreras. The Board has held that the "impact of such statements, coming from a 'friend' who is part of management, is probably greater in view of the authenticity and credibility of the source." Coach & Equipment Sales Corp., 228 NLRB 440 (1977); Stewart-Warner Corp., 253 NLRB 136 (1980).

I also find that Curiel's statement to Armenta that he knew all about the meeting, and to Negrete that he was aware of what the employees were up to and knew who was behind the union organizing, created the impression of surveillance of the employees' union activities and is violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Dutch Boy, Inc., 262 NLRB 4 (1982); Ace Machine Co., 249 NLRB 623, 629 (1980).

I further find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by Curiel's statement to Ortado that the employees involved in the union organizing—Negrete and Armenta—were going to be fired. Such a statement conveys the impression that they were being discharged because they engaged in union activities. I also find, in view of his earlier statements to Contreras, that Curiel's statement shortly after the layoff reminding Contreras that he had told him "they'd get fired if you signed," conveyed the same impression and is also violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Sumco Mfg. Co., 251 NLRB 427, 434 (1980).

2. The layoff

The General Counsel argues that the layoffs of Armenta, Negrete, and Contreras were unlawful in view of (1) the extensive union activities engaged in by Armenta, Negrete, and to a lesser degree Contreras; (2) considerable animosity on the part of Respondent toward union activities engaged in by Armenta, Negrete, and to a lesser degree Contreras; (3) considerable animosity on the part of Respondent toward union activities as exemplified by Curiel's conduct; (4) lack of any valid reason for the selection of these employees for layoff,; and (5) the layoffs of these particular employees in circumstances which show the purported reasons for their selection to be spurious. Respondent argues that it had no knowledge that these employees were engaged in union activities and asserts that it had legitimate business justification both for the decision to lay off employees on February 10 and for the selection of Armenta, Negrete, and Contreras.

[7] In its answer, Respondent did not specifically deny the complaint allegation that Curiel is a supervisor within the meaning of the Act. Accordingly, under Sec. 102.20 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, that allegation is deemed to be admitted. Further, the record establishes that Curiel possesses and exercises indicia of supervisory authority.

[8] Although Curiel testified on Respondent's behalf, he was not questioned in this regard.

The record is clear that Curiel had knowledge both of the union activity in general and of Armenta's and Negrete's leadership roles therein. Although he denies telling anyone in management that Negrete and Contreras signed union authorization cards, he does not make the same denial as to Armenta or the union organizational campaign in general, nor does he deny making statements to Contreras and Ortado which indicated that he felt the Union was a threat to his own job security and that he had discussed the union activities with Frantz. Further, Respondent's facility is a small plant with about 45 production employees and Armenta and Negrete distributed union authorization cards at Respondent's facility during the lunch break. In the circumstances, I find that knowledge of the union activities and the leadership role of Negrete and Armenta therein can be imputed to Respondent.

Anderson testified that Respondent had been losing money and the layoffs were economically motivated in an attempt to cut costs. Although arguing that this economic defense is suspect, the General Counsel's case essentially rests on the contention that the selection of Negrete, Armenta, and Contreras was unlawfully discriminatory. I conclude that the record supports this contention as to Armenta and Negrete.

Respondent had announced on January 31 that the wage freeze put into effect on that day would obviate the necessity for further layoffs. At the very least, this would seem to indicate that Respondent planned to avoid a layoff, if possible. Further, the work load was beginning to increase; yet, within 10 days it laid off two of its key employees. Armenta was Respondent's only mechanic skilled enough to work on machinery throughout the plant. Negrete was assistant department head and was being groomed for a position as supervisor.

The justification for their selection is not persuasive. Anderson testified that maintenance costs decreased after Armenta was laid off. However, no documentary evidence was introduced to corroborate this testimony. Further, the record indicates that the spread between Armenta's wage rate and that of the other mechanic was less than $2 an hour, that the other mechanic was not skilled enough to replace Armenta, and that the employee brought in from Universal received premium pay for his work for Respondent and the outside contractor utilized for some of the work previously done by Armenta was paid more than triple Armenta's wage rate. These circumstances raise questions as to the accuracy of Anderson's testimony regarding the cost savings involved and I find that Respondent's failure to offer supporting documentary evidence gives rise to an inference that Respondent's records would not support this assertion.

Further, the claim that Armenta was selected because of his relatively high wage rate is belied by Respondent's other selections. Thus, except for Negrete, Armenta, and Contreras, the employees laid off on February 10 had little seniority and were paid in the range of $3.80 to $4.10 an hour. Their selection is inconsistent with the position that Respondent was trying to rid itself of employees who had achieved relatively high wage rates.

As to Negrete, Anderson testified that he was selected for layoff because there were "a couple of problems" when he substituted for Kamoto 1 day as acting department head; he could not be assistant department head because he could not operate the Solna press and thus had no opportunity for advancement—potential for frustration—and his attitude deteriorated after he was removed from the Solna. However, the record establishes that Negrete's responsibilities as assistant department head were confined to the letterpress area and Kamoto testified that he was competent in that area, had not been removed from his position as assistant department head, and had not exhibited any negative change in attitude.

Upon a consideration of the evidence set forth above, I find that the reasons asserted by Anderson for the selection of Armenta and Negrete for layoff are pretextual. In all the circumstances, including Armenta's and Negrete's roles as leaders in the union organizational campaign, the timing of the layoffs, the animus expressed by Curiel, Curiel's statement to Ortado that the union leaders, Sal and Mike, would be fired that day, Berman's statement that he could not get Armenta reinstated because management was "real mad and upset," and the pretextual nature of the reasons asserted by Respondent for their selection, I find that the General Counsel has established a prima facie case that Armenta and Negrete were selected for layoff because of their activities on behalf of the Union, and that Respondent has failed to demonstrate that they would have been laid off even in the absence of such protected activity. Accordingly, I find that they were laid off in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

As to Contreras, the record does not establish that he engaged in any union activities different in kind from those of a number of other employees. The General Counsel argues, however, that this is immaterial since he was told by Curiel that his discharge stemmed from engaging in union activities. I do not agree. In this regard, I note that, while perhaps suspicious, the record fails to establish that Respondent did not have a legitimate motivation for a layoff of some size on February 10. Thus, the only issue as to Contreras is whether his selection for layoff was unlawfully motivated.

It is undisputed that Contreras received a written warning for excessive tardiness on October 19. Respondent does not contend that this was sufficient for a discharge for cause but, rather, that it was a factor which influenced his selection. Thus the fact that he was not laid off, or terminated, earlier or that this was merely a first warning in a progressive warning system is not indicia of unlawful motivation. Nor does the record establish that his selection was so unreasonable as to support an inference of unlawful motivation.

I therefore cannot conclude that Curiel's statement is sufficient to establish unlawful motivation. In this regard, I note that Curiel did not participate in the layoff decision nor was he Contreras' supervisor. Thus it cannot be inferred that he would have had knowledge of the absence of legitimate reasons for Contreras' selection, an inference which would lend credence to his assertion of unlawful reasons. I also note that when he told Ortado that the layoffs would take place, he specifically identified Armenta and Negrete as the union leaders who would be laid off and made no mention of Contreras. I therefore conclude that the record does not establish that his statement represented anything more than conjecture on his part.

In these circumstances, I find that the General Counsel has failed to establish that Respondent was motivated by unlawful considerations when it laid off Contreras. Accordingly, I find that, by such conduct, Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By unlawfully laying off employees Celedon Armenta and Michael Negrete because they engaged in union or other protected concerted activities for the purposes of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, Respondent has committed unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

4. By coercively interrogating employees concerning their union membership, activities, and sympathy, and the union membership, activities, and sympathies of fellow employees, by creating the impression that the union activities of employees were under surveillance by Respondent, by threatening employees with plant closure and other reprisals because of their union activities, and by threatening employees with discharge in order to discourage employees from engaging in union or other protected concerted activities, Respondent has committed unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

5. The above-described unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

6. Respondent has not violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by laying off Ambrosio Contreras.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that Respondent cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes of the Act.

Having found that Respondent unlawfully laid off Celedon Armenta and Michael Negrete, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to offer each of them immediate and full reinstatement to his former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make each of them whole for any loss of earnings suffered by reason of the discrimination against him, plus interest, in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[9]

[9] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[10]

ORDER

The Respondent, Jenkins Index Company, Montebello, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Laying off or otherwise discriminating against employees because of their union and other protected concerted activity.

(b) Coercively interrogating employees as to their union activities and sympathies and the union activities and sympathies of fellow employees.

(c) Creating the impression that the union activities of employees are under surveillance.

(d) Threatening employees with discharge, plant closure, or other reprisals if they engage in union or other protected concerted activity.

(e) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer to employee Celedon Armenta and Michael Negrete immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make each of them whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against him, plus interest.

(b) Remove from its files any reference to the layoff of Celedon Armenta and Michael Negrete on February 10, 1983, and notify each of them in writing that this has been done and that evidence of their unlawful discharges will not be used against them in any way.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its facilities in Montebello, California, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[11] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 21, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

[10] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[11] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

IT IS ALSO ORDERED that the complaint is dismissed insofar as it alleges that the layoff of Ambrosio Contreras was violative of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

Waco, Inc. and United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC and David L. White. Cases 5–CA–12951 and 5–CA–3122

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

On 21 December 1981 and 20 December 1982 Administrative Law Judge William A. Gershuny issued the attached decision and supplemental decision, respectively. The General Counsel filed exceptions and supporting briefs to both the decision and the supplemental decision, and the Respondent filed briefs in opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and supplemental decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

The judge dismissed the General Counsel's complaint in its entirety. While we affirm certain of those dismissals, we reverse others and, in one instance, we affirm the dismissal on grounds different from those set out by the judge.

1. The judge found, and we agree, that the Respondent lawfully discharged employee David White when he returned from an extended absence and failed to provide the doctor's excuse required by the Respondent's rules. We also agree that the Respondent did not violate the Act when it earlier photographed White wearing a large cardboard prounion sign on his person while working at his machine, since the dangerous nature of White's conduct rendered it unprotected and the Respondent was entitled to document the event. Additionally, we agree, based on the judge's credibility resolutions, that the Respondent did not promulgate an unlawful no-solicitation/no-distribution rule, or threaten employees with discharge for participating in union activities.

2. The judge further found that the Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(1) of the Act when it discharged nine employees who refused to begin work on the morning of 9 January 1981.[2] For the reasons set forth below, we agree that this conduct of the Respondent was lawful.

As more fully set forth by the judge, the nine employees in question arrived at work shortly before 7 a.m. on 9 January and found that certain other employees (not involved in this proceeding) had either been discharged or had quit under purportedly unjust circumstances. The nine employees gathered in the lunchroom and demanded that Faris, the manager of the fabrication department in which they worked, meet there with them as a group. The employees never stated a specific grievance or formulated any demands other than to have Faris meet with them in the lunchroom.

As the judge found, although the Respondent was aware that the employees' concerns were probably work-related, Faris refused their demand for a mass meeting in the lunchroom. Faris came to the lunchroom about 7:45 a.m. and told the employees that he would meet with any of them individually in his office but would not participate in a mass meeting. None of the protesters agreed to this agreement. Instead, they remained in the lunchroom until they were presented with their paychecks and were discharged between 10:30 and 11 a.m. when they refused to work or leave the premises.

In dismissing the allegation that the discharge of these employees violated the Act, we note that, although employees who are unrepresented and are working without an established grievance procedure have a right to engage in spontaneous concerted protests concerning their working conditions, the precise contours within which such activity is protected cannot be defined by hard-and-fast rules. Instead, each case requires that many relevant factors be weighed. In the instant case, the employees remained in the lunchroom for a period of at least 3-1/2 hours, most of which came after Faris had told them that he would not meet with them as a group and that they must choose either to get up and go back to work, in which case he would meet with them individually, or to punch out and leave the premises. In our view, by the time these employees were discharged, late in the morning, they had overstepped the boundary of a protected, spontaneous work stoppage, and were occupying the facility in a manner which was unprotected. The Respondent's decision to terminate them was not made precipitously, and the employees had had ample time to consider the Respondent's demand that they choose between working and carrying on their protest off the Respondent's premises. The employees gave no indication that they intended to accept either alternative, and, in fact, the employees' testimony indicates that they had no plan to give up their occupation of the Respondent's lunchroom. Neither did they communicate to the Respondent the particulars of their grievances so as to facilitate a discussion or possible resolution of their concerns. In these circumstances, we find that the discharge of these nine employees was not unlawful.[3]

[1] The General Counsel has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] All dates herein are in 1981 unless otherwise noted.

3. Five days after the lunchroom protest, picketing at or near the entrance to the Respondent's premises commenced. Between 14 and 16 January, picketers carried signs listing a litany of grievances against the Respondent. The picketers consisted of five of the lunchroom protesters and two former employees previously terminated for reasons unknown. On the second day of the picketing, Fabrication Department Manager Faris took an unknown number of photographs of the picketers. The Respondent's asserted justification for the photographing is that it wanted "to find out what was on the signs and take pictures of them."

The Respondent does not contend that these pickets either engaged in, or gave the appearance that they might engage in, any form of picket line misconduct, or that their presence interfered with ingress or egress at the plant entrance or that they caused any traffic disturbance. Yet, besides photographing, the Respondent had police observe the picketing. The pickets were never asked to move, although Faris asked them if they were represented, and, if so, by whom.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act when Faris photographed this picketing activity. The judge dismissed the allegation on the grounds that the Respondent's conduct was "noncoercive, nonthreatening, and unaccompanied by other unlawful activity" on the Respondent's part. The judge offered no explanations why this conduct was "noncoercive and nonthreatening." We disagree with his dismissal of this allegation.

It has long been held that "[i]n the absence of proper justification, the photographing of pickets violates the Act because it has a tendency to intimidate."[4] Photographing lawful, peaceful picketing tends to implant fear of future reprisals.[5]

In the particular circumstances of this case, we are convinced that the Respondent's conduct reasonably tended to restrain the employees from engaging in what was undisputedly protected concerted activity. The Respondent had no reasonable basis for anticipating picket line misconduct, since, both on the day of the lunchroom protesters' discharge and at all times during this picketing, the employees were orderly and peaceful. Such photographing by their former supervisor reasonably tended to coerce and restrain the picketers by "creating a fear among them that the record of their concerted activities might be used for some future reprisals,"[6] e.g., a refusal to consider them for rehire or a possible "blackball" of them with other employers. Unlike the situation in U.S. Steel,[7] the picketers did not seek their own media coverage nor did the Respondent have a history of photographing picketing unaccompanied by employee reprisals. Photographing the picketing employees could reasonably tend to coerce them not to take further protected concerted action to voice their grievances concerning events at the Respondent's plant. Accordingly, we find that, by photographing the picketers,[8] the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. The complaint also alleges that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) by admonishing employees not to discuss their wages among themselves. The judge noted that it was undisputed that Faris and other supervisors engaged in such conduct, but he found, on the basis of his credibility resolutions, that the Respondent had made no threats to discharge or discipline employees for [3] Cases relied on by the General Counsel are distinguishable. In GF Business Equipment, 215 NLRB 872 (1974), enfd. 529 F.2d 201 (8th Cir. 1975), the employees, during their first work stoppage, made known to the company, prior to stopping work, the specific complaints which gave rise to their protest. While the company gave the employees the choice of returning to work or punching out, they were also told that, if they punched out, they might be subject to discipline. We note the work stoppage there lasted no more than 1 hour. During the second work stoppage, the employees were again told to work or punch out but, if they punched out, they were again told they might be subject to discipline. Also, the second stoppage lasted only 15 minutes before a number of employees were discharged. In Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. of Miami, 186 NLRB 477 (1970), enfd. 449 F.2d 814 (5th Cir. 1971), cert. denied 407 U.S. 910 (1972), there was no showing, as here, that the employer agreed to meet with the employees, and the employees were discharged only shortly after their work stoppage began.

Member Hunter does not agree with the rationale of these cases and accordingly finds it unnecessary to distinguish them here.

[4] Kallmann v. NLRB, 640 F.2d 1094 (9th Cir. 1981). See also Flambeau Plastics Corp., 167 NLRB 735 (1967), enfd. 401 F.2d 128 (7th Cir. 1968).

[5] See NLRB v. Colonial Haven Nursing Home, 542 F.2d 691 (7th Cir. 1976); Captain Nemo's, 258 NLRB 537 (1981); Cutting, Inc., 255 NLRB 534 (1981).

[6] NLRB v. Colonial Haven Nursing Home, supra.

[7] U.S. Steel Corp. v. NLRB, 682 F.2d 98 (6th Cir. 1982)

[8] The fact that these employees were no longer employed by the Respondent does not strip them of their Sec. 7 rights. It is well settled that employees are not protected merely for activity within the scope of their employment relationship, but may engage in other activities for mutual aid or protection. Eastex, Inc. v. NLRB, 437 U.S. 556 (1978). The Act provides in Sec. 2(3) that "The term 'employee' shall include any employee, and shall include any individual whose work has ceased as a consequence of, or in connection with, any current labor dispute . . . ." Thus, we have held that a discharged employee remains a statutory employee entitled to the full protection of the Act. Little Rock Crate & Basket Co., 227 NLRB 1406 (1977), and cases cited therein.

violating this instruction. The judge particularly noted that no employee testified that this instruction inhibited him from engaging in protected activity. The judge concluded, without discussion of precedent, that the instruction was lawful. We disagree.

In some circumstances, it may be lawful for an employer to bar its employees from discussing certain information concerning wages. For example, in International Business Machines Corp. (IBM), 265 NLRB 638 (1982), we held that, although employee rights were adversely affected by the company's policy prohibiting employees from distributing wage data, which it had compiled and classified as confidential, that policy was not unlawful. The issue was whether the Company had substantial and legitimate business interests which supported its policy and which outweighed the employees' interests in making use of the data compiled by the company. In that case, we noted that employees were not precluded by the company from discussing their own wages with each other, but only from having access to or distributing the information which the company had compiled for its own internal use. We concluded that the company's business justification outweighed the employees' interest in having free access to the disputed wage data.

In the instant case, however, unlike IBM, supra, the Respondent forbade its employees to discuss their own wages among themselves. Further, it did so without establishing a substantial and legitimate business justification for its policy; indeed, the Respondent offers no argument whatsoever that justification exists, relying instead, as did the judge, on the lack of showing that any employee felt inhibited by the Respondent's rule.

In assessing the lawfulness of the Respondent's rule, we are not concerned with the subjective impact of the rule on particular employees.[9] Instead, we must determine whether the rule reasonably tended to coerce employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights, and, if so, whether the employees' Section 7 rights are outweighed by any legitimate and substantial business justification for the rule.[10]

There can be little question that the Respondent's rule prohibiting employees from discussing their wages constitutes a clear restraint on employees' Section 7 right to engage in concerted activities for mutual aid and protection concerning an undeniably significant term of employment.[11] Since the Respondent has failed to establish any business justification for this restraint, it follows that its rule is unlawful.

5. In his supplemental decision, the judge found that the Respondent had not violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act when Faris required that employee White remove a union sign he had posted on the wall outside the plant lunchroom. The sign invited employees to talk with White if they were interested in forming a union. The judge found that the Respondent had permitted other employee notices to be posted on the wall, and that the Respondent's treatment of White's posting was disparate. The judge further found, however, that, under all the circumstances at this facility, "including the fact that 700 of its 750 employees are organized"; the fact that the incident was isolated and not communicated to or known by other employees; and that the Respondent's action was free of union animus, the Respondent's conduct constitutes a de minimis violation and need not be remedied by the posting of a Board notice. Again, we disagree.

Initially, we note that, contrary to the judge, the Respondent employs only about 50 employees at this facility and that they are not organized. The Respondent does have approximately 700 employees who are represented by a union, but those employees work at other jobsites, not at the fabrication plant involved here. As the Respondent itself states in its brief, "Waco's employees who work at the Newport News facility are not members of any bargaining unit."

Secondly, the legal standard applied by the judge in dismissing this allegation was erroneous. Union animus is an element in 8(a)(3) cases, but generally is not an element in 8(a)(1) cases. "It is too well settled to brook dispute that the test of interference, restraint, and coercion under Section 8(a)(1) of the Act does not depend on an employer's motive nor on the successful effect of the coercion. Rather, the illegality of an employer's conduct is determined by whether the conduct may reasonably be said to have a tendency to interfere with the free exercise of employee rights under the Act."[12] Accordingly, the absence of union animus on the part of the Respondent, assuming this to be shown by the record, would be irrelevant to the issue of whether the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1), and it was error for the judge to rely on this factor.

Finally, we do not agree with the judge's finding that the incident was so isolated as to vitiate the need for a Board notice. As noted above, the plant employed far fewer employees than the judge

[9] Daniel Construction Co., 264 NLRB 569 (1982)

[10] IBM, supra.

[11] Jeannette Corp., 217 NLRB 653 (1975), enfd. 532 F.2d 916 (3d Cir. 1976); Triana Industries, 245 NLRB 1258 (1979).

[12] Daniel Construction Co., supra.

found. Further, the sign which White was told to remove invited employees to begin discussions concerning the possibility of forming a union. Its removal had the effect of interfering not only with White, but also with other employees in the department whom White was lawfully attempting to reach with his message. Moreover, we have found that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) in at least two other respects, and, in all these circumstances, we reject the judge's characterization of this misconduct as "isolated."[13] Accordingly, we shall order that this unfair labor practice be remedied by the posting of an appropriate notice.[14]

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent unlawfully interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights, we shall order it to cease and desist therefrom, and to post an appropriate notice.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Waco, Inc. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By photographing employees as they lawfully and peacefully picketed outside the Respondent's Newport News, Virginia facility; by requiring the removal of an employee's poster relating to the formation of a union from the wall outside the lunchroom at the facility, contrary to its past practice of permitting employees to post material at the location; and by telling employees that they were not to discuss their wages with each other, the Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights and has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

[13] In his initial decision the judge found this issue was also untimely raised. We disagree. While the General Counsel did not raise the issue as a separate violation until his posthearing brief, it was clearly raised as an element of White's alleged unlawful discharge; it was fully litigated; and it sufficiently relates to other timely raised allegations under consideration. It could thus be considered by the judge.

[14] In his discussion of this issue, as elsewhere, the judge improperly relied on courts of appeals decisions instead of initially considering relevant Board decisions on the issues presented. And, on one issue, the judge relied on the dissent of a single Board member rather than on the Board majority in that decision. We emphasize that it is a judge's duty to apply established Board precedent which the Supreme Court has not reversed. Iowa Beef Packers, 144 NLRB 615, 616 (1963). It is for the Board, not the judge, to determine whether that precedent should be varied.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Waco, Inc., Newport News, Virginia, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Engaging in surveillance by photographing employees as they lawfully and peacefully picket outside the Respondent's facility.

(b) Telling employees not to discuss their wages with one another.

(c) Requiring employees to remove posters relating to the formation of a union or other protected concerted activity from areas in which employees are permitted to post other types of notices.

(d) In any like or related manner interfereing with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Post at its facility in Newport News, Virginia, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[15] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 5, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

MEMBER DENNIS, concurring in result.

I agree that the Respondent lawfully discharged the nine employees who engaged in the lunchroom sit-in, but I do not rely on my colleagues' rationale. The judge found that the employees in question gathered in the plant lunchroom instead of reporting to their work stations and demanded that Fabrication Department Manager Faris meet with them. Faris declined to meet with the group and, most significantly, gave the employees the option of returning to work or clocking out and leaving the premises. The employees chose neither alternative and continued to occupy the lunchroom until they were discharged.

[15] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Although this case lacks the violence that marked the sitdown strike in NLRB v. Fansteel Metallurgical Corp., 306 U.S. 240 (1939), the principle the Supreme Court established in Fansteel is equally applicable here: the Act does not protect employee refusals to yield possession of an employer's property. Once the employees were informed that they must work or leave the premises, they could no longer continue their lunchroom sit-in with immunity from employer discipline. On this basis, I concur in the dismissal of the complaint allegation that the nine employees were unlawfully discharged.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT engage in surveillance of employees by photographing them as they lawfully and peacefully picket outside our plant.

WE WILL NOT tell employees that they cannot discuss their wages with each other.

WE WILL NOT require employees to remove signs or posters concerning the formation of a union from the wall outside the lunchroom or any other area where employees are permitted to post notices.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WACO, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

WILLIAM A. GERSHUNY, Administrative Law Judge. A hearing was held on October 19–20, 1981, in Newport News, Virginia, on complaints issued March 23 and April 27, 1981, alleging violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

At issue principally is whether Respondent unlawfully discharged nine employees on January 9 and one employee on March 17, 1981.

On the entire record, including my observation of the witness' demeanor, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

I. JURISDICTION

The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and I find that Respondent, engaged in the manufacture of insulation materials with annual shipments of goods interstate in excess of $50,000, is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The United Steelworkers of America, which through its Local Union 15051 represents 700 of Respondent's employees some of whom are assigned to Respondent's Newport News facility, but which represents none of the employees involved in these cases, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The January 9, 1981 Discharge of Nine Employees

Respondent is engaged in the manufacture and installation of insulation materials. Its 700 employees, some of whom are assigned to Respondent's Newport News facility, are represented by the United Steelworkers. It employs approximately 50 unrepresented production and clerical employees at its Newport News facility. Involved in this case are nine of the 12–14 employees of the fabrication department at that plant.

At the time, the plant was engaged in the production of material for the Government under a contract which had a penalty clause for late delivery. Interruption of fabrication would affect the operation of the rest of the plant.

On January 9, 1981, between 10:30 and 11 a.m., nine fabrication department employees were discharged for refusing to work or leave the plant. The events preceding the discharges are brief, occurring between 7 and 11 a.m., and essentially are not in dispute.

When several of the employees reported to work that morning for the 7 a.m. shift, they became aware that one coemployee had been discharged for failure to have a medical slip and two others apparently had quit. There is no allegation or contention in this case that these terminations were violative of the Act. More than nine fabrication department employees gathered in the plant lunchroom to discuss their dissatisfaction with management. Some of the employees were called away from their work stations by others who went directly to the lunchroom after clocking in. The credible evidence is that all fabrication department employees were to report to their last work station at the beginning of each shift to await any new assignment by their supervisor. They were not to await the assignment in the lunchroom, as testified to by one or two of the employees.

The employees told Dimowski, their immediate supervisor, they wanted to meet with Faris, manager of the fabrication department. At 7:10 a.m., Faris was informed at home of the sit-in, came immediately to the plant, looked into the lunchroom, and went to his office. About 7:45 a.m., when Faris returned to the lunchroom the employees told him they wanted to meet with him in "our office," the lunchroom. He declined to meet with the group, but, according to his testimony which I credit, offered to meet with them in his office one-on-one or with one or more spokespersons "to discuss whatever problems that they might have" (Tr. 261), adding that "they had a choice of to get up and go to work or punch out and go home, leave the premises. And, if they went back to work, that my door was open and I would be happy to meet with them one-on-one" (Tr. 260, 299–300). I find, based on my observation of the witnesses, the manner in which their testimony was given, and their words used and my reading of the transcript, that at all times the employees were aware they were being given the option of returning to work with an opportunity then to meet with Faris or clocking out and leaving the plant. Faris then returned to his office and shortly thereafter one or two of the employees approached him again with a request for a meeting with the group in the lunchroom, but were told that his earlier offer stood.

Nine of the employees continued to occupy the lunchroom, their intent was best described by one of their spokespersons, Peggy King: "We were just going to sit there and thought Mr. Faris would change his mind and come to listen to what we had to say" (Tr. 349). She testified that, even after the employees had been sitting there for several hours and Faris continued in his refusal to meet with them en masse in the lunchroom, they gave no thought to what they would do next.

At approximately 10:30 a.m., when Faris and General Sales Manager Robbins found the employees still occupying the lunchroom, the employees were discharged, were given their regular payroll checks which had been received from company headquarters in Richmond for distribution at the plant later that day, and were told to leave the premises. They did so peacefully.

After requesting and obtaining the name and address of the Company president, they drove to Richmond and met as a group with President Walker at approximately 3 p.m. He inquired whether they would return to work with the "right attitude" and, when he received an affirmative answer, called the Newport News plant only to be informed that Faris, who had full authority, had indeed discharged the employees and already had replaced them by transferring employees from other shifts. Walker immediately arranged for checks to be issued to the nine employees for the current payroll period and they left peacefully.

The lunchroom is a small room set aside in the plant for all salaried and hourly employees of the clerical, fabrication, and warehouse departments. It contains food vending machines, a large table, and 12 chairs. Employees regularly use the room during rest and lunch breaks. While the fabrication department employees occupied the lunchroom on the morning of January 9, no other employees attempted to use it.

I credit the testimony of Faris and Robbins that employees in the lunchroom were sitting on the table, were laughing, joking, and talking at the same time, appeared to be disorganized and without a spokesperson, and never specifically identified their problem because of their inability to reach agreement with Faris on ground rules for a meeting. Admittedly, however, Faris and Robbins were aware that their concern related generally to their employment.

Finally, there is no evidence that the employees otherwise interfered with the Employer's ability to obtain replacements or to transfer other employees to operate the fabrication department machinery. Nor is there evidence of the existence of a written grievance procedure for fabrication department employees. No work areas other than the lunchroom were occupied and no other plant employees were asked or encouraged to join in the sit-in.

There is, of course, no question whatever that the fabrication department employees on the morning of January 9 were engaged in concerted activities within the meaning of Section 7 of the Act and that Respondent knew that the employees had a work-related grievance or grievances. The real issue is whether those activities were protected.

It is, of course, elemental labor law that a "concerted work stoppage and walkout by unrepresented employees for their mutual aid and protection is protected by Section 7 of the Act" and that "the employees had a right to protest the discharge of their fellow employee by appropriate means, including a strike." United M & M v. NLRB, 554 F.2d 1276 (4th Cir. 1977). Similarly, it is fundamental Board law, "dissatisfied employees cannot strike and maintain their pay status at the same time." Morris, The Developing Labor Law (1971).

Cone Mills Corp. v. NLRB, 413 F.2d 453 (4th Cir. 1969), is wholly dispositive of the issue here. In Cone, as here, certain employees were protesting an unrelated discharge of a fellow employee. In Cone, as here, the employees declined to use the established procedure for communicating their grievances. That the grievance procedure in Cone preexisted the work stoppage, while the one here was announced at the onset of the work stoppage, has no relevance. In Cone, as here, the employees gave no indication whatever when their work stoppage would terminate or when they would vacate the plant. Indeed, the employees here had no plans but to continue with their sit-in. In this respect, the employees maintained a defiant and rebellious attitude, seeking to establish for themselves the terms and conditions of employment. And, finally, in Cone, as here, a number of the protesting employees returned to their machines when requested to do so and were not discharged or otherwise disciplined for participating in the protest.

On the particular facts of this case, the views of Chairman Miller in dissent in Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co., 186 NLRB 477 (1970), are especially applicable: "[U]nder our Act, an employer is [not] precluded from ordering employees to leave the plant if they wish to protest rather than to work and from disciplining employees who, after warning, refuse to comply."

Accordingly, I conclude that, in discharging the nine employees of the fabrication department, Respondent did not violate the Act.

B. The March 17, 1981 Discharge of David White

On March 17, 1981, fabrication department employee White was terminated for excessive absenteeism. The General Counsel contends that the discharge was because of White's efforts to build employee interest in a union.

Published company policy concerning absenteeism, in relevant part, requires an employee to call his supervisor before working hours if "you have a need to be absent or late for any reason" and to have a "doctor's excuse" if "out sick for more than 1 full day." Company rules warn that "excessive absenteeism or tardiness may be reason for dismissal" and "THE PENALTY FOR BREAKING ANY OF THE ABOVE RULES CAN BE IMMEDIATE DISMISSAL OR HAVING A REPRIMAND SHEET PUT INTO YOUR RECORD. THREE OF THESE SHEETS COULD BE CAUSE FOR DISMISSAL." (G.C. Exh. 2).

On Tuesday, March 3, 1981, White, with permission of his supervisor, left work early due to illness. He was treated at a hospital emergency room on Thursday, March 5, and received a doctor's slip indicating he could return to work on Monday, March 9. On that day, however, he telephoned his supervisor saying that he "wouldn't be in" (Tr. 220); on Tuesday, he again told his supervisor he "still wouldn't be in" (Tr. 220); on Wednesday, March 11, he was treated at the emergency room and so informed the Company; on Thursday, March 12, he did not feel well and told his supervisor he was going to consult with his family doctor; on Friday, March 13, he called in to the plant and went to his family doctor who gave him an appointment for Monday, March 16; on that day, after calling in to the plant, he kept his medical appointment, but, according to his testimony, was refused treatment due to nonpayment of prior bills; and on Tuesday, March 17, when he reported to work, he was discharged by Fabrication Department Manager Faris for "excessive absenteeism." At this point, there is a conflict in the testimony. White testified that he told Faris he had doctor's slips with him and that Faris said there was no need for them. Faris, on the other hand, testified that White said he had such slips in his hand, but would not show them. This conflict need not be resolved, however, for the reason that, admittedly, the only slips White had were two: One, dated March 5, with a March 9 return-to-work date; the other, dated March 11, indicating treatment on that date, but nothing as to a return-to-work date. White had no doctor's slip accounting for his absences from work on Thursday, March 12; Friday, March 13; and Monday, March 16.

Faris testified that White missed more time than he worked and that White received more than one warning concerning his attendance. His personnel file, however, contained no written warnings, but, on the other hand, there was no evidence to indicate that written warnings were a part of the Company's regular procedures. White denied receiving any warnings, written or oral. In the fall of 1980, Faris had discharged White for refusal to perform an assigned job, but immediately rescinded the action when, at his urging, White reconsidered and performed the work. White did not dispute this incident.

In an attempt to show disparate treatment of White, the General Counsel introduced evidence that another employee, Claud, received only a written warning for lost time "because of illness." However, this proffer does not indicate the relevant circumstances or whether Claud violated the company rule requiring a doctor's excuse for medical absences. On the other hand, the General Counsel, in connection with the evidence relating to the January 9, 1981 sit-in, offered evidence that another employee, Crismon, had been discharged for failure to provide a doctor's excuse.

On March 3, the day White left early due to illness, he engaged in activity claimed to be protected concerted activity. More precisely, he had put up on the wall outside the lunchroom one or two hand-printed cardboard signs requesting coemployees to talk with him during the lunchbreak if they were interested in joining a union. There is a conflict in the testimony as to the number of signs that White had posted. White's account of two is not borne out by the photograph (G.C. Exh. 7) which shows only one. However, it is not important, for purposes of this case, to resolve that conflict. Later, during a meeting with Faris, which White requested to discuss a pay raise, Faris asked whether he or White was going to remove the sign from the wall. White stated that he would do so and, thereafter, the sign was removed and kept near White's work station. After lunch, White taped the sign to his chest. About 3 p.m., Robbins and Faris photographed White and the sign and ordered him to remove it from his person. Faris took the sign and left.

White's activities were undertaken entirely on his own. He had not contacted any particular union and there is no evidence whatever that he consulted with any other employee concerning the posting of his sign or that he discussed a union with any employee either before or after the sign was posted. Respondent took no disciplinary action against White expressly based on the posting or wearing of the sign.

Other material, unrelated in subject matter, was put up on the same wall by other employees: A picture of a frog, by a supervisor; a notice of a lost wallet; and farewell notes to outgoing employees. There were no company rules proscribing the posting of notices on the wall and such postings did not interfere with the operation of the plant. The evidence clearly indicates, and I find, that White's wearing of a cardboard sign on his chest while at his work station, interfered with the performance of his work and constituted a clear safety hazard. As the photograph indicates (G.C. Exh. 7), the cardboard sign is a rigid one, extending from midchest to groin. White's job entails bending to unpack cartons of material and feeding the material into moving equipment where it is consolidated and heat-treated. Had the cardboard sign become entangled in the machine, personal injury and property damage could have resulted. Company rules require employees on this operation to wear fitted clothing and the photograph indicates White was wearing a long-sleeved shirt with sleeves pushed up to his elbows.

Assuming without deciding that White's activities on March 3 constituted concerted activity within the meaning of Section 7 of the Act, I nevertheless conclude that such activities were not to any degree a motivating factor in the March 17 decision to discharge White. I conclude that the sole and exclusive reason for the discharge was White's admitted violation of the company rule concerning absenteeism.

A number of factors compel this conclusion. First, White was discharged immediately upon his return from an extended absence with no medical excuse. Second, although the Employer had ample time to do so during the period of March 3 to 17, it made no effort to discharge or otherwise discipline White as a result of the incident of March 3. Third, there is absolutely no evidence of any disparate treatment of employees. And, finally, there is absolutely no evidence of any antiunion sentiment on the part of the Employer. Indeed, as already pointed out, this Employer has a long bargaining history with a union which represents more than 93 percent of its employees.

Accordingly, I conclude that the March 17, 1981 discharge of David White did not violate the Act.

C. Photographing Pickets

On January 14 through 16, 1981, 5 days after they were discharged, some of the nine discharged employees picketed at or near the entrance to the Newport News plant. They were joined by at least two nonemployees. The evidence as to this alleged violation is undisputed.

The picketing was peaceful at all times and the pickets carried signs relating generally to employment grievances. Fabrication Department Manager Faris spoke with the pickets, asking them if they were represented and, if so, by whom. He also called the police, which thereafter observed the pickets, but did not interfere with their activities. On one occasion, Faris photographed the pickets. At no time were the pickets asked to move. Nor were they threatened, arrested, or otherwise interfered with. After 3 days, the pickets ceased their activities of their own accord.

The photographing of pickets by an employer does not constitute a per se violation of the Act. Where, as here, the photographing was noncoercive, nonthreatening, and unaccompanied by other unlawful activity on the part of the Employer, no violation is established.

In this respect, it is significant that the complaint does not allege and the General Counsel does not contend that Faris' questioning of the pickets or his calling for the presence of police is violative of the Act. The only assumption to be drawn is that such conduct, like that of photographing, was noncoercive under the circumstances.

D. Warnings not to Discuss Wages

The complaint alleges and the undisputed evidence establishes that, on a number of occasions in the fall of 1980, long before the January 9, 1981 discharge of the nine employees and the March 17, 1981 discharge of White, Fabrication Department Manager Faris and other supervisors told employees not to discuss their individual wages with one another. The reason for the instruction: The earnings of each fabrication department employee were different, due to differences in seniority and the Company's policy of considering pay raises on an individual basis. I find that Respondent made no threats to discharge or otherwise discipline employees for a violation of this instruction and, in this connection, I cannot credit King's testimony to the contrary, as it is unreliable and unsupported by the testimony of any other employee who gave testimony on this subject.

Under the circumstances here, such instructions are not violative of the Act. No employee testified that the instruction inhibited them in the exercise of protected activity. Indeed, they had no such inhibitions on January 9, 1981, when they engaged in a sit-in at the plant. Apart from the instructions, the record is free of any antiunion sentiment on the part of the employer, as noted above.

E. Posthearing Motion to Amend

In a footnote to his posthearing brief filed more than 4 weeks after the close of the record in this case, the General Counsel seeks to amend the complaint to allege a violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act based on Respondent's admitted instruction to David White to remove a sign he posted on the wall outside the lunchroom and further seeks that a violation be found by me. Admittedly, the complaint alleges no such violation, despite the General Counsel's full knowledge of the facts at all relevant times.

Neither I nor Respondent was aware that the General Counsel offered evidence relating to the sign in support of an independent violation of the Act. On the contrary, it was obvious that the evidence was offered to establish the "real" motive for White's discharge. Of course, Respondent did not brief the issue of an independent violation. Under the circumstances of this case, where there is a total absence of antiunion sentiment on the part of the Employer and where the violation, if found, would be a technical, isolated one at best, the requests will be denied.

F. Photographing White with Sign

The General Counsel contends that the photographing of White while wearing the rigid, cardboard sign on his chest while at his work station constituted a violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, likening this case, remarkably, to one involving the wearing of a union insignia. Bearing in mind always that the protection of concerted activities in the workplace enjoys equal—but not paramount—status with the goals of industrial safety, this allegation must be dismissed for the reason that White's taping a cardboard sign to his chest, under the circumstances, constituted a clear hazard both to his personal safety and to the Respondent's equipment.

[Recommended Order for dismissal omitted from publication.]

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint be dismissed.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION

WILLIAM A. GERSHUNY, Administrative Law Judge. By Order of December 3, 1982, the Board directed that the findings set forth in my decision of December 21, 1981, be supplemented in the two following respects.

1. Paragraph 4(b) of the complaint in Case 5–CA–13122: The relevant credible facts surrounding these allegations are set forth at pages 6 (LL. 30, et seq.) and 7 (LL. 1–10) and will not be repeated here.

Throughout, in my decision of December 21, 1981, and here, I have credited the testimony of Faris over that of the employees. Based on my observations of the demeanor of all the witnesses during the course of this 2-day hearing, as reflected in trial notes contemporaneously made, I was of the opinion that Faris, whose testimony was clear and convincing, reported the events most accurately. On the other hand, White and other employees left with me the clear impression that their recall of events was, to a large extent, tailored to meet the litigation. I was neither impressed with their testimony, nor convinced that it portrayed the events accurately. Thus, I am unable to find that Faris said anything more of substance than "who would take down the signs, you or me." More specifically, I find that there was no discussion between Faris and White concerning the distribution of literature, the conduct of meetings or discussions with other employees during lunch break. Moreover, I find that there was no threat of discharge or discipline. That leaves only the Faris request that White remove the signs from the wall, while permitting, on a limited number of occasions, other employee notices of a personal or humorous nature. Board precedent is clear that such disparate treatment is violative of the Act. Midwest Stock Exchange, 244 NLRB 1108, 1116 (1979); Stanley Furniture Co., 244 NLRB 589 (1979).

However, considering the circumstances at this plant as a whole, including the fact that 700 of its 750 employees are organized—and even taking into account dissimilar violations which occurred 6 years earlier on another unrelated jobsite, NLRB v. Waco Insulation, 567 F.2d 596 (4th Cir. 1977)—I find the March 3 incident relating to the posting of the signs to be an isolated and minimal one, not communicated to, or known by, other plant employees and free of union animus. In my opinion, effectuation of the purposes of the Act, under the circumstances here, does not require the posting of a notice. Cf. NLRB v. Brooks Cameras, 691 F.2d 912 (9th Cir. 1982).

2. The conflicting testimony of Faris and White concerning medical excuses: The relevant credible facts are set forth on page 6 (LL. 1–5), but the conflict was not resolved there.

For reasons set forth in paragraph 1, above, I credit the testimony of Faris that White refused to show him the medical slips which White said he had in his hand. There is yet another reason why I am compelled to reject his testimony in this regard: it is highly unlikely that White would have produced the excuses since he knew (a) they did not in fact account for his absences on the 3 workdays immediately preceding his return to work and (b) he was in violation of the Respondent's absentee policy and subject to immediate discharge thereunder.[1]

[1] As indicated in the Board's Order of December 3, 1982, Sec. 102.48 of the Board's Rules and Regulations shall be applicable following service of this Supplemental Decision.

Shin Nihon Kosan, Inc. d/b/a Shogun Restaurant and Kathy Masaoka. Case 31-CA-12304

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

On 14 September 1983 Administrative Law Judge Earldean V. S. Robbins issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order.

Our dissenting colleague contends that the judge erred in relying on statements allegedly made by the Respondent's president Kanenobu in his prehearing affidavit, finding them more reliable than his contrary and inconsistent testimony at the hearing. The record demonstrates, however, that the judge is correct.

Kanenobu used an interpreter at the hearing, but he testified that he spoke English when he gave his affidavit to the Board agent. He also testified that after the Board agent had finished taking his statement, Kanenobu initialed each of the pages, attested that he had read and understood its contents, and "certified that it was true and correct to the best of [his] knowledge." In addition, he requested and received a copy of the affidavit, but did not then or later notify the Board agent that it contained any errors. At the hearing Kanenobu read a portion of the affidavit aloud, finding difficulty only with the words which the judge found were illegible. In short, Kanenobu can speak and read English, and had ample time and opportunity to correct or clarify those portions of the affidavit which allegedly contained errors. Accordingly, we find no grounds for impugning the authenticity of the affidavit.

Our dissenting colleague contends that the judge erred in crediting Takee's testimony without making specific findings concerning employee Yuka's testimony that Takee offered her a bribe to give testimony at the hearing. Takee denied having made this offer. In footnote 19 of her decision the judge rejected the Respondent's argument that Takee's testimony was not credible and based on her observation of the demeanor of the witnesses and the entire record, the judge discredited the Respondent's witnesses' testimony and credited Takee's testimony where they conflicted. Thus, as Yuka's testimony is part of the entire record, the judge implicitly discredited Yuka's testimony with respect to the alleged bribe. See, e.g., Kimball Tire Co., 240 NLRB 343, 344 fn. 5 (1979).

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Shin Nihon Kosan, Inc. d/b/a Shogun Restaurant, Pasadena, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

MEMBER HUNTER, dissenting.

The findings in this case rest largely on the credibility of alleged discriminatee Voravan Takee. The Respondent's witness Hyon-ChaCha (Yuka) testified that Takee attempted to bribe her to give testimony, the clear implication being that such testimony was to be favorable to Takee's interests. Takee denied this, but the administrative law judge made no attempt to resolve the credibility of this serious allegation. In the absence of such resolution, the propriety of the judge's overall crediting of Takee over other witnesses is necessarily cast in doubt. On such an important matter, which needs a specific resolution, I would not rely as my colleagues do on the judge's summary credibility comment at footnote 19 of her decision. Moreover, the comment at footnote 19, read in proper context, appears to be a resolution of credibility between the Respondent's witness Kajino and four employees, including Takee, as to whether Kajino told the employees that Takee was fired for her participation in a walkout. That resolution has nothing to do with the issue of whether Takee bribed Yuka. Takee's attempted bribery of a witness impliedly to

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

We note the following minor errors in the administrative law judge's decision: (1) It is not "undisputed" that Takee became head waitress in March 1982; the record indicates that she most likely became head waitress in February 1982; (2) Kanenobu, the Respondent's president, stated in his prehearing affidavit that one of the reasons he considered Takee to be a bad waitress was that she changed schedules without permission, not with permission; (3) employee Kondo testified that Takee was told about her discharge by the Respondent's manager Kajino, not by assistant manager Chijiwa; and (4) Takee's health card shows that she had family coverage in November 1981, not December. We find that these errors do not affect the validity of the judge's conclusions.

[2] In her conclusions the judge inadvertently found that the Respondent's discharge of Takee on 1 June 1982 violated Sec. 8(a)(3) as well as Sec. 8(a)(1).

fabricate testimony would cast such a deep shadow over her own credibility as a witness that the judge's failure to rule on whether or not it occurred is fatal to any reliance on her testimony.

In addition, the judge erred in relying on statements allegedly made by the Respondent's president Kanenobu in an affidavit as being "more reliable" than his contrary testimony at the hearing. Kanenobu testified through an interpreter. Describing the affidavit, which was given in English, Kanenobu said that he did not read it before he signed it; that he was told to sign it so he did; and that he did not understand what was written. When asked whether he had sworn to its veracity, he responded that he did not understand that well. When asked to read a position of his affidavit in English, he did not read it verbatim. The General Counsel himself described Kanenobu's reading as simply the "essence" of what the affidavit stated. Kanenobu was unable to read two phrases of the affidavit but the judge concluded that this resulted from the illegibility of the handwriting and not from any inability to read English. However, Kanenobu was never asked if this was the reason for his difficulty. In these circumstances, I am not satisfied that the affidavit was properly relied on.[1]

Because the judge's error in failing to resolve the question of Takee's bribery attempt has a major impact on her general crediting of Takee, and as her error concerning Kanenobu's affidavit reflects to some extent on her overall credibility findings, I would remand the case to the judge for the making and reviewing of such credibility findings as may be necessary consistent with the foregoing.

[1] My colleagues indicate that Kanenobu testified that at the time the affidavit was taken he had attested that he understood its contents. While Kanenobu signed the affidavit with its attestation clause, he testified that he had not read that clause before he signed the affidavit. Further, in view of the above, it is unclear whether he understood the clause.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

EARLDEAN V. S. ROBBINS, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was heard before me in Los Angeles, California, on various dates in April and June 1983. The charge was filed by Kathy Masaoka, an individual, on July 7, 1982, and a copy thereof was served on Shin Nihon Kosan, Inc. d/b/a Shogun Restaurant (Respondent), on July 12, 1982. The complaint, which issued on April 5, 1983, alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act). The basic issue herein is whether Voravan Takee is a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act and, if not, whether she was discharged for participating in a protected concerted walkout of employees.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the brief filed by Respondent, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

At all times material herein, Respondent, a California corporation with an office and principal place of business in Pasadena, California, has been engaged in the business of operating a restaurant. Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operation, annually derives gross revenue in excess of $500,000 and annually purchases and receives goods or services valued in excess of $10,000 from sellers or suppliers located within the State of California, which sellers or suppliers receive such goods in substantially the same form directly outside the State of California.

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that Respondent is now, and at all times material herein has been, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE SUPERVISORY STATUS OF VORAVAN TAKEE

A. Facts

At the times material herein Respondent's employee complement consisted of 6 cooks and 2 dishwashers who worked under the supervision of Head Takayoshi Nakagawa; 12 waitresses and 6 busboys whose supervision is in dispute; the hostess, the host, the bartender, the barboy, 2 cocktail waitresses, 2 cashiers and 2 sushi chefs who worked under the supervision of Assistant Manager Morihito Chijiwa.

Takee began work for Respondent as a waitress in February 1981. In June 1981 she left Respondent's employ. According to her, she quit. According to Respondent's president Sadaki Kanenobu, he discharged her because she did not have sufficient experience. Thereafter, Respondent rehired Takee. According to Kanenobu, she was rehired because Respondent needed a waitress and because he had heard that in the interim she had been working at Horikawa's Restaurant and that Horikawa was very strict in its training. Consequently, he thought that by this time Takee should be a good waitress. Takee testified that she was away from Respondent's employ for only a week. Kanenobu testified it was about 3 months. The parties later stipulated that Takee's break in service was no more than 2 weeks.[1]

It is undisputed that Takee became head waitress in March 1982,[2] that Respondent announced such to the other waitresses, and that her name was posted, along with those of the two office employees, the manager, the assistant manager, and the head chef, as one who was permitted access to the office. However, the testimony is in conflict as to her duties and authority as head waitress.

[1] Kanenobu and Takee testified in this regard prior to a 3-week recess in the hearing herein. The stipulation was entered into after the recess.

[2] All dates hereinafter will be in 1982 unless otherwise indicated.

As evidence of Takee's supervisory status, Respondent introduced into evidence minutes of a January 9, 1982 meeting attended by Respondent's president, manager, assistant manager, and maitre d'. Kanenobu, Respondent's president, testified that the chart depicts the organizational structure of the restaurant as discussed at this meeting which he describes as the annual front meeting.[3] According to him, this was the management structure implemented when the restaurant opened and thereafter reconfirmed the first of each year. The chart shows three department heads reporting directly to the manager—the head chef, the assistant manager, and the head waitress. Reporting to the head chef are the cooks and dishwashers. Reporting to the assistant manager are the cashiers, the bar personnel, and the front personnel. Reporting to the head waitress are the busboys and waitresses.

Kanenobu testified that the head chef and the assistant manager had the authority to hire and fire employees only in their respective departments, the head waitress had the authority to recommend the hiring and firing of busboys and waitresses, and that he thinks Takee recommended that Pepe Castillon, the head busboy, be terminated. He then testified that Takee actually terminated Pepe for thievery without any prior investigation by him or Manager Kajino. Kanenobu also testified that Kajino had the authority to hire and fire all employees without first consulting with Kanenobu. However, his prehearing affidavit states that Kajino had such authority only with regard to part-time employees, that he can hire and fire full-time employees only in an emergency.

Kanenobu testified that the duties of the head chef were to administer and instruct his subordinates, to order food, and that he had the authority to discipline kitchen employees and to make their schedules. The duties of the assistant manager were to substitute for the manager in his absence, and to administer and supervise the cashiers, the bar personnel, the front personnel, and the sushi chefs. The duties of the head waitress were to supervise her 18 subordinates. Specifically, he testified, one of her important responsibilities was the training of new waitresses; and she had the authority to discipline waitresses and busboys and to change their schedules. Kanenobu also testified that the bar manager was responsible for training the barboy and the cocktail waitresses and the head busboy was responsible for training the busboys.

According to Kanenobu, the wages and salaries of restaurant personnel were: manager—$1800 a month; assistant manager—$1600 a month; head chef—$1200 a month; maitre d'—$900 a month; cashier $3.35 to $4 an hour; head waitress— $3.60 an hour plus tips; cooks—$750 to $900 a month; hostess—$3.75 an hour; bar manager—$5.75 to $6 an hour; head busboy—$3.60 an hour; bartender—$5.25 or $5.50 an hour plus tips; barboy—$3.35 an hour plus a portion of the bartender's tips; sushi chefs—$1100 a month; and waitresses—$3.35 an hour, plus tips.

Kanenobu testified that the maitre d', the cashiers, the cooks, and the waitresses who worked a minimum of 30 hours a week and had completed the 3 months' probationary period are entitled to receive health insurance covering the employee and his or her spouse. He later testified that waitresses were entitled to health insurance after 6 months. Further, according to Kanenobu, only the manager, assistant manager, head chef, and head waitress are entitled to health insurance covering their children as well as their spouses and that no other employees receive such additional coverage. On direct examination, Kanenobu testified, in regard to when Takee began receiving this additional insurance, "I think we began to cover her entire family after she became the head waitress." On cross-examination, he testified that she received the additional coverage in January before she became head waitress. According to him, at that point he had decided to make her head waitress. He did not explain why, if the decision was made in January and the former head waitress quit in January, Takee did not become head waitress until March.

Takee testified that she has had coverage for her spouse and children since November 1981, and in support thereof the General Counsel offered into evidence her health plan card indicating family coverage as of November 1981.

Kanenobu admits that, although she receives a slightly higher rate of pay than the other waitresses, Takee received this raise in pay in December 1981 at the same time that the former head waitress received a raise. Takee testified she received the wage increase in either December 1981 or in January 1982. According to her undenied testimony, Kajino called her and Noriko, another waitress, into the cocktail lounge and told them, "Both of you going to get increase. Just please help to train the new waitress."[4]

Kajino testified that when Takee was promoted to head waitress toward the end of February he explained to her what her duties and responsibilities would be. According to him, he told her she was to train the new waitresses, make the weekly schedules for the waitresses, make the daily assignments as to tables each waitress would service, and relay directions or requests from the kitchen to the waitresses. He further testified he told her if she was dissatisfied with the performance of any new waitresses as she was training, she could terminate them. He posted a written announcement near the timecards of the date she would become head waitress. Also, at the monthly waitress meeting held on the first Saturday in February, he announced to the waitresses that Takee had been promoted to head waitress and that when she directed them to do something they were to listen to her and follow her instructions.

Kajino admits that 90 percent of the time Takee worked the same number of stations, referred to as "teppans," as did the other waitesses. However, according to Kajino, he told Takee that from time to time she should not work any teppans so she could observe what the other waitresses were doing and instruct them as to what needed to be done. He also testified that Takee was permitted to use the office, whereas the other waitresses could not do so. Further, according to him, she disciplined waitresses. However, the only instance of discipline that he related was one occasion when he asked waitress Hyon-ChaCha, also known as Yuka, why she was crying, and Yuka said she had been scolded by Takee.

[3] The front employees are the maitre d' or host and the hostess.

[4] There is no evidence as to whether Noriko, in fact, received a wage increase at that time.

As to the termination of head busboy Pepe, Kajino testified, "she [Takee] said to me, 'I saw Pepe taking tips from the table, so I'm going to have him terminated.' I just nodded and said, yes . . . . On that same day she came to me and said she had fired him." When asked what exactly she said, he first testified she said, "I had Pepe quit." Then he testified she said, "I fired Pepe." Kajino further testified that he did not speak to Pepe before he was fired nor did he investigate prior to the termination to determine if Pepe had in fact been stealing tips.

Takee testified that her sole additional responsibility as head waitress was to relay to the waitresses orders and requests from management and the kitchen. According to her undenied testimony this type of liaison was necessary because the waitresses worked different shifts and it was easier for management or the chefs to give instructions and requests to one waitress who could ensure that each waitress received the information. Further, she testified, without contradiction, that the cooks had been complaining prior to her becoming head waitress that there was no one to perform this function.[5] She denies that any member of management ever specifically explained to her what her duties and responsibilities would be as head waitress and testified that she first learned she was the new head waitress at the monthly waitress meeting. At that time, Assistant Manager Morihito Chijiwa announced that from then on Takee would be head waitress.[6]

Takee denies that she was in charge of the busboys or that she told anyone she saw Pepe, the head busboy, stealing tips or that she discharged Pepe. She also denies that she made out the schedule or made assignments of, or changes as to previously assigned, work stations. According to her, the schedules were prepared by Kajino or Chijiwa, as were station assignments. She admits that she trained new waitresses, but testified that she did this both before and after she became head waitress and denies that either Kajino or Chijiwa ever asked her to report on the performance of any waitress she trained. Also, she had access to the office both before and after she became head waitess for the sole purpose of obtaining uniforms for the waitresses she was training. Kajino admits that Takee trained new waitresses before she became head waitress. She denies that she had authority to grant time off or that she relayed requests for time off to management. According to her, the waitresses went directly to Kajino or Chijiwa to request time off.

Employee Diane Yoa[7] testified that when she wanted time off she requested it from Kajino or Chijiwa. Also, she contacted them directly if she was going to be late or absent. However, Yuka testified that about June she asked Takee if she could leave about 30 minutes early, and Takee immediately gave her permission to do so. Takee was not questioned in this regard. Yuka also testified that on one occasion, when she wished to change her day off, she asked Takee to change her schedule and Takee did do.

Further, according to Yuka, Takee changed her work station on one occasion. However, in this regard, she testified that Takee came to her and asked if they could change work stations because she could not tolerate the customer's perfume. As to the change in her day off, Yuka does not recall whether Takee simply exchanged days off with her. She did not ask Takee to exchange. She simply requested that she be allowed to change her day off that week and Takee said she could. Yuka further testified that, when one of the waitresses who was to work with Takee on the late shift did not come in, Takee "asked me if I could stay late with her or not. And I answered, okay, I'll stay late."

Of the three waitresses who testified, Kondo did not testify with regard to Takee's supervisory status, Yuka testified that Takee was her supervisor, and Yoa testified that she did not consider Takee as her immediate superior, but rather so considered Kajino. However, in Yoa's prehearing affidavit, she stated, "My immediate supervisor was the head waitess, Rose Takee."

Yuka testified that Takee has disciplined her and that she has observed Takee disciplining other employees. When asked what she observed, she testified that when one of the new waitresses was putting garnishes on a cocktail glass, Takee shouted at her, "That's the wrong garnish." She also testified that she observed Takee disciplining Pepe by telling him to pick up various things from, or place things on, tables. She admits that she, Yuka, and other waitresses also told busboys to clean tables. However, according to her, when she did so, she was requesting; when Takee did it, Takee did not say "please," but was ordering. Yuka further testified that Takee disciplined her, that she scolded her frequently. The only specific incident to which she testified was once in the locker room when Takee scolded her and told the other three waitresses present that Yuka was a bad waitress.

When Yuka was asked what she meant when she testified that Takee disciplined waitresses, she testified, "[S]he let the new waitresses carry everything. And she just was watching behind the new waitress." When asked if she considered that discipline, she answered, "Yes." She admits that Takee did the same thing when she trained new waitresses prior to becoming head waitress. She also testified that, after Takee became head waitress, other waitresses assisted in the training of new waitresses.

B. Conclusions

For reasons set forth more fully below, I do not credit Kanenobu and Kajino as to their conversations with Takee regarding her supervisory status or as to her supervisory authority or as to statements at the May 29

[5] The request relayed between the cooks and waitresses had to do with things such as use of proper abbreviations when writing an order.

[6] Yuka testified that Kajino announced at the meeting that Takee would be head waitress and would be in charge of all the waitresses and busboys.

[7] Yoa left Respondent's employ on June 13 or 15.

meeting regarding her authority to discharge employees, nor does other evidence establish such authority. Contrary to Respondent's argument, I do not find the document, containing the organizational chart which is alleged as minutes of the annual front meeting, to be a reliable indication that Takee was considered to be one of Respondent's three department heads on an organizational level with the assistant manager and the head chef.

I do not credit Kanenobu's and Kajino's characterization of that meeting as an annual meeting of front employees. In that regard, I note that the minutes indicate nothing identifiable as "front" problems or concerns. Further, neither Kanenobu nor Kajino explained why Respondent's organizational structure would be reaffirmed in a meeting with one "front" employee and was not stated to other employees. In the circumstances, I conclude that the document is not what it purports to be, and cannot be relied on to establish Takee's placement in the management and supervisory hierarchy.

Also, I find that Takee's wage rate belies the assertions that she was on the same level as the head chef and the assistant manager, whose supervisory authority is undisputed. Thus, the 25-cent-an-hour differential between her rate of pay and that of other waitresses is more comparable to the differential of 25 cents an hour and 50 cents an hour received by the head busboy and bar manager, respectively, who are not department heads and whose sole responsibility with regard to other employees appears to be training, than it is to the more than $500- and more than $300-a-month differential received by the assistant manager and head chef, respectively.

The only other evidence supporting Respondent's contention that Takee was a supervisor is the testimony of Yuka that Takee disciplined waitresses, directed waitresses and busboys in the performance of their duties, changed work assignments, and changed scheduled days off. Yuka's testimony clearly does not encompass any conduct which could be considered as either discipline or responsible direction. Thus, her instructions to busboys were admittedly no different than the instructions that Yuka herself gave to busboys. That Takee may not have been particularly polite is not an indicia of supervisory authority. Similarly, the instructions or observations as to errors made to other waitresses is consistent with her role as trainer. The one occasion involving a change of work station appears to have been a favor between two waitresses.

Also, I conclude that the change in Yuka's day off and the request that she remain with Takee for 30 additional minutes, on an occasion when the second late shift waitress was absent, was nothing more than an informal accommodation between two waitresses or, at most, an isolated overstepping of her authority. In this regard I note that, despite his testimony, which was denied by Takee, that Takee prepared the schedules, in his prehearing affidavit Kanenobu stated that one of the reasons he considered Takee to be a bad head waitress was that she changed schedules without permission.

I further note the testimony of Takee, Yoa, and Kondo that waitress dissatisfaction with scheduling was one of the complaints made at the May 29 meeting and Takee's testimony, which I credit, that Kanenobu promised that preparation of the schedule would be transferred from Chijiwa to Kajino. If Takee, in fact, prepared the schedule, there would have been no reason for Takee and the other waitresses to include this complaint in a list of grievances which were clearly directed, in large part, toward Chijiwa. Further, if Takee actually had the supervisory authority claimed by Respondent and if Chijiwa supervised only the front, bar, and sushi employees, there would have been no reason for waitresses to complain about Chijiwa.

In all of the circumstances, I credit Takee's denial that she possessed and/or exercised the various indicia of supervisory authority as contended by Kanenobu and Kajino or that she was ever told that she possessed such. I further find that her duties and responsibilities in training other waitresses and in being an information conduit from management and kitchen personnel to the waitresses do not establish that she possessed supervisory authority, Poor Richard's Pub, 220 NLRB 1363 (1975).[8]

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

During the period of March, April, and May, the waitresses became upset over working conditions and began to discuss their dissatisfactions among themselves. During the latter part of May, after they were informed that Respondent would no longer furnish cream and sugar for their coffee, the waitresses began considering taking some action to improve their working conditions. On Friday, May 28, they discussed their various dissatisfactions with working conditions and what they should do about it. They first decided they should walk out that evening. They then decided that they should wait until after their regular monthly meeting with management which was scheduled for the following day.

On Saturday, May 29, about 1 to 2 hours before the regularly scheduled meeting with management, about eight of the waitresses, including Takee, met at a nearby restaurant. They made up a list of their complaints and decided that waitress Jennifer Lee would be their spokesperson in presenting these complaints to management. They further decided, if management did not like it or disagreed or would not respond, they would walk out. Among the complaints they listed were the posting by management of notices, considered by the waitresses to be derogatory, on the door to, and inside of, the waitresses' changing room regarding their personal grooming habits; the new requirement that they schedule a week in advance the meals they planned to eat in the restaurant; and the new requirement that they be tested as to their knowledge of cocktails.

Also included in their list of complaints was the change in the tip system from one where all tips were deposited into one box to be divided among the waitresses and other employees[9] to a system which retained the [8] In reaching this conclusion, I have fully considered the cases cited by Respondent and find them to be distinguishable.

[9] Tips are shared with management and front personnel, sushi chefs, bar personnel, kitchen personnel, and busboys.

pooling feature but which would have each waitress deposit her tips in a separate box, the amount of which would be considered by management as a factor in determining the quality of a waitress' job performance; the changes in work schedules which had resulted in a cut in hours for some employees; the requirement that waitresses make up any deficit if they undercharged a customer whereas Respondent would retain any overage; and the requirement that waitresses clean the soup and hot water urns.

About 3:35 or 3:40 p.m. that day, Kajino, Chijiwa, and the head chef, Nakagawa, met with the waitresses. There is no dispute about much of what was said at the meeting.[10] Kajino commenced the meeting by chiding the waitresses for arriving late. Lee said they were late because they wanted to have a special meeting and they wanted Kanenobu to be present. Kajino said it was not necessary for Kanenobu to be present and he might not be present. Lee said they needed Kanenobu there. At that point, Kanenobu walked in.

Kajino then distributed a tip chart showing the amount of tips each waitress had received and explained that tips indicate whether a waitress was giving good service and that this was a means of helping an individual waitress recognize whether her service was good, or whether she needed to improve. The reaction of the waitresses to this was generally hostile. Takee, in particular, was rather vocal. Kanenobu then asked each of the waitresses her opinion of the tip charts. After they all responded negatively, Kanenobu instructed Kajino to stop preparing the tip charts.

The waitresses mentioned not being furnished cream for their coffee. Kondo, Takee, and Yoa testified that they discussed their concerns with the work schedule, complaining that Respondent was unfairly cutting the number of hours some waitresses worked, and regarding the uncertainty as to when they would be working. Kajino testified that he does not think any scheduling problems were discussed, but he does not recall. Kanenobu does not specifically deny that scheduling problems were discussed; however, his account of the meeting does not include any mention of scheduling.

The principal difference in the various accounts of this meeting is the testimony of Kanenobu and Kajino regarding an interchange between Kajino and Takee, which none of the employee witnesses included in their accounts. Kanenobu testified that during Kajino's explanation as to the purpose of the tip charts, Kajino mentioned how bad the service had become and said the responsibility was with the head waitress. Takee denied this and said the responsibility was that of the waitresses, that they were not well trained. Kajino said that was because Takee's training was bad. Takee said there were so many new waitresses that it was difficult to train them all at one time. Takee then became excited and said,"Well then, is it all right for me to fire the employees." Kajino said, "Well, naturally, of course."

It was at this point that Kanenobu interrupted and said he would poll each waitress as to whether she wanted the tip system changed. Kajino testified in general corroboration of Kanenobu as to the interchange between him and Takee. According to him, when he insisted that she was responsible for the recurring mistakes of the new waitresses, Takee said, "Well, if that is my responsibility, then is it all right to fire the waitress who makes the same mistakes." Kajino said, "Of course, you could do that."

About 4:30 p.m., the time for the early shift to prepare to commence work, Kanenobu said it was time to go to work. The waitresses said they had a number of things to discuss. Takee suggested that she, Lee, and Yoa remain to continue the discussion and that the other waitresses begin work, which they did. Kanenobu suggested that they continue the discussion in the office. The three waitresses went to the office but neither Kanenobu, Kajino, nor Chijiwa came in.

Shortly thereafter Takee and Lee reported to the other waitresses that Kanenobu did not come in to talk to them. They decided to walk out immediately and had commenced doing so when one of the chefs advised that they should first change out of their uniforms. They then went to the changing room. Both Kajino and Morihito came to the changing room door and attempted to persuade them to return to work. A commitment was made to continue the discussions. All of the waitresses except Lee and Takee returned to work.[11]

Lee and Takee then went to the office. Kanenobu said he would meet with the waitresses regarding their complaints, but he wanted to speak to Kajino first. They agreed to meet in a nearby restaurant that evening after work, which they did. Present at the meeting were all of the waitresses who had worked that day, Kanenobu, and Nakagawa.[12] Much of what occurred at this meeting is undisputed. Kanenobu apologized, saying he was busy with another restaurant and had not realized the situation. He had Kondo, who speaks both English and Japanese fluently, read a letter of apology he had written. Kondo testified that the letter requested that Chijiwa be given another chance, stating that Chijiwa did not understand a lot of American ways but he was willing to learn and further stated that the schedules would be redone.

Yoa testified in general agreement except her account includes no mention of redoing the schedule. Takee testified in generalities that the letter explained how Kanenobu was feeling, that he understood them and requested that they understand him, and that they forgive management's attitude toward them. As to the schedule, Takee testified that Kanenobu said in the future Kajino would prepare the schedule instead of Chijiwa. Takee also testified that someone asked if any of them would be discharged because of the situation; to which Kanenobu replied, "Why should I? Just go back to work, and I promise you will be happy."

[10] Except as otherwise indicated, this account of the meeting is a composite of the testimony of all the witnesses which I find more accurately reflects what occurred.

[11] They were away from work about 20 minutes.

[12] According to Nakagawa, Kanenobu asked him why he was present and Nakagawa replied that the waitresses had requested that he attend the meeting.

Both Nakagawa and Yoa testified that Kanenobu said they had discovered the person who was stealing tips[13] and that person was no longer in Respondent's employ. According to Nakagawa, this was in response to a question. However, Kondo and Takee testified that nothing was said at this particular meeting regarding the stealing of tips. Further, in the account of this meeting given in Yoa's prehearing affidavit dated July 29, there is no mention of any remarks regarding tip stealing.

Kanenobu testified that in the letter Kondo read, he stated that Chijiwa had only recently come from Japan and was not very proficient in English but he wanted to improve the business and perhaps some of the employees had taken it the wrong way. Kanenobu further stated in this letter that what Chijiwa was saying was not wrong, and Kanenobu hoped they would try to understand Chijiwa's English and give him an opportunity to improve his language so he could communicate better.

Takee did not work on the following day, May 30. She did work on June 1. According to her, at the end of her shift Kajino told her he was sorry, he would have to fire her because of the walkout on Saturday. He said as head waitress, Takee had responsibility for that, so he would have to fire her. Takee said, "but I asked the waitresses to go back to work." Kajino replied, "Yes, but you should not have let it happen at all." Kajino then said that, personally, he liked Takee a lot but he had to discharge her because of the walkout.

Kondo testified that later that same evening when she went into the changing room, she saw Takee kneeling down. She asked her what was the matter? Takee said Chijiwa fired her. Kondo asked why. Takee said Chijiwa felt that she was responsible for the walkout and she was fired for that reason. On the following day according to Kondo, she telephoned Kajino and told him she could no longer work in an environment where Takee could not be present. Kajino said the only reason Takee was discharged was because she was the head waitress and she was responsible for the walkout. He said even if someone else had been the head waitress that person would have been discharged.

Yoa testified that on June 2 she and another waitress asked Kajino why Takee was discharged. Kajino replied that she was discharged because she was head waitress and was responsible for the walkout. He said when someone was hired into management Respondent wanted that person to help Respondent, not go against Respondent in any way, and if anything was wrong to let management know first so it could figure out some way to solve the problem. He said it was for that reason only, that personally Takee was a very nice person and very honest, but they had to let her go because of the walkout.

Nakagawa testified that he was discharged on June 13. Kajino told him he was discharged because most of the chefs at the restaurant did not want to work with him. During the course of their conversation, which lasted more than an hour, Nakagawa asked why Takee was discharged. According to him, Kajino replied that the reason he had to fire Takee was because, as head waitress, they wanted her to take the responsibility for the walkout, for damaging Respondent's image. Kajino further said that Nakagawa had also participated, that he had been seen talking to the waitresses, agitating them to engage in the walkout.[14]

Kanenobu testified that Takee was discharged for two reasons: one, service had deteriorated, which meant that Takee was unable to lead or guide the other waitresses; and, two, Takee had been stealing tips. According to him, on May 30, he met with chefs Okhawa and Hiroyuki Matsuura.[15] Matsuura said if present conditions continued, he and Okhawa did not wish to remain in Respondent's employ. Kanenobu asked what the situation was. Matsuura said, "You have a terrible head waitress and a terrible head chef. Kanenobu asked what he meant. Matsuura said the head chef tried to avoid work as much as possible and gave some examples.

As to Takee, Kanenobu testified, Matsuura said she was not guiding the waitresses, that she was telling the new waitresses the wrong thing, that the cooks would report this to the head chef, but that he never relayed these complaints to the head waitress or to the others so that the same mistakes were repeated over and over again. Matsuura said the head waitress should be a model for the other waitresses but Takee would bring cakes from outside and eat them while she was working. He said neither Takee nor Nakagawa had the qualifications to be "heads."

According to Kanenobu, Matsuura further said that Takee was stealing tips, that she would tell the other waitresses that she would do the counting so they did not need to come near to where she was doing the work, and so they had to stay a distance away. He further said they all thought this was rather odd, and that while this was happening he saw Takee stealing some of the tip money. Matsuura and Okhawa said that, if Kanenobu did not discharge Nakagawa and Takee, they would quit. Kanenobu further testified that prior to this Kajino had complained once or twice that the head waitress' training was not going well.

Matsuura testified in general corroboration of Kanenobu as to what he said regarding the head chef. In addition, he testified that he said Nakagawa did not train the new chef and he was "picking on" food at another department, the sushi bar. As to Takee, Matsuura testified he told Kanenobu that Takee was treating very well the waitresses she liked, but did not treat well those she did not like, that she drank coffee in the dining room and used the sugar that was there for the customers. He agreed that he said he saw Takee stealing tips. According to him, on two occasions in April he observed Takee counting tips. No one else was present. On one occasion, he saw her put money in an envelope without a name on [13] Yoa testified that he said they compared the work schedule with all the times that money was stolen in order to single out the one person who was working on each of these occasions.

[14] In his account of this conversation in his prehearing affidavit dated July 26, there is no mention of a reason for Takee's discharge. However, that affidavit as given in support of the claim that Nakagawa was unlawfully discharged and was not concerning Takee's discharge.

[15] At the time of the hearing herein, Matsuura was head chef and apparently had been since sometime in June.

it,[16] take the envelope, and leave. On a second occasion, he saw her put tip money in her obi, which was unusual.

Takee testified that all of the late shift waitresses sit at a table and count the tips. Matsuura admits that is the way tips are supposed to be counted but testified that on a number of occasions only one person counts the tips. Takee testified that she cannot recall any occasion when she counted tips with no other waitress watching what she was doing.

Kanenobu testified that on May 31 he related to Kajino what Matsuura and Okhawa told him and asked him to check what the amount of tips was. Later that day, Kajino reported to him that there was a total of about $1000 in tips missing per month since Takee became head waitress.[17] Kanenobu said he had to think that this decrease was because the head chef and the head waitress were not good and that the tips were being stolen. He then told Kajino to discharge Takee and to tell her that service was bad, business was very bad, and they no longer needed a head waitress so they were discharging her. He further specifically instructed Kajino not to mention the stealing of tips to Takee.

When questioned as to the reason for this latter instruction, Kanenobu testified, "We did not tell Pepe at that time, when he was thought to have stolen, and also we do not mention these personal matters." In further justification of these instructions, he testified:

> A. . . . if that were said then we would have to say who saw it. Because we didn't want to create any bad feelings there and she was going to leave and we wanted things to be left in a peaceful manner.
>
> Also, in our Oriental society, which is a very small society, it would not be good to bring up people's names in such a way.
>
> And so we tried to keep the problem as small as possible.
>
> . . . .
>
> JUDGE ROBBINS: Are you saying that in the Oriental society it is never mentioned if someone sees someone else stealing?
>
> A. No, it's just that one does not throw rocks at a departing person. But, however, if the person is coming towards me like a fire squad then I would have to do something about it.

However, in his statement of position submitted to the Board's Regional Office in response to the charge herein, he stated:

> On June 1, 1982 our head waitress, Voravan Takee was terminated. She was dismissed, due to the fact that business slowed down considerably and there was no improvement on the service to our customers, so we saw no advantage of maintaining a head waitress system.

Further, in his prehearing affidavit he states that the two chefs told him they would not remain in Respondent's employ if Nakagawa remained. There is no mention of any ultimatum with regard to Takee. Nor did he state in his affidavit that a reason for discharging Takee was that she was stealing tips.

According to Kanenobu, he did not mention the stealing of tips in his affidavit for the same reason he did not include it in his statement of position and also because he felt that he should only tell the Board agent the reason given by Kajino to Takee. In his prehearing affidavit, he does detail, as follows, why he considered Takee a bad head waitress:

> As a head waitress, Takee was very bad in that she would eat at the restaurant while she was working. She would bring food from the outside and eat it in the restaurant. She would drink soft drinks during work; she would change waitresses schedules without permission from the manager; she talked too much. Takee was never given any written warnings about any of the above-mentioned matters. It is the practice of the restaurant to give only oral warnings or reprimands, never in writing. I never gave Takee any oral warnings myself. That is the responsibility of Mr. Kajino and Mr. Morihito, the assistant manager.

Kajino testified in corroboration of Kanenobu as to the reasons for Takee's discharge and as to his conversations with Kanenobu with regard thereto. He denies the statements attributed to him by Takee, Yoa, Kondo, and Nakagawa that Takee was discharged because, as head waitress, she was involved in the walkout. He admits that Yoa did ask him why Takee was discharged; to which he replied that Takee was not suitable as a head waitress. According to him, he felt it was not necessary to mention the stealing of tips.

B. Conclusions

I do not credit Kanenobu and Kajino as to the reasons for Takee's discharge. I find them to be unreliable witnesses who attempted to tailor their testimony in the manner deemed to be most advantageous to Respondent. In this regard, I note the inconsistencies in Kanenobu's testimony as to whether Takee discharged the head busboy or only recommended that he be discharged; his testimony that he discharged Takee in 1981 because she was inexperienced and rehired her after a break in service of approximately 3 months because in the interim she had worked in a restaurant that had good training of waitresses, which length of time was directly, and reason for rehire and characterization of her separation as a discharge were indirectly, contradicted by a subsequent stipulation of the parties that Takee's break in service was no more than 2 weeks; and his testimony that family health insurance coverage was restricted to management, which was contradicted by Takee's health plan card which shows she had family coverage in December 1981 before she became head waitress.

I further note the conflicts between his testimony and his prehearing affidavit set forth above, particularly the statements in his affidavit that Kajino can hire and fire full-time employees only in an emergency; that one reason for dissatisfaction with Takee's performance as head waitress was her changing of schedules without Kajino's permission, whereas he testified that Takee prepared the schedules; and the failure, in his affidavit and in his statement of position, to give the stealing of tips as one of the reasons for her discharge or to relate the alleged ultimatum given by Matsuura with regard to Takee. I do not credit Kanenobu's explanation of the reasons for these conflicts. Kanenobu, who speaks English but testified through an interpreter, testified that when he gave his affidavit he spoke to the Board agent in English, but did not understand what was written in the affidavit. He denies that he read the affidavit but admits that the Board agent showed it to him and he looked at it. According to him, he signed it because the Board agent told him it would be disadvantageous to him and he would lose the case if he did not sign it right then and there.

[16] All of the envelopes normally have names on them.

[17] According to Kanenobu, this was based on 10 percent of gross sales.

Kanenobu admits he received a copy of the affidavit but never contacted the Board agent to tell him it was incorrect. According to him, he could not read the affidavit so he just left it that way. However, he also testified that he is a university graduate in electrical engineering and that he has been in business for 3 years. Further, he admits that he can read English and, on the witness stand, did read in English that portion of the affidavit regarding Kajino's authority to hire and fire. He was unable to read two phrases but I conclude that this resulted from the illegibility of the handwriting and not from any inability to read English. He read without difficulty or error, "he [Kajino] can hire and fire full-time employees only in an emergency." In the circumstances, I conclude that Kanenobu's affidavit is a reliable account of the statements he made at that time, and that his affidavit is more reliable than his testimony.

I do not credit Kanenobu and Kajino that during the May 29 meeting Kajino told Takee she could fire waitresses who did not perform satisfactorily. In his affidavit, Kanenobu states that even Kajino did not have such authority. Further, I find it unlikely that the waitresses who testified would not recall such a statement. Moreover, if she had, in fact, fired Pepe, as Kajino and Kanenobu contend, there would have been no reason for her to ask such a question. Nor do I credit Kanenobu and Matsuura that Matsuura and Okhawa had told Kanenobu they would guit if Takee remained or that Matsuura saw Takee stealing tips.[18] I find it unlikely, considering the concern of the waitresses as to their stolen or decreased tips, that they would have tolerated, without complaint, their exclusion from the counting of tips as allegedly described by Matsurra to Kanenobu. Further, there is no reason apparent from the record why two cooks would threaten to quit because the head waitress was treating the waitresses unfairly or because the head chef was not relaying their complaints.

[18] I do not credit Yuka as to the incident she described as tip stealing. Further, there is no evidence that Respondent had knowledge of this incident when Takee was discharged.

I also do not credit Kajino's denial that he told Takee, Yoa, Kondo, and Nakagawa that Takee was discharged because she participated in the walkout. The testimony of Takee, Yoa, Kondo, and Nakagawa, which I credit,[19] tend to be mutually corroborative and, on a consideration of the demeanor of the witnesses and the entire record, more credible than that of Kajino. In all of the circumstances, I find that the reasons asserted by Respondent for Takee's discharge are pretextual and that she was discharged because she engaged in a walkout, along with other waitresses, in protest of their working conditions.[20] Accordingly, I find that Takee was discharged on June 1, 1982, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

Conclusions of Law

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Voravan Takee is an employee within the meaning of Section 2(3) of the Act.

3. By unlawfully discharging Voravan Takee, Respondent has committed unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. By telling employees that a fellow employee was discharged because she participated in a protected concerted walkout of employees, Respondent has committed unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

5. The above-described unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

The Remedy

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that Respondent cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes of the Act.

Having found that Respondent unlawfully discharged Voravan Takee in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to offer Voravan Takee immediate and full reinstatement to her former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to her seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make her whole for any loss of earnings she may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against her, plus interest, in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[21]

[19] I have fully considered and reject Respondent's argument that their testimony is not credible.

[20] Contrary to Respondent's contentions, I find that Respondent has not established that Takee would have been discharged, even absent this protected activity. See NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393 (1983).

[21] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[22]

ORDER

The Respondent, Shin Nihon Kosan, Inc. d/b/a Shogun Restaurant, Pasadena, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Discharging or otherwise descriminating against employees because of their protected concerted activities.

(b) Telling employees a fellow employee was discharged because she participated in a protected concerted walkout of employees.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer to employee Voravan Takee immediate and full reinstatement to her former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to her seniority or any other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and make her whole for any loss of earnings she may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against her, plus interest.

(b) Expunge from its files any reference tothe discharge of Voravan Takee on June 1, 1982, and notify her in writing that this has been done and that evidence of this unlawful discharge will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against her.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its facility in Pasadena, California, copies of the attached notice in English and Japanese marked "Appendix."[23] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 31, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To act together for other mutual aid or protection
To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT tell our employees that fellow employees were discharged because they participated in a protected concerted walkout of employees.

WE WILL NOT discharge, and thereafter refuse to reinstate, employees because they engaged in protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL offer to Voravan Takee immediate and full reinstatement to her former job or, if her former job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position of employment without prejudice to her seniority or other rights and WE WILL make her whole for any loss of pay that she may have suffered by reason of our discrimination against her, with interest

WE WILL expunge from our files any references to the discharge of Vorvan Takee on June 1, 1982, and WE WILL notify her that this has been done and that evidence of this unlawful discharge will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against her.

SHIN NIHON KOSAN, INC. D/B/A SHOGUN RESTAURANT

---

[22] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[23] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Southwest Forest Industries, Inc. and Local 562, United Paperworkers International Union, AFL–CIO, CLC. Case 25–CA–13189

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

On 16 December 1981 Administrative Law Judge Stephen J. Gross issued the attached decision. The General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Respondent filed cross-exceptions, a supporting brief, and an answering brief to the General Counsel's exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record[1] in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[2] and conclusions, for the reasons stated in this decision, and to adopt the recommended Order.

For the reasons fully set forth in the attached decision, the judge found that employee James Scott's strike misconduct was sufficiently serious to warrant his discharge. Accordingly, he dismissed the complaint's allegation that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) by discharging Scott for engaging in union activities. While we adopt the judge's recommendation to dismiss the complaint, we do so on the basis of a different rationale.

On 29 January 1981[3] the Respondent's employees went out on strike over economic issues. The following day, strikers used a baseball bat to break the window of a truck that was attempting to cross the picket line to enter the plant, and hit the driver of the truck in the face when he attempted to walk from the truck to the plant.[4] On 31 January striker Scott, who had been drinking, spun his car across the Respondent's lawn causing it to stall crosswise on the Respondent's driveway. Upon being informed that a car was blocking the driveway, the Respondent's general manager, Wilhoite, and Plant Production manager Blaine left the plant to investigate. As Wilhoite and Blaine approached his car, Scott got out of the car and took out a child-size baseball bat which he allegedly kept there for self-protection. With the bat in his hand, Scott then cursed Blaine for several minutes. The episode was witnessed by the Union's president and several supervisors and picketers.

Blaine left, only to return approximately 10 minutes later to the site of Scott's stalled car. Scott, still holding the bat in his hand, recommenced cursing Blaine. Scott then asked Blaine if he had ever played baseball, and Blaine replied yes. Scott next stated that he would use Blaine for a baseball bat if Blaine crossed a line that a striker had drawn on the driveway earlier as a symbol separating management's side from the picketers' side.

Later in the day, Blaine, who had left the premises on business, returned to the plant. As he attempted to turn the car into the driveway, Scott placed himself in front of the car for 5 to 10 minutes and cursed fellow picketers for not helping him. After letting Blaine's car pass through the picket line, Scott stopped one of the Respondent's trucks, jumped on to its running board, and cursed the driver. On 2 February the Respondent discharged Scott for engaging in strike misconduct.

The judge found that Scott had engaged in serious misconduct which rendered him unfit for further service with the Respondent. We agree. The combination of Scott's physical and verbal acts of abuse and confrontation put him clearly beyond the protection of the Act and justified his discharge.[5] We disagree, however, with the judge's subordinate finding that "Scott never actually menaced Blaine or anyone else" with the baseball bat.

In Clear Pine Mouldings, the Board adopted a new objective test for determining the legality of an employer's refusal to reinstate a striker because of verbal threats by strikers directed at fellow employees or even at persons who do not enjoy the protection of Section 7 of the Act. The test is "whether the misconduct is such that, under the circumstances existing, it may reasonably tend to coerce or intimidate employees in the exercise of rights protected under the Act."

Viewed apart from Scott's blockading efforts, his verbal tirades against Blaine while holding a small baseball bat in his hand reasonably tended to coerce within the meaning of the above test. With-

[1] The Respondent's request for oral argument is denied as the record and briefs adequately present the issues and the positions of the parties.

[2] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[3] All dates refer to 1981.

[4] The two strikers involved were discharged and their discharges are not contested.

[5] The judge correctly noted that the Respondent had committed no unfair labor practices against which Scott's misbehavior might be weighed. See NLRB v. Thayer Co., 213 F.2d 748 (1st Cir. 1954), cert. denied 348 U.S. 883 (1954). For reasons stated in the plurality opinion of Chairman Dotson and Member Hunter in Clear Pine Mouldings, 268 NLRB 1044, 1046 (1984), Member Hunter does not agree with the Thayer test of balancing an employer's unfair labor practices against striker misconduct in determining whether adverse action against the striker is warranted.

out provocation, Scott repeatedly confronted Blaine while in conspicuous possession of a potential offensive weapon.[6] At one point, Scott clearly threatened to assault Blaine if he crossed the symbolic picketers' line. The presence of the bat heightened the impression of imminent physical danger imparted by the threat, even though Scott apparently never lifted the bat from his side. In the circumstances of this case, Scott's behavior reasonably tended to threaten Blaine with bodily harm. By this misconduct above, as well as by the totality of his actions described above, Scott forfeited any right to further employment by the Respondent.

ORDER

The recommended Order of the administrative law judge is adopted and the complaint is dismissed.

[6] It is irrelevant that, as the judge found, Scott considered the bat necessary for self-defense. There is no evidence that Blaine or any other witness to Scott's behavior would reasonably have viewed the bat as limited to a defensive purpose.

DECISION

I. BACKGROUND

STEPHEN J. GROSS, Administrative Law Judge. The United Paperworkers International Union (the Paperworkers) and Paperworkers Local No. 562 represent the production and maintenance employees at the Indianapolis plant of Southwest Forest Industries (SFI).[1] On January 21, 1981,[2] the employees represented by the Paperworkers went out on strike over economic issues. Picket lines were established immediately. SFI continued to operate the plant using supervisors and nonbargaining unit employees.

On February 2 and 3 SFI fired four striking employees and suspended one. SFI's letters to those employees gave as the reasons for its action against them their participation in activities such as damaging vehicles attempting to enter the plant, hitting the driver of one of those vehicles, damaging a supervisor's vehicle, threatening nonstriking personnel, and committing "malicious mischief."

On February 18, Local 562 filed a charge against SFI contending that its discharges and suspension of the five employees violated the Act.

A complaint, dated April 9, followed, limited to SFI's actions against one of the employees, James Scott. According to the complaint, SFI discharged Scott because he

> [J]oined, supported or assisted the Union, and engaged in concerted activities for the purpose of mutual aid and/or protection, and in order to discourage employees from engaging in such activities or other [protected] activities . . . and because said employee participated in a strike called by the Union.

SFI denied any wrongdoing and the case went to hearing in Indianapolis on September 28 and 29. The General Counsel and SFI have filed briefs, and the case stands ready for decision.[3]

There is no real dispute about the general requirements of the Act pertinent to this case. Employees have the right to strike and to picket (absent circumstances not present here). Employers accordingly may not discriminate against employees for doing so. While an employee's serious acts of misconduct on the picket line place the employee outside the Act's protection, minor picket line misconduct does not.[4] And if an employer in good faith fires a striking employee on the ground that the employee was guilty of serious picket line misconduct, the employer nonetheless will be deemed to have violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act if it can be shown that, despite the employer's honest belief to the contrary, the employee did not in fact engage in misconduct aggravated enough to remove the employee from the Act's protection.[5]

No party contends that Scott's discharge stemmed from union animus on SFI's part or was otherwise discriminatorily motivated; and there is no evidence in the record that would support such a contention if one had been made. The questions at issue are therefore limited to: (1) whether Scott actually engaged in the activity for which SFI fired him; and (2) if he did, whether those actions were sufficiently aggravated to render his conduct unprotected.

For the reasons stated below, my conclusion is that both questions must be answered affirmatively, and that SFI accordingly committed no unfair labor practice when it fired Scott.

II. SCOTT'S VERBAL ABUSE OF BLAINE

A. Introduction

On January 31 Scott involved himself in several angry, loud confrontations at or near the picket line. As is usual in such cases, a lot of things happened in relatively short

[1] SFI does not dispute the General Counsel's contention that it is an employer engaged in commerce for the purposes of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act). And all parties agree that Local 562 is a labor organization within the meaning of Sec. 2(5) of the Act.

[3] On March 16 Respondent's attorney sent a 27 page letter to Region 25 in response to the charges Local 562 had filed against SFI. Several pages of the letter related to Scott. The General Counsel sought to introduce the entire letter into evidence. But I allowed into the record only those pages specifically relating to Scott: See Tr. 77–81. At p. 8, fn. 1, of her brief, the General Counsel renewed her motion to have the entire letter (or at least several additional pages) made part of the record. The renewed motion is denied. In view of the possible prejudice to Respondent by adding evidence to the record at this juncture, the General Counsel would have had to make a compelling case for her motion to have been granted. But it continues to appear that the relevance of the additional pages is marginal. And the General Counsel had the opportunity to use as much of the document in question as she chose for purposes of impeaching Respondent's witnesses (so long as she avoided asking about attorney-client communications: see Tr. 79).

[4] See Coronet Casuals, 207 NLRB 304 (1973).

periods of time, and the circumstances carried an emotional charge with them. In those kinds of situations witnesses to the events will inevitably misperceive some of what actually happened, and, on top of that, later misremember some of what they perceived.

None of the persons who testified in this proceeding were immune from those kinds of difficulties. But five of the witnesses did seem to attempt to testify accurately about what they remembered: The General Counsel witnesses Coffman and Haltom; and SFI witnesses Blaine, Clark, and Wilhoite. The description below of Scott's activities represents my understanding of what happened on January 31 based on an amalgamation of the testimony of those five witnesses. (The testimony of the General Counsel witnesses Scott and Siedle differed substantially from the other witnesses and at times seemed inherently improbable. Under the circumstances I am unable to credit much of the testimony of either of the two.)

B. Scott's Confrontation with Production Manager Blaine

Late in the morning of January 31 Scott drove his car back and forth on the street in front of the SFI plant, driving in a way that produced loud engine and tire noises and high rates of acceleration and deceleration. Ultimately that form of driving resulted in Scott's car spinning across the plant's front lawn, with the car ending stalled crosswise on the driveway at the western side of the plant.

A guard somewhere near the site radioed to say that a car was parked across the west driveway, blocking it. Bert Wilhoite is the general manager of SFI's Indianapolis plant and the Company's senior official at the plant. When Wilhoite was told about the car blocking the driveway, he went out to the site in an effort to handle the situation. A few moments later Thomas Blaine, the plant's production manager and second most senior official, also headed for the site.

Scott had consumed sufficient alcohol for his speech and coordination to be obviously affected. For reasons not to be found in the record, Scott believed that Blaine had stood in the way of management and the Union working out their differences without a strike. As Wilhoite and Blaine approached, Scott got out of his car. Scott kept a child-size baseball bat in his car "in case," as he put it, "I ever run into any trouble."[6] And he was holding the bat when he got out of the car. After exchanging a few relatively calm words with Wilhoite, Scott, referring to Blaine, told Wilhoite that "if it weren't for that skinny motherfucker we wouldn't be out on strike right now." Scott then turned to Blaine and, while striding back and forth in an area about 3 to 6 feet from Blaine, proceeded to curse at him profanely ("weasel-faced motherfucker," "cocksucker," etc.), loudly, angrily, and repetitiously. Blaine did not respond. All of this took place in the presence of several SFI supervisors, the president of Local 562 (who had earlier tried, unsuccessfully, to get Scott to leave), and a dozen or so picketers.

After a few minutes of Scott's cursing, Wilhoite, in an effort to defuse the situation, told Blaine to check things at the plant's east driveway. Blaine followed Wilhoite's orders. But 5 or 10 minutes later Blaine returned to the site of Scott's stalled car.

Scott promptly began to curse at Blaine again, and again used the most abusive, profane epithets available. Sometime earlier another of the picketers had delineated a place on the driveway that, he jokingly said, marked the boundary line between the picketers' turf and management's. Scott asked Blaine if he had ever played baseball. Blaine responded affirmatively. Scott then asked Blaine whether he had ever been used as a baseball bat and suggested that he would use Blaine in just that way if Blaine stepped across that imaginary line. As Scott said that he had his right hand pointing at Blaine. But the baseball bat was in his left hand and he continued to hold the bat down, near his leg.

At that point Wilhoite stepped between Blaine and Scott and told Blaine to leave the area. Blaine stepped backward a few steps (so that he would not have to turn his back to Scott while he was within Scott's striking range), turned, and walked away.[7]

The driveway was ordinarily wide enough for two cars to pass. But during the strike it was partially blocked by several 55 gallon drums. The combination of Scott's car and the drums completely blocked the driveway. At the Company's request, however, the pickets pushed Scott's car to the side without interference from Scott.

III. SCOTT'S SUBSEQUENT ACTIONS BLOCKING VEHICLES

About an hour after Scott's confrontation with Blaine, Blaine left the plant in his own car on company business. He returned about 1 p.m. The plant borders English Avenue. As Blaine started to turn onto the east driveway

---

[7] Blaine and Wilhoite each wrote "incident reports" covering the Scott-Blaine confrontation (see G.C. Exh. 8, Tr. 67–72 and 296). The General Counsel submitted Wilhoite's incident report into evidence (but not Blaine's) solely for "the purpose of impeachment, and not for the truth of the matters asserted in the document" (Tr. 67). The General Counsel points out that while Wilhoite testified that Scott actively menaced Blaine with the baseball bat, Wilhoite's incident report makes no mention of a bat. That discrepancy is one of the reasons that I do not believe that Scott waved the bat around in a threatening way, as Blaine and Wilhoite testified. But Wilhoite's failure to mention the bat in his incident report by no means necessarily shows that Scott did not have a bat in his hand during the incident.

The General Counsel, in a further reference to the incident reports, argues that, given their availability and their obvious relevance to the issues at hand, an adverse inference should be drawn against SFI because of its failure to introduce Wilhoite's and Blaine's reports into evidence (Br. at 5). But the material in the reports is hearsay. While , Fed.R.Evid. 803(6) permits the admission of some reports notwithstanding that consideration, the incident reports at issue here were obviously prepared with the awareness of possible litigation in mind. Under these circumstances the admissibility of the reports is far from clear: see, e.g., Picker X-Ray Corp. v. Frerker, 405 F.2d 916, 922–923 (8th Cir. 1969) (incident report held inadmissible); 4 Weinstein's Evidence at 803–177 (1979). It accordingly can be presumed that SFI assumed that any attempt by it to introduce the incident reports into evidence would be met with a vigorous and sus-into the plant from English Avenue, Scott placed himself in front of Blaine's car. Blaine stopped the car. For the next 5 or 10 minutes Scott remained in front of Blaine's car, sometimes leaning against it, and cursed at nearby picketers for their willingness to allow vehicles to enter the plant grounds. (E.g., "None of you other son-of-a-bitches are going to help me . . . on the strike line, I'll have to do it by myself.")[8] In the meantime the other picketers began demanding that Scott let Blaine's car pass. At no time during this incident did Scott address any remarks to Blaine.

Scott ultimately did, of his own accord, let Blaine's car go through. But Scott forthwith placed himself in front of an SFI truck that was immediately behind Blaine.

Scott and the picketers continued their argument for a while—with Scott remaining in front of the truck—and then Scott jumped on the running board of the truck and cursed at the driver. Scott subsequently got off the truck, and, about 5 minutes after it had first been stopped by Scott, it proceeded into the plant.[9]

IV. SFI'S ACTION AGAINST SCOTT

In a letter dated February 2, 1981, but actually signed on February 3, SFI advised Scott as follows:

> You are discharged from employment effective February 2, 1981, for engaging in picket line misconduct consisting of making threats of bodily harm directed towards another employee and for trespass and malicious mischief at the picket line established at our plant, 6400 English Avenue, Indianapolis, Indiana on Saturday, January 31, 1981.

V. CONCLUSION

Scott never actually menaced Blaine or anyone else. While Scott's actions certainly must have seemed threatening to Blaine and Wilhoite, Blaine—who was the object of Scott's attention—recognized that Scott's baseball bat "threat" was contingent on Blaine stepping onto Scott's side of that imaginary line. As for Scott taking the bat out of his car, the impression I got was that, as Scott saw things, he needed the bat for his own protection, not as an offensive weapon. Finally, as far as this record discloses, Scott's misbehavior during the strike was limited to the January 31 incidents, and those were at least in part a product of Scott's consumption of alcohol.[10]

But Scott's verbal abuse of Blaine was sufficiently far out of line for his actions to lose the protection of the Act. A short burst of profanity is not cause for discharge—even, probably, if a member of management is the object of that profanity.[11] But here that abuse, apart from being very ugly, lasted for several minutes (a long time for that kind of incident), and then was repeated (when Blaine returned from checking the east driveway). Beyond that: (1) Blaine was a high-ranking official of the plant at which Scott worked; (2) the ugliness of the incident was heightened by Scott's drunkenness and the presence of a bat in his hand; and (3) numerous employees and several supervisors witnessed the incident.

By any standard Scott's behavior under these circumstances rendered him unfit for further service with SFI. The Company accordingly did not act improperly in firing Scott, particularly since SFI had committed no unfair labor practices against which Scott's misbehavior might be weighed.[12]

As for Scott's action in stopping Blaine's car and the company truck, we need not resolve here whether that would be enough, standing alone, to remove Scott's strike activities from the Act's protection. But in view of the fact that Scott stopped both vehicles for considerable periods—not just momentarily—and did his best to get the other picketers to prevent vehicles from entering, Scott's stopping the two vehicles adds to the strength of SFI's case.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Employee James Scott engaged in acts of picket line misconduct sufficiently aggravated to lose the protection otherwise accorded by the National Labor Relations Act.

2. Respondent Southwest Forest Industries discharged Scott for that aggravated misconduct.

3. Respondent's discharge of Scott accordingly did not violate the Act in any respect.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[13]

ORDER

The complaint is dismissed in its entirety.

---

[8] Tr. 275 (witness Coffman).

[9] The truck was stopped a total of 10 minutes or so. First because Scott had stopped the car in front of it (Blaine's). And then because of Scott's actions directed at the truck. With the truck unable to exit off English Avenue into the plant, a traffic jam developed on English Avenue.

[10] See Juniata Packing Co., 182 NLRB 934, 936 (1970).

[11] See Moore Business Forms, 224 NLRB 393, 405 (1976); Rangaire Corp., 157 NLRB 682, 711 (1966); Mosher Steel Co., 226 NLRB 1163, 1166 (1976).

[12] See NLRB v. Thayer Co., 213 F.2d 748, 755 (1st Cir. 1954), cert. denied 348 U.S. 883 (1954). Compare Moore Business Forms, supra; Rangaire Corp., supra; Juniata Packing Co., supra; Mosher Steel, supra.

[13] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

Noel Produce, Inc. and General Teamsters Local No. 174, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America. Case 19–CA–15720(E)

14 December 1984

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

On 3 May 1984, Administrative Law Judge William J. Pannier III issued the attached decision. The Applicant, Noel Produce, Inc., filed exceptions and a supporting brief and the General Counsel filed a reply brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

The judge correctly found that the Applicant is ineligible for an award of attorney fees under the Equal Access to Justice Act (EAJA) because the aggregate net worth of the Applicant and its parent company concededly exceeds $5 million.[1] Applicant contends that we have exceeded our administrative authority by adopting Section 102.143(g) of the Board's Rules and Regulations, which requires that the net worth of an applicant be consolidated with that of its affiliates in determining eligibility. Section 102.143(g) is merely an adoption of the rule recommended by the Administrative Conference of the United States which received and considered comments on the validity of the rule. Although EAJA is silent on the matter, the requirement implements the purpose of that Act, which sought to establish "financial criteria which limit the bill's application to those persons and small businesses for whom costs may be a deterrent to vindicating their rights."[2] Parties that meet the eligibility standard only because of technicalities of legal or corporate form, while having access to a large pool of resources from affiliated companies, do not fall within this group of intended beneficiaries. Moreover, in our attempt to ensure that the rule does not eliminate deserving applicants, Section 102.143(g) provides that in limited circumstances net worth will not be consolidated where "such treatment would be unjust and contrary to the purposes of the Equal Access to Justice Act . . . in light of the actual relationship between the affiliated entities." The Respondent does not set forth any basis warranting a finding that applying the affiliation rule to it would be unjust and contrary to the purposes of the Equal Access to Justice Act.

ORDER

It is hereby ordered that the application of Noel Produce, Inc., Kent, Washington, for an award under the Equal Access to Justice Act be dismissed.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION

(Equal Access to Justice Act)

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

WILLIAM J. PANNIER III, Administrative Law Judge. On January 20, 1984,[1] I issued a Decision in which I concluded that Applicant Noel Produce, Inc. had violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq. by having engaged in certain unlawful conduct prior to March 31, but had not committed certain other unlawful conduct alleged to have occurred between that date and May 5. Further, in the absence of any credible evidence of objectionable conduct between those two dates, I concluded that there was no basis for setting aside a second or rerun election conducted on May 5 and, accordingly, no basis for considering whether or not a bargaining order would be warranted under Section 8(a)(5) of the Act, as was sought in the complaint. No exceptions were filed and the Board adopted my findings and conclusions.

Thereafter, Applicant filed Respondent's "Application for Attorneys Fees, Costs and Expenses Pursuant to the Equal Access to Justice Act," based on the fact that it prevailed on that portion of the complaint that had alleged a violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act. That application has been referred to me by the Board for appropriate action.[2] The General Counsel has filed an answer to the application for an award and a motion for judgment on the pleadings. While the General Counsel advances several arguments in support of its motion, it suffices to dispose of this matter, in its entirety, on the basis that Applicant does not satisfy at least one criterion to be eligible to receive such an award. I also grant the motion on the basis that the General Counsel's position with respect to the 8(a)(5) allegation was reasonable in law and fact, and that there had been substantial justification for including that allegation in the complaint.

[1] In such circumstances, the Board finds it unnecessary to pass on the judge's discussion of whether the General Counsel was "substantially justified" in including an 8(a)(5) allegation in the complaint.

[2] H.R. Rep. No. 96–1418, at 15 (1980).

[1] Unless stated otherwise, all dates occurred in 1984.

[2] Referred also was a motion to withhold information from public disclosure. In light of my disposition infra, it is unnecessary to rule on that motion.

Analysis

The Board's Rules and Regulations Section 102.143(c)(5) recite that to be eligible for an award, an applicant that is a corporation, such as Applicant, must have a "net worth of not more than $5 million." Further, Section 102.143(g) of the Board's Rules and Regulations provides:

> The net worth . . . of the applicant and all of its affiliates shall be aggregated to determine eligibility. Any individual, corporation, or other entity that directly or indirectly controls or owns a majority of the voting shares or other interest of the applicant . . . will be considered an affiliate for purposes of this part, unless such treatment would be unjust and contrary to the purposes of the Equal Access to Justice Act (94 Stat. 2325) in light of the actual relationship between the affiliated entities.

In its application, Applicant states that Noel, Inc. is its parent company and, further,

> . . . because Noel, Inc., as a corporate entity having a total net worth which exceeds $5 million, does in fact control or own a majority of the voting shares or other interest of the Applicant, the aggregate "affiliated" net worth of the Applicant is caused to exceed the corporate net worth eligibility requirement established by the NLRB Rules and Regulations . . . .

Applicant sets forth no circumstances that would render application of the affiliate rule "unjust and contrary to the purposes of the Equal Access to Justice Act" within the meaning of Section 102.143 (g) of the Board's Rules and Regulations. Instead, Applicant argues that this concept of affiliated corporate net worth is one that is contrary to the provisions of the Equal Access to Justice Act, being no more than the product of "the Board's 'bunker' mentality."

Whether or not the affiliate concept embodied in Rule 102.143(g) is the product of "'bunker' mentality" is really not an issue that I am free to resolve. I am bound by Board law and certainly by the Board's Rules and Regulations. Therefore, as Applicant and its affiliate concededly have a net worth in excess of $5 million, I grant the General Counsel's motion on the ground that Applicant is not eligible, for that reason, to receive an award.

Ordinarily, that conclusion would end all further discussion. However, certain statements that have been made give rise to doubt concerning whether there is a true understanding of the legal principles that governed the proper method of analyzing the 8(a)(5) issue presented in the underlying proceeding. While I am not obliged to do so, in the interest of clarifying the situation, and in view of the assertions made in conjunction with the affiliate concept, it does seem that some benefit might be derived from an explanation of the method of analysis that would have ensued had I credited the testimony regarding statements purportedly made between March 31, when the first representation election was conducted, and May 5, when the second or rerun election was conducted.

As set forth in greater detail in my decision, on various occasions prior to March 31 Applicant's general manager had made threats of closure if the employees selected a bargaining representative and, on one occasion, unlawfully had interrogated a job applicant concerning union sympathies. Also prior to March 31, Applicant's officials had promised wage increases and, further, had announced and granted a general wage increase, all in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Following the filing of objections to the first election, based on Applicant's preelection conduct, that election was set aside pursuant to a stipulation of the parties.

With regard to the alleged conduct between March 31 and the second or rerun election on May 5, by the time that the General Counsel and the Charging Party/Petitioner had rested there was testimony that approximately a week after the first election, Applicant's general manager had convened a meeting of employees and had warned them "that if the place went union, that Noel would never agree to a contract with the union." Moreover, there was testimony that on the day of the election, prior to its commencement, the general manager had told an employee, Keith A. Maunu, that if the employees selected representation in the election, a contract would never be reached or ratified by Applicant and, further, that all wages would be frozen until a contract was reached. I did not credit this testimony. Yet, "the General Counsel cannot himself resolve credibility issues." Charles H. McCauley Associates, 269 NLRB 791 (1984). Indeed, I did credit Maunu's testimony concerning an earlier conversation with the general manager and, based on the available information, there was no reason for the General Counsel to believe that Maunu's account of the later conversation was not worthy of belief.

Applicant points out, in the application, that this testimony was not corroborated. But there was no way for there to be corroboration of Maunu's testimony, short of an admission by the general manager that he had made the statements on May 5 attributed to him by Maunu. For, according to Maunu, only the two of them had been present during that conversation. True, only Gary Fisher was called to describe the general manager's purported remarks at the general meeting with employees. But, as I stated expressly in my decision, I did not credit Fisher because "I was not impressed by [his] demeanor," not because there was no corroboration for his account, although I pointed out that that was the fact. Had I believed Fisher, corroboration of his testimony would not have been necessary for me to conclude that the general manager had made the threat to the assembled employees that day. See, e.g., C. P. & W. Printing Ink Co., 238 NLRB 1483 (1978). In addition, it is worth noting that this testimony by Fisher, and by Maunu as well, never was denied. Finally, in this area, the general manager had made threats to employees prior to March 31. The nature of those threats had differed from those attributed to him after March 31. Yet, his pre-March 31 willingness to resort to threats, to deter employees from selecting a bargaining representative, tended to support the General Counsel's position that he likely would have continued making threats, even if of a different consequence, prior to the rerun election.

In sum, there is nothing either argued by Applicant or contained in the record of this proceeding that would controvert a conclusion that, by the time that the General Counsel and the Charging Party had rested, there was a substantial basis in fact for believing that Applicant had engaged in objectionable and unlawful conduct between the elections. Had Maunu and Fisher been credited, then analysis would have progressed to the issue of the effects of the general manager's statements upon the laboratory conditions for conducting a rerun election. Clearly, had Maunu and Fisher been credited, there would have been a reasonable basis in fact and law for contending that the second election should have been set aside. Fisher's testimony showed that all employees had been warned that no contract would be reached even if they did elect a bargaining representative and, inferentially, that it would be futile for them to exercise their statutory right to do so. Maunu's testimony showed that Applicant was not reluctant to repeat this threat and to reinforce it with a further threat: that employee wages would effectively be frozen until a contract was reached.

True, had he been credited, Maunu's testimony showed no more than that the general manager's threat not to increase wages had been made to but a single employee. Yet, it had been made against a background of pre-March 31 threats to several employees and, also, of pre-March 31 wage increases to all unit employees. Those wage increases served to demonstrate the "fist inside [Applicant's] velvet glove." NLRB v. Exchange Parts Co., 375 U.S. 405, 409 (1964). And, had Maunu been credible, it had been that fist that the general manager had unsheathed on May 5 by warning that Applicant would exercise its power over wages to freeze them, perhaps permanently, if the employees chose to elect a representative. Consequently, had the general manager made the remarks described by Maunu, those comments "were likely to be rapidly disseminated around a plant during the struggle of organization." Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. v. NLRB, 217 F.2d 575, 576 (2d Cir. 1954).

In sum, had the testimony of the General Counsel's witnesses been credited, there was a reasonable basis for concluding that the second or rerun election would have been set aside, since Applicant had been renewing its threatening statements during the period between elections and those statements, particularly the threat described by Fisher, had been known to a substantial number of employees who were scheduled to vote in the second election. If, in fact, the second election had been set aside, analysis then would have proceeded to the question of whether a bargaining order should issue and, concomitantly, to the issue of whether it should be concluded that Applicant had violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act by having rejected the demand for recognition that had been tendered to it.

Contrary to the implication in the application, the determination of whether to issue a bargaining order would not have been confined to unlawful conduct occurring between the two elections. Rather, all of Applicant's conduct, from the very beginning of the organizing campaign, would have been evaluated in making that determination. See, e.g., NLRB v. Anchorage Times Publishing Co., 637 F.2d 1359, 1364 (9th Cir. 1981); Maxwell's Plum v. NLRB, 481 F.2d 75, 79 fn. 3 (2d Cir. 1973). Moreover, in doing so, a number of indicia would have been considered: the seriousness or gravity of the nature of the unfair labor practices committed,[3] the swiftness or suddenness with which they were committed on learning of the existence of the organizing campaign,[4] the duration or period of time over which they were committed,[5] the number of employees affected by them,[6] the level of supervision which had committed them,[7] and the likelihood of their repetition should another rerun election be directed.[8]

Here, as set forth in greater detail in my decision, Applicant commenced committing unfair labor practices even before the representation petition had been filed. It then continued committing them over the entire course of the period prior to the first election. Had Maunu been fully credited, his testimony concerning the May 5 comments by the general manager would have shown that Applicant had continued committing unfair labor practices up to the very day of the second election. All unit employees had received wage increases and, had Fisher been credited, all of them directly had heard the threat that it would be futile to exercise their right to elect a bargaining representative as no contract with it would ever be reached by Applicant. Moreover, a number of employees had been subjected, on an individual basis, to separate unlawful remarks by Applicant.

Most of the unfair labor practices had been committed by Applicant's general manager. However, the announcement of wage increases, as well as apparently the decision to grant them, had been made by its owner. Among the unfair labor practices committed were several threats to close if the employees selected a bargaining representative. Such threats are of the type to which employees "are particularly sensitive," NLRB v. Gissel Packing, supra, 395 U.S. at 619, and "are not easily erased from the minds of employees." Tri-City Paving, 205 NLRB 174 (1973). Moreover, against a background of those types of threats and of illegally granted wage increases, threats that wage increases will no longer be granted until a contract is reached, when coupled with threats never to reach or ratify a contract if a bargaining representative is selected, are equally likely to dissipate majority support and to linger in employees' memories. Finally, had Maunu and Fisher been credited and had

[3] See, e.g., NLRB v. Jamaica Towing, 632 F.2d 208, 212–213 (2d Cir. 1980); NLRB v. Gissel Packing Co., 395 U.S. 575 (1969).

[4] See, e.g., Wright Plastic Products, 247 NLRB 635 (1980).

[5] See, e.g., Rapid Mfg. Co., 239 NLRB 465, 467 (1978), enf. denied 612 F.2d 144 (3d Cir. 1979); Warehouse Groceries Management, 254 NLRB 252, 256 (1981).

[6] See, e.g., NLRB v. Henry Colder Co., 447 F.2d 629, 631 (7th Cir. 1971); Hedstrom Co. v. NLRB, 629 F.2d 305, 312 (3d Cir. 1980).

[7] See, e.g., Midland Ross Corp. v. NLRB, 617 F.2d 977, 987 (3d Cir. 1980); Wright Plastic Products, supra.

[8] See, e.g., Apple Tree Chevrolet, 251 NLRB 666, 669 (1980); Chandler Motors, 236 NLRB 1565, 1567 (1978).

the second election been set aside, then the likelihood of conducting yet a third election with even some assurance that Applicant would not once more interfere with the laboratory conditions for conducting it becomes quite remote.

In sum, operating of necessity from the premise that his witnesses would be credited, Charles H. McCauley Associates, supra, and had the second election been set aside, there was ample justification for the General Counsel to assert that a bargaining order should be sought and "his position [in that regard] was reasonable in law and fact." Board's Rules and Regulations, Section 102.144(a). However, before departing this subject, one final point is worthy of note.

As I pointed out in my decision, the alleged violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act and the concomitant bargaining order remedy were sought on behalf of a joint representative whereas the authorization cards designated only a single labor organization. Nevertheless, as I noted in footnote 8 of my decision, while there is at least one Board decision concluding that cards authorizing a single representative will not support a bargaining order issued on behalf of a joint representative, there is also at least one other Board decision, issued within a 3-week period of the above-referred to one, that gives rise to an argument that the Board might allow single representative cards to support a bargaining order for a different entity in certain circumstances. Neither decision sets meaningful guidelines for its application, cf. World Wide Press, 242 NLRB 346, 365 (1979), with the result that it is not possible to conclude that the General Counsel acted without substantial basis in pressing the issue for possible clarification. Moreover, even if the Board would not have been willing to issue a bargaining order on behalf of the joint representative, a bargaining order still could have issued on behalf of the labor organization designated on the cards, notwithstanding the absence of a demand for recognition made solely on its behalf. See, e.g., Grandee Beer Distributors, 247 NLRB 1280 fn. 5 (1980).

Therefore, "the presence or absence of a prima facie case is not determinative of whether or not an applicant is entitled to an EAJA award." Jim's Big M, 266 NLRB 665 fn. 1 (1983). The General Counsel had a reasonable basis in fact for arguing that its witnesses should be credited. Had Fisher and Mauna been credited fully, the General Counsel had a reasonable basis in fact and law for asserting that the second or rerun election of May 5 should have been set aside in the circumstances. Had that election been set aside, the General Counsel had a reasonable basis in fact and law for contending that a bargaining order should issue.

ORDER

It is ordered that Respondent's aplication for attorneys fees, costs, and expenses pursuant to the Equal Access to Justice Act be, and it is, dismissed.

N & T Associates, Inc. d/b/a Aladdin Hotel and General Sales Drivers, Delivery Drivers & Helpers, Local Union #14 affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America. Cases 31-CA-13095 and 31-CA-13396

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND HUNTER

On 5 March 1984 Administrative Law Judge Gerald A. Wacknov issued the attached decision. The Charging Party filed an exception and the Respondent filed exceptions, a supporting brief, and an answering brief to the Charging Party's exception.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions, as modified herein, and to adopt the recommended Order.

The judge found that the Respondent, through Supervisor Giantonio, violated Section 8(a)(1) by asking employee Costanza "why he was so vocal on behalf of the union." Relying on PPG Industries,[2] and two other cases applying PPG,[3] the judge concluded that Giantonio's question constituted an unlawful interrogation. We disagree.[4]

In Rossmore House, 269 NLRB 1176 (1984), the Board overruled PPG Industries and announced that it would henceforth evaluate interrogations according to "whether under all of the circumstances the interrogation reasonably tends to restrain, coerce, or interfere with rights guaranteed by the Act." Applying this test here, we do not find Giantonio's questioning unlawful.

Giantonio's credited testimony shows that the conversation took place on the floor of the casino while Costanza was on duty at the Big Six Wheel. Giantonio, the lowest ranking supervisor for one of the 21-games, was passing by the Big Six Wheel en route to the coffee shop when Costanza said hello to Giantonio. Giantonio stopped and asked Costanza why he was so vocal on behalf of the Union. Costanza gave three reasons in reply: security, the change in the toke or tip policy, and an alleged incident in which Director of Casino Operations Vickrey, rather than allowing a dealer to accept a $1250 toke, returned it to the customer. Giantonio responded by saying that new management would probably correct any security problem; that the originator of the change in toke policy had retired and the old toke policy would probably be reinstated; and that he did not believe that Vickrey had returned the toke because he was on duty that night monitoring the tables played by the customer and did not observe the alleged incident. That was the end of the conversation, during which no one else was present.

In our view, these facts reveal only a casual, private exchange between Costanza and Giantonio. Giantonio conveyed neither threat of reprisal nor promise of benefit during this conversation. Moreover, unlike the judge, we attach no significance to the fact that Costanza had not previously informed Giantonio of his union activities. Costanza, on occasion, had engaged in these activities on the closely monitored casino floor where such activities were blatant breaches of the Respondent's rules. It was, thus, inescapable that these activities would and did come to management's attention, not only through routine observation of activities on the floor, but also because of the widespread discussion among employees that Costanza's boldness provoked. Accordingly, we shall dismiss this allegation of the complaint.

We affirm the judge's finding that the Respondent, through its supervisor Billy Mills, violated Section 8(a)(1) when Mills asked employee La Fountain how he intended to vote in the election and suggested that he might obtain a supervisory position at another of the Respondent's casinos if he voted no.[5]

Although we agree with the judge's ultimate finding that the Respondent, through Supervisor Giantonio, violated Section 8(a)(1) by asking employee Flamm on 7 August why he was so enthusiastic about the Union, we find that the judge's reliance on PPG, overruled as noted above, was mis-

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] 251 NLRB 1146 (1980).

[3] Host Services, 263 NLRB 672 (1982); Zero Corp., 262 NLRB 495 (1982), enfd. 705 F.2d 439 (1st Cir. 1983).

[4] Member Zimmerman dissents from the reversal of this finding of the judge. He adheres to PPG. See his dissent in Rossmore House, cited infra.

[5] Chairman Dotson agrees with his colleagues that Supervisor Mills' suggestion that employee La Fountain would be rewarded with a supervisory position if he voted against the Union was an unlawful promise of benefits and therefore violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act. However, the Chairman does not consider a simple inquiry into how an employee intends to vote to be a violation of the Act under the holding in Rossmore House, supra, and if the inquiry here was considered separate and apart from the promise of benefit, he would not find the former to be a violation.

placed because the evidence does not support a finding that Flamm was an open union supporter.[6]

While Giantonio testified without corroboration that he was aware of "rumors"—neither the source nor nature of which were identified—that Flamm was a vocal union supporter, the record discloses only one specific union activity engaged in by Flamm: He signed a union authorization card early in the Union's petition drive.[7] On the other hand, Flamm testified that, in a conversation with Supervisor Mills on 29 July, he denied that he was even aware that an election was scheduled because "I was little bit nervous that [Mills] might think I was active within the Union." Flamm was not part of the group of employees who had contacted the Union to initiate the union organizing among the Respondent's employees. Flamm was not named in the Union's letter to the Respondent in which employee organizers were identified. Viewed accordingly, and under all the circumstances surrounding the questioning of Flamm as set forth in the judge's decision, we find that Giantonio's interrogation of Flamm about his union activities reasonably tended to restrain, coerce, and interfere with Flamm's exercise of his Section 7 rights under the Act. We conclude that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.[8]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, N & T Associates, Inc. d/b/a Aladdin Hotel, Las Vegas, Nevada, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[6] Member Zimmerman would find the violation even if Flamm were an open union adherent. Accordingly, he finds no fault with the judge's reliance on PPG.

[7] Cf., e.g., Rossmore House, supra, 1176 (activities manifesting status as known union adherent).

[8] Chairman Dotson believes that his colleagues read the Rossmore House holding too narrowly. Even assuming Flamm was not an open union supporter, the Board still must assess "all of the circumstances" to determine whether "the interrogation reasonably tends to restrain, coerce, or interfere with rights guaranteed by the Act." He finds no hint of restraint, coercion, or interference in Giantonio's addressing this single question to Flamm on the casino floor and would, accordingly, dismiss this allegation of the complaint.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

GERALD A. WACKNOV, Administrative Law Judge. Pursuant to notice, a hearing with respect to this matter was held before me in Las Vegas, Nevada, on September 27, 28, 29, and October 5, 6, and 7, 1983. The charge in Case 31–CA–13095 was filed on May 9, 1983,[1] by General Sales Drivers, Delivery Drivers & Helpers, Local Union #14 affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (the Union), and a complaint and notice of hearing was issued by the Regional Director for Region 31 of the National Labor Relations Board (the Board), on June 29, 1983.

The charge in Case 31–CA–13396 was filed by the Union on August 8, 1983. Thereafter, on August 25 the Acting Regional Director for Region 31 of the Board issued an order consolidating cases, consolidated amended complaint and notice of hearing alleging a violation by N & T Associates, Inc. d/b/a Aladdin Hotel (Respondent) of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act). Respondent's answers to the complaints, timely filed, deny the commission of any unfair labor practices.[2]

The parties were afforded a full opportunity to be heard, to call, examine, and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce relevant evidence. Since the close of the hearing, briefs have been received from the General Counsel and Respondent.

On the entire record, and based on my observation of the witnesses and consideration of the briefs submitted, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a Nevada corporation with an office and principal place of business located in Las Vegas, Nevada, where it is engaged in the operation of a hotel and casino. In the course and conduct of its business operations Respondent annually purchases and receives goods or services valued in excess of $50,000 directly from suppliers located outside the State of Nevada, and annually derives gross revenues in excess of $500,000.

It is admitted, and I find, that Respondent is now, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce and in a business affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

It is admitted that the Union is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Issues

The principal issues raised by the pleadings are whether Respondent coercively interrogated employees, threatened them with discharge, changed their work shifts, and discharged certain employees all because of their union activity, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

[1] All dates or time periods herein are within 1983 unless otherwise specified.

[2] Certain complaint allegations pertaining to an overly broad no-solicitation/distribution rule, and disparate enforcement of Respondent's bulletin board rules were settled informally during the course of the proceeding, and have been deleted from the complaint.

B. The Facts

1. Background

About the first part of May Respondent changed its "toke" or tip policy. Prior to that time, the tokes received by the 21-games dealers were pooled among all of the 21-games dealers and divided equally at the end of a 24-hour period. The tokes received by the craps dealers, however, were divided up at the end of each 8-hour shift by the crew operating each craps table, consisting of four individuals. Apparently to alleviate or diminish the incentive for "hustling" or the direct solicitation by craps dealers of either tokes or bets for dealers from customers at the craps tables, Respondent instituted a new toke policy, namely, that thereafter the tokes of all the 21-games dealers and craps dealers would be combined and divided equally at the end of a 24-hour period. This was particularly disturbing to the craps dealers, as it resulted in over a 50-percent reduction in their income.

Primarily as a result of the new toke policy, and apparently for other reasons not specified in the record, several employees went to the union hall on May 4 and requested that the Union commence an organizing campaign among Respondent's gaming employees. On May 4, Union President Robert Dambro sent a letter to Respondent's principal owner, Edward Torres, advising that "This letter is to officially notify you of our intent to organize your gaming employees at the Aladdin Hotel effective immediately." The letter named as "in House organizers" the following employees: Mark Erter, Bryan Mackey, Gerald Erkenswick, Paul Citelli, Jim Harshman, Danny Burrell, and Sonny Gee. The letter was received by Respondent on May 5.

2. The discharges of Tocco and Citelli; threats, promises, and interrogation

Edward Tocco had worked for Respondent since January 1978 as a craps dealer. He worked the swing shift—4 p.m. to midnight. On May 4, Paul Citelli and Bryan Mackey, who had been to the union hall earlier that day, as noted above, gave Tocco a union card in the dealers' room about 3:45 p.m., prior to the start of his shift. They also gave him six or eight additional cards. Tocco signed the card he was given, and during his various breaks at work that evening he spoke to approximately 25 employees in the dealers' breakroom and elsewhere, and solicited their support for the Union.

There are four craps dealers assigned to each table during the shift. On the four-man crew that night at table one were Tocco, Citelli, John Wickliffe, and Joe Martinez. Three dealers are always dealing or operating the game, while the fourth is on break. Breaks are taken according to a rotation system, each dealer working the game for 60 minutes and then taking a 20-minute break.

Tocco testified that at 5:40 p.m., as he was returning from his break, Mario Romano, swing shift pit boss, said he wanted to talk to Tocco. Romano told him not to "pioneer" on any labor union efforts and to "keep your nose clean, you can't afford to lose this job." Tocco said he had nothing to do with the Union. About 7 p.m., as he was returning from another break, Romano said, "Stay clean, now, don't say anything." Again Tocco replied that he had not said or done anything.

The shift was to end at midnight. About 11:45 p.m. Tocco was pulled off the game and was handed a termination slip by Romano, who said, "I have to let you go." The termination slip stated that Tocco was being discharged for hustling. Tocco became very upset and protested the reason for the termination. Romano said, "Well, I told you not to say anything." Tocco persisted, stating that Romano knew that he had not been discharged for hustling. According to Tocco, Romano just looked down and shrugged his shoulders. At no time was Tocco asked to provide management with an account of the alleged hustling incident.

Paul Citelli worked for Respondent since October 1979 as a craps dealer. As noted previously, he had gone to the union hall to seek union representation, at which time he signed a union card and became part of the organizing committee. On the evening of May 4, he spoke to 10 or 15 employees about the Union, and distributed several authorization cards in the dealers' room, the help's hall, and the coffee shop, the various locations where employees were permitted to take their breaks.

Citelli testified that during the shift Romano asked if he was involved in any union activities, and said if he was involved or was seen at any meetings he would be blackballed and would not be able to work and would lose his job. Romano also said that the dealers made enough money, that he could not understand why they were attempting to get a union, and that if Citelli had nothing to do with the union activity he would always have a job at the Aladdin. Citelli replied that what he did on his own time was his own business, and he would do what he believed best for himself. Despite Romano's warning, he continued to solicit for the Union during his breaks that evening.

After he and Romano had spoken, Citelli observed a conversation between the owner of Respondent, Ed Torres, Pat Kaner, a former manager, and Maurice "Moe" Miller, then casino manager, and overheard statements to the effect that "the situation had to be quashed," and that "whatever it took they had to nip it in the bud right then and there." Citelli did not testify that he heard the term "union" mentioned, however.

Citelli got off work at 11:40 that day. Romano approached him and said he had to fire him and that he was sorry, but there was nothing he could do. He explained that Miller told him that he had to fire Citelli because he was hustling. Romano said he knew that Citelli had not hustled, but there was nothing he could do about it.

Citelli testified that prior to the shift the dealers had decided not to engage in hustling thereafter because of the new toke policy, which became effective that evening. In fact, during the evening Citelli told a player who had placed a bet for the dealers that it was not necessary.

Fonley "Swede" Sorenson worked for Respondent for 5 years. His employment was terminated on June 2. He was a floorman in the craps pit, a supervisory position. The floorman is in charge of the four dealers, the boxman, and the game in general. He is to make sure the game is run properly and to extend credit to customers at the table. Additionally, he is to ensure that there is no hustling and, if he observes that customers are being hustled, he is to report it or take care of the situation. Sorenson testified that there have been at least one or two occasions in the 6-month period prior to June 2 when customers would complain to him about being hustled. Routinely, on a complaint by a customer, he would ask what the problem was, and would then confer with the dealer in question, the boxman who also is a supervisor assigned to watch the game, and possibly Sorenson's supervisor, the pit boss. Sorenson has given dealers verbal warnings for hustling.

On May 4, he was a floorman over table one, the table on which Tocco and Citelli were alleged to have hustled. Sorenson testified he did not observe hustling by any dealers that evening, particularly Tocco or Citelli, and had never observed them hustling prior to this date. Sorenson said that during the shift on May 4 there were no customer complaints, nor did anyone from management say that a customer had complained. Further, contrary to customary procedures, Sorenson was not asked by any representative of management whether he had observed any hustling. Sorenson recalled that earlier that evening a player with a foreign accent was placing line bets for the dealers on table 1. He observed a $100 bet for the dealers and was told that the player had placed similar bets. However, Sorenson was certain that no player dressed in western clothing had placed bets of any amount for the dealers between 11 p.m. and midnight, as contended, infra, by Miller and Romano. Further, he observed that during the evening Citelli had refused a bet that a customer wanted to make for the dealers, telling the customer that it was not necessary. This was the first time that he had ever observed a dealer refuse a bet.

Sorenson testified that he became aware of the union activity early that evening when Bryan Mackey mentioned it to him. Near the end of the shift, Romano showed Sorenson the termination slips for Tocco and Citelli. Sorenson asked why they were fired, and Romano said, "For hustling." Sorenson said there had been no hustling and Romano replied, "I know." Sorenson suggested that Romano not sign the slips, and have the person responsible for the discharges sign them. Romano said that that was his job and he was required to do it. Sorenson remarked that they were getting rid of Tocco and Citelli because of the union activities. Romano said, "Yes, I know." Later, Sorenson said to Romano, "Don't use me as a witness for these terminations," and said they would have to fire him before he would be a witness to it. As noted above, Sorenson was discharged on June 2. The record contains no evidence regarding the reason for his discharge.

Bryan Mackey is a craps dealer and began working for Respondent in 1976. He was acting as a boxman on the evening shift on May 4, and apparently rotated between several tables. He was working as a boxman on table 1 30 percent of the time between the hours of 11 p.m. to midnight that night, and recalls that the table was slow at that time. The duties of a boxman are to supervise the game and make sure the losing bets are picked up, the winning bets are paid off properly, and the money is placed in the box, and to cosign any credit markers. When Mackey was boxman at table 1 he did not observe either Tocco or Citelli hustling any customers. While he did not observe any $100 line bets for the dealers that evening, he did observe Citelli refuse a bet.

Mackey testified that generally when a customer complains about hustling the customer would first go to a pit boss who, in turn, generally goes to the immediate supervisor or floorman on the game to inquire about the circumstances. Sometimes the boxman is also questioned about the matter. This procedure is for the purpose of ascertaining whether the allegation is true, as the player could have been disgruntled and perhaps misinterpreted the dealer's conduct. Mackey was never asked about any alleged hustling during the shift.

Joe Martinez began working for Respondent in 1980 and is still employed as a craps dealer. He worked on the shift with Citelli and Tocco the night they were terminated. He did not observe any hustling, and does not recall any $100 line bets for the dealers at any time during the shift.

John Wickliffe has worked for Respondent since 1980 as a craps dealer. He also worked on the shift in question with Tocco and Citelli. He did not observe any hustling that evening. He recalls that about midway through the shift a customer was making $50 and $100 line bets for the dealers. However, there were no such bets placed during the last hour of the shift. Wickliffe acknowledged that while some dealers hustle or ask for bets, the dealers were in general agreement prior to the shift that they would refrain from this practice so there would be no opportunity for Respondent to discharge them.

Miller testified that about 11:45 p.m. on May 4, he overheard a conversation between Romano and a customer dressed in western attire and with a Texas or southern accent. Miller's testimony is as follows:

> To the best of my recollection I was on the telephone and Mr. Romano just came into the pit, and a gentleman came over from the crap table and started complaining about being hustled and being begged for a bet. He had bet a hundred-dollar chip for the dealers, and they lost. Then they asked him to put up another hundred-dollar bet. And that is when he got insulted and walked over to Mr. Romano and started complaining.
>
> Mr. Romano tried to cool him off, and invited him to dinner the next night. The gentleman went to the cage, wouldn't give us his name, cashed in his chips, and walked out.

Romano testified that the incident occurred about 11 p.m., rather than 11:45 p.m. as Miller stated, and that he was distinctly able to place the time because he was called off his break and summoned to the dice pits. He stepped into the pit and, according to Romano, "a very irate customer met [him] head on." Miller was about 6 or 8 feet away on the telephone, and observed the conversation between Romano and a man with a southwestern accent dressed in western clothes. The customer told Romano that he was playing at the casino and was "sick of being hustled and having dealers begging me for bets." Romano asked who hustled him, and the customer pointed toward craps table 1, and stated that it was "[t]he fellow with the stick [Tocco]. Romano then asked "who else hustled you," and the customer said "the fellow on the left [Citelli]." Romano said he was sorry, and offered to treat the customer to dinner or a show. The man refused to tell Romano his name and said he did not intend to return to the casino. He then walked toward the cage to cash in his chips, and Romano saw that he had about 15 $100 chips in his hand. Romano then returned to the dice pit and told Miller that, "We just lost a customer. He said that he was hustled at "Crap Number One." Miller said, "By who?" Romano stated, "He claimed Citelli and Tocco." Miller told Romano that he was going to phone G.C. Vic Vickrey, executive vice president and director of casino operations, who was at home. After speaking to Vickrey, Miller told Romano to "terminate them both."

About 11:40 a.m. Romano gave Citelli his termination notice, telling him that he was sorry but that a customer had complained that he was hustling. According to Romano, Citelli said "okay" and walked away. Nothing else was said. Romano denied that he had any conversation with Citelli that night regarding any subject, and specifically denied that there was any conversation about union activity. He testified that he was unaware of such activity.

When Romano gave Tocco his termination slip, Tocco protested and said he did not do anything. Romano did not reply. Tocco signed the slip and, according to Romano, said, "You did what you had to do. Now, I have got to do what I have to do." He had had no prior conversation with Tocco that evening.

2. Shift changes

Gerald Erkenswick has been working for Respondent as a craps dealer for about 7 years. He was involved in initiating the union campaign, and his name was among the seven employees listed as union organizers on the aforementioned letter which was sent to Respondent by the Union. He had worked the preceding 2 years on the graveyard shift. His shift was changed on about May 7 or 8 when he was placed on swing shift. His schedule was again changed about September 13 back to graveyard. When on the graveyard shift he worked about 4-1/2 days per week or about 9 days per pay period; on swing shift he worked only 6 days per pay period. Thus, the change in shift considerably lessened his income.

He spoke to Romano about this when he began his first day on swing shift. Also Robert Stevens, assistant pit boss, was present. Romano said, "Didn't think you would be back on swing shift, did you?" Erkenswick replied that he preferred the graveyard shift and asked why he had been placed on swing. Romano said, "You know why . . . you know, you shouldn't have jumped the gun." Erkenswick testified that Respondent would break up the crews periodically, every 2 or 3 months, but would not change their shifts.

Robert Stevens began working for Respondent in 1976 as a floorman, a supervisory position. His employment with Respondent terminated on June 5. He was responsible for making up the swing shift schedule each week for the craps dealers and the boxmen and floormen. Stevens testified that on May 5 or 6 he had a conversation with Romano, his immediate supervisor. Romano took out a list of six names, and he said those employees were having their shifts changed because they were listed as union organizers in the letter Respondent had recently received.[3] Stevens suggested that was a bad move on the part of Respondent, and Romano, according to Stevens, said he was told to do it by "the man." Thereafter, the schedules were changed as Romano directed.

Andrew Smith is a relief shift boss, and makes out work schedules. Smith testified that it is a policy of Respondent to break up crews every 60–90 days. This prevents them from agreeing on signals for possible hustling or collusion. According to Smith, about 20 percent of the approximately 40–50 craps dealers would stay on the same shift for a year, and the shifts of the remaining dealers would be changed. As an example, Smith testified that in October 1982 six dealers from graveyard were assigned to the day shift and vice versa.

3. The discharge of Costanza; threats

Anthony Costanza began working for Respondent on May 26, 1976, and was discharged in the early morning of August 6, while he was on the graveyard shift (7 p.m. to 3 a.m.). He primarily dealt the "Big Six" or wheel of fortune. George Maxson, casino executive, was his immediate supervisor. Costanza's testimony clearly reflected that he considered himself to be "the man" in charge of organizing the "21" dealers, and he appeared to be extremely proud of the fact that he was placed in such a prestigious position by the Union. Costanza testified that he organized a network of about eight "pretty strong" helpers and directed their activities, and that he handed them some 60 to 65 authorization cards for distribution, talked about the Union with approximately 65 of the 90 dealers, and directly solicited cards from about 27 dealers. The record reflects that no other employee was as active in the union campaign.

Costanza testified that on July 22, while he was on a break, he was approached by Romano who told him that there was an election coming up[4] and that if the Union won the election the craps and 21-games dealers would again have to pool their tokes. Romano asked him to spread the word and Costanza said all right. Romano denied that he ever had a conversation of this nature with Costanza.

Further, according to Costanza, around August 2 Joe Giantonio, a floorman and admitted supervisor, asked him how he was going to vote. Costanza readily admitted that he was the organizer for the 21-games dealers. Giantonio said it was not good to get involved with union organizing, and Costanza replied that it was unfair that the 21-games dealers only made $35 per day, and that he was upset about the way people were being fired. Several hours later Giantonio said that Vickrey would be leaving Respondent's employ and would be going to the El Rancho casino, and therefore the Union would not be necessary. Further, he said that if the Union did win the election, Torres, Respondent's owner, would cancel the hospitalization benefits.

[3] As noted above the May 4 letter from the Union contained seven names, however, Citelli had been previously discharged. Apparently, according to the complaint, the shifts of the following employees were changed: Mark Erter, Bryan Mackey, Gerald Erkenswick, Jim Harshman, Danny Burrell, and Sonny Gee.

[4] On June 2 a representation petition was filed in Case 31-RC-5526, and a Decision and Direction of Election issued on July 14. The representation election was scheduled for August 12 but has been postponed indefinitely pending Board review.

Giantonio testified that several dealers had told him that Costanza had been standing up on the tables in the dining room chanting "Union, Union, Union." In early August, he asked Costanza why he was so vocal about the Union, and told him that management thought highly of him and that he was doing a good job. Costanza explained his reasons for supporting the Union, and mentioned three points: the tokes of the 21-games dealers being combined with those of the craps dealers; an incident concerning Vickrey and employee Robert La Fountain wherein Vickrey is alleged to have precluded La Fountain from receiving a $1250 tip from a customer; and the lack of job security in the casino industry in general. Giantonio told Costanza that the instigator of the toke policy, Miller, had retired and the original toke policy had been reinstated; that the $1250 toke incident was said to have happened on a game he was observing and as he did not see the incident it was very unlikely that it had occurred; and regarding job security, Giantonio anticipated that new management would probably be appointed at the casino, and that everything would be all right. Giantonio testified that he did not ask Costanza how he intended to vote, or tell him that he should not be involved with union organizing activities. Nor did he state that Vickrey was going to the El Rancho, and that therefore the Union was not necessary. Moreover, according to Giantonio, there was no discussion of hospitalization benefits.

On August 2 or 3 Costanza's schedule on the graveyard shift was changed from Tuesday through Saturday to Tuesday through Friday. It is alleged that this shift change, discussed infra, was discriminatorily motivated.

On the August 5 graveyard shift Costanza observed Maxson, his supervisor, who was seated at the bar, staring at him for a prolonged period of time. Later that night Maxson came over to the Big Six Wheel and asked what Costanza was going to do when he came back tomorrow and the Big Six was gone. Costanza said he could also deal 21-games. Maxson then told him that he was not going to be able to get another job because he was involved in union activity. Shortly thereafter, while Costanza was on a break, Maxson continued the conversation at the unoccupied 21-games tables. Maxson told Costanza that he was finished in this town, and that Torres, Respondent's owner, would see to it that Costanza would not be able to get another job because he was involved in union organizing activity. Costanza reiterated his reasons for favoring the Union. Maxson stated that the Teamsters were crooks, and Costanza replied that paying dealers $35 per shift was like stealing from them. Maxson said, "I could fire you right now and you wouldn't even get to vote." He further stated that Costanza would not be able to get another job and would lose his home, and that "you, your wife and your baby would have to leave town." He ended the conversation by threatening that, "Mr. Torres knows how to deal with people like you, if you know what I mean." Costanza could smell liquor on Maxson's breath, and testified that immediately prior to this confrontation he had observed Maxson drinking at the bar.

Later, at 2:30 a.m. on August 6, Costanza was given a termination slip by Frank Garcia, backup shift boss, who merely stated that he had been told to deliver the slip. Costanza testified that at no point that night did he refuse to follow instructions from any member of management, or use any expletives during a conversation with Maxson. Nor had he been told by Maxson to stop talking to employees while he was operating the Big Six. Costanza further testified that while dealing the Big Six he was allowed to talk to anybody he wanted to, so long as there were no customers present; that he was never given any written or verbal reprimands for excessive talking or failing to properly perform his duties; and that he never distributed authorization cards to employees while at the Big Six.

Elton Ebarb is a 21-games dealer. Ebarb testified that during his first night on the graveyard shift, about the first week in May, Costanza called him over to the Big Six wheel, reached into his sock, and removed an authorization card which he handed to Ebarb. Costanza said, according to Ebarb, "I know you're on our side," and asked him to fill out the card and send it in or return it to him. Costanza added, "I got to do this fast because George Maxson has warned me before about talking on the wheel." Ebarb testified that he was very surprised and disturbed about being confronted in such a manner, because in the gaming business it is unacceptable and against policy to go to your sock or pocket, and he did not want to be under suspicion. Two days later Costanza asked whether Ebarb had sent the card in, and Ebarb said no. Ebarb testified that he mentioned the incident to Bill Peccole, his 21-games boss on days.

Costanza, on rebuttal, denied that this conversation occurred. Rather, according to Costanza, after the petition for an election was filed, he gave Ebarb an authorization card, which he obtained from his sock, in the coffee shop. Further, Costanza recalled that at this time Ebarb said he had a relative or somebody who was involved with the Teamsters and would probably become a shop steward.

Jeffrey Kaufman is a 21-games dealer. About 2 weeks prior to the union election, Costanza motioned for him to approach the Big Six Wheel. Costanza told him that if the Union was voted in, the people who were part of the Union would be secure and would not be in jeopardy of losing their jobs should there be new management. According to Kaufman, there were three or four customers on the game at the time, and the conversation lasted 30 seconds. Kaufman testified that he was surprised that Costanza was engaging him in such a conversation during a live game.

Costanza, on rebuttal, testified that he never talked to Kaufman about the Union at the Big Six Wheel, but did have a conversation with him in the coffee shop.

Gene Dessel is a 21-games dealer on the day shift. He has been in Respondent's employ 4 months. In mid-July, on his way to the dealers' breakroom, Costanza, who was operating the Big Six, stopped him and said "We have this election won, the majority of dealers are with us and people respect you and they like you on this shift." He told Dessel to keep talking to the people and "We'll win the election." The conversation lasted 15–20 seconds. Prior to this occasion Dessel was not acquainted with Costanza, and had never had any conversation with him about the Union, or about anything else. According to Dessel, there were about six customers at the wheel during the conversation, and Costanza had stepped from behind the table into the aisle, and had his back to the wheel. Dessel felt that Costanza's conduct was unusual and that Costanza was not properly performing his job. Costanza engaged him in about two other conversations of a similar nature, although Dessel does not recall if there were any customers at the wheel during these subsequent conversations.

Costanza, on rebuttal, testified that although he had relieved Dessel at the Big Six on several occasions, he was not acquainted with him in July, and had no conversation with him at any time or place about the Union.

Al Gundlack is a graveyard 21-games shift manager. His immediate supervisor is Maxson. About mid-July, he observed a conversation at the Big Six Wheel between Costanza and, he believes, La Fountain, another 21-games dealer. No customers were at the wheel. As Gundlack approached, La Fountain walked away. Gundlack asked Costanza what was going on, and Costanza said they were discussing tokes. Gundlack told him to stop engaging in such conversations, and that he could talk about tokes elsewhere.

About a week later, Gundlack again observed him talking to another 21-games dealer whom he believes was Natale. They were talking for 2 or 3 minutes, and although there were no customers at the wheel, the wheel is to be kept spinning at all times in order to attract customers. On this occasion the wheel was not spinning. As Gundlack approached, Natale walked away. Gundlack told Costanza to stop the conversation and to keep the wheel spinning. Constanza said okay. A few days later, about the end of July or the first of August, Gundlack observed Costanza talking to another dealer. As he began to approach the wheel, the employees looked up and the other dealer walked away. Gundlack motioned for Costanza to keep the wheel spinning.

Prior to the above occasions, according to Gundlack, Costanza's conversations with employees would be of 2 or 3 seconds duration and were "walking conversations." However, the aforementioned incidents were of 2 to 4 minutes duration, and therefore were excessive. Moreover, at times during the foregoing conversations, Costanza would have his back to the "rack" or stacks of chips, an unacceptable practice. Gundlack never told Costanza his job was in jeopardy if he continued that conduct.

Frank Garcia has a supervisory position on the graveyard shift. He reports to Gundlack. In early July, Miller directed his attention to the Big Six. He saw Costanza and La Fountain talking to each other. La Fountain was seated by the slot machines, near the Big Six. Garcia told Miller he would talk to them. While he was approaching, Costanza looked at him and Garcia motioned for him to discontinue the conversation. He also apparently told the two employees to stop the talking. Several weeks later, he saw Costanza talking to Natale. When Costanza looked up, Garcia motioned for him to stop. Each of the conversations he observed lasted a minute or two. About a week prior to the election, Gundlack told Garcia that he was sick and tired of asking Costanza not to talk to other dealers, and directed Garcia to again ask Costanza to discontinue such conduct. Garcia did this, and advised Costanza that it was against the rules to talk to other dealers while he was dealing the Big Six. Prior to July, Garcia had observed similar conversations between Costanza and the dealers.

George Maxson is casino executive for Respondent and is in charge of all casino operations when Vickrey is not present. He is also specifically in charge of the "21-games tables on all three shifts. He testified that he did not know Costanza was specifically involved in union activity.

Maxson testified that he was aware that about 2 weeks prior to the night of August 5, the graveyard shift boss, Al Gundlack, and his assistant, Frank Garcia, had told Costanza that he was involved in too much conversation while there were players on the game. Gundlack told Maxson that he had talked to Costanza about this on several occasions, and had also directed Garcia to talk to him. Maxson had several conversations concerning Costanza with Gundlack, and one with Garcia in the presence of Gundlack. Garcia said that he had informed Constanza to continue dealing the game, and not to talk to employees while he was on the game. Maxson told them to monitor the situation, and to advise him if Costanza continued to engage in such conduct.

At 1:15 a.m. on August 6, Maxson observed Costanza, who was operating the Big Six, talking to a dealer while there were two customers present at the wheel. The customers had money down on the table, and Costanza had his back to them. Maxson approached Costanza and told him not to talk and to continue dealing the game. Maxson began to walk away and when he had walked only a short distance he again observed Costanza talking with another dealer. The same customers were present, and Costanza had not yet spun the wheel. He walked back to Costanza and said he wanted to see him on his break. At this time, by coincidence, a dealer came to relieve Costanza who was due for his break, and Costanza and Maxson walked to the 21-games pit. Both were standing. Maxson told him he had to stop the talking, and that stopping the action on the game and talking to the dealers in this way jeopardized his family, his home, and everything. He further said that Costanza could be terminated if this conduct continued. Costanza began talking about the $1250 toke that management had "stolen" from La Fountain. Maxson said he did not want to talk about that, but wanted to discuss Costanza's lack of attention to his job. Maxson repeated, "[Y]ou just jeopardize your family, your home and everything by continuing to do this, and to stop it." Costanza replied, according to Maxson, that he did not have to worry about a job as he had a family that would always get him a job, and to "fuck off and leave me alone." Costanza was gesticulating vigorously during the conversation and stuck his finger very close to Maxson's face. Then Costanza turned around and walked away with his hands covering his ears.

Maxson testified that he was momentarily stunned as Costanza's behavior was unanticipated and clearly out of character. Several minutes later Gundlack came over, and Maxson told him to terminate Costanza for insubordination, telling him briefly what Costanza had said.

Maxson testified that during the aforementioned conversation with Costanza he did not mention the Union or say Costanza would be finished in the town or ask him what would happen when he came to work tomorrow and there is no Big Six wheel. Nor did he say anything to the effect that Torres would see to it Costanza never worked again if he continued to be involved in the union situation; that the Teamsters are crooks; or that Torres knows how to deal with people like Costanza. Further, Maxson testified that he did not go to the bar that evening and have several drinks. Rather, he had one beer about 2 a.m. after work, and had no other alcohol that evening. He very seldom sits at the bar, and very seldom drinks hard liquor. Maxon said he never talked to Costanza or any other dealer about the upcoming election.

Gundlack corroborated Maxson's testimony. On August 6, Gundlack saw Constanza talking to Maxson at the Big Six about 1:15 a.m. About 5 minutes later, he asked Maxson what was wrong with Costanza. Maxson said Costanza was talking to a dealer while there were customers at the table, and that he intended to talk to Costanza on his break. About 15 minutes later he observed Maxson and Costanza talking in the 21-games pit. At first they appeared to be engaged in a polite conversation. However, a few minutes later, Gundlack saw Costanza's hands gesticulating in an animated fashion and then saw him point a finger waving it towards Maxson's face while they were only a few feet apart. Then he saw Costanza leave. Maxson looked surprised, and Gundlack walked over to him and asked what was wrong. Maxson said he wanted Gundlack to terminate Costanza, because he just told Maxson to "fuck myself." Gundlack wrote up a termination slip and told Frank Garcia to give it to Costanza when the Big Six was closed down for the night.

Costanza, on rebuttal, testified that Garcia never told him to discontinue any conversation with La Fountain or Natale; and neither Garcia nor Maxson ever gestured to him to stop talking at the wheel, or told him to stop talking to dealers. Costanza testified that he never had his back to the game; never told Maxson his family would insure that he would always have a job; never told Maxson to "Fuck off and leave me alone"; and has never been told by Gundlack to stop talking to dealers, or anything similar to that.

4. The change in Costanza's schedule

As stated above, Costanza's schedule on the graveyard shift had been changed on August 2 or 3 from Tuesday through Saturday to Tuesday through Friday, thus reducing his workweek. Moreover, the record shows that Saturday night is the busiest night of the week at the casino, and that Costanza, because of his ability to attract customers to the Big Six as a result of his demonstrative personality, was considered to be the premier Big Six dealer in Respondent's employ.

Maxson testified that during the first week in August he was informed by Vickrey that thereafter the second 21-games pit, denominated "B pit," would not be operating on swing shift during weekends because business did not warrant the additional personnel. Also, for the same reason, baccarat was reduced to one shift during the weekend and a craps game was discontinued on swing shift. As a result, Maxson changed the schedule of the dealers which had previously been posted. The new schedule reflected that, not only was Costanza given Saturday off, but also that eight other employees who had originally been scheduled to work on Friday or Saturday were given those respective days off. Maxson testified that he attempted to reschedule them so that they would have 3, rather than 2, successive days off every other weekend. Although on Friday and Saturday, August 5 and 6, it became necessary to expand a few games over into B pit, that pit has been closed on the weekends since that time.

5. Additional threats and interrogation

Ronald Flamm, a current employee, testified that Billy Mills, a supervisor, approached him in late July, and wanted to know if Flamm was aware of the scheduled election. Mills, according to Flamm, asked him which way he was going to vote, and said that management would appreciate it if he would vote no. As a result of this testimony, the General Counsel moved to amend the complaint, and the motion was granted. On cross-examination Flamm initially was very sure about the conversation and reiterated that he was "absolutely" and "exactly" sure that Mills "directly" asked him how he was going to vote. However, on being provided with a copy of his affidavit, Flamm agreed that Mills merely said he would appreciate it if he would vote with management, and did not ask him how he was going to vote. As a result of Flamm's testimony on cross-examination, this amendment to the complaint was withdrawn.

Flamm further testified that in early August, Supervisor Giantonio wanted to know what Flamm was going to do after he lost his job. Flamm asked what he meant, and Giantonio replied that the employees were hurting themselves by voting for a union, and that Flamm would probably be losing his job. Giantonio also told him that the hotel was about to be sold and the new owners would probably get rid of all the dealers because of their union activities. About a week later, sometime prior to the election, Giantonio repeated essentially the same things to Flamm, and told him that "we'd be going out the door anyway—Union or not."

Giantonio testified that he heard from other dealers that Flamm was vocal on behalf of the Union. He asked Flamm why he was so enthusiastic about the Union when he knew that new management was coming in and that things would probably change for the better. Flamm then proceeded to engage in a tirade about his disregard for management in general and stated that casino management all over town "were all pieces of shit." He then began discussing his inability to get a job at a different casino. Giantonio specifically denied making the other statements attributed to him by Flamm.

Robert La Fountain is currently employed as a 21-games dealer. La Fountain testified that about a week before the election, Billy Mills, a floorman and admitted supervisor, asked him how he was going to vote. Further, Mills said that if he would vote no he would be taken care of by Mills and Maxson, explaining that, according to La Fountain, "being the best dealer on the shift, I would have no problem getting a floor job over at the El Rancho."

Billy Mills testified that Maxson asked him if he would mind talking to the dealers about the Union. He spoke to approximately 13 dealers, and told them all the same thing, namely, that the employees should consider the pros and cons and should cast their vote, but that he did not want to know how they intended to vote. Although he sometimes supervises La Fountain, Mills never had a conversation with him about the Union, never asked how he was going to vote in the election, and never told La Fountain that if he voted no, he could expect to be given a floorman's position at the El Rancho. Prior to February 1983 Mills was a floorman at the Riviera Casino, and had previously worked there under the supervision of Maxson who assisted him in obtaining employment with Respondent.

C. Analysis and Conclusions

1. The discharge of Tocco and Citelli; threats, promises, and interrogation

The record is clear that hustling by employees is considered to be a serious infraction of Respondent's rules and that various forms of discipline have been imposed for hustling, from verbal warnings to dismissal. The nature of the discipline, as reflected by the record evidence, apparently depends on the seriousness of the incident, as determined on a case-by-case basis. Nevertheless, it appears that hustling is sometimes difficult to detect at the craps table where the noise, action, and number of excited customers create a rather hectic atmosphere, and that hustling does occur, on a not infrequent basis, despite the fact that the dealers are reminded from time to time that hustling is strictly prohibited.

Had Tocco and Citelli been hustling in the manner alleged by Miller and Romano, it is clear that their discharge would have been in conformity with Respondent's established business practice. However, the abundant and credible record evidence, discussed below, clearly satisfies me that the scenario described by Romano and Miller simply did not occur.

Tocco and Citelli are alleged to have "begged" bets for the dealers on table 1, from a customer dressed in western attire, sometime between 11 and 11:45 p.m. on May 4. There were four dealers at that particular table, who were observed by a supervisor and a boxman. All of these individuals favorably impressed me as being credible witnesses, and appeared to have an accurate recollection of the evening in question. Each testified that there was no hustling by Tocco and Citelli or anyone else, nor was there a "high roller" at the table that evening fitting the description given by Romano and Miller.

Moreover, it is admitted by Romano and Miller that they reacted to the stranger's alleged contention that he had been begged for bets by, after phoning Vickrey, immediately discharging Tocco and Citelli without even inquiring into the matter. Such a reaction is totally implausible, given the fact that Tocco and Citelli were considered to be good employees, that they had been in Respondent's employ for approximately 5 years, that they had not been previously reprimanded for hustling, and above all that Respondent had a supervisor, Sorenson, stationed at the table the entire evening for the very purpose of, among other duties, insuring that no hustling was occurring. While Respondent contends that hustling is sometimes difficult to detect because of the frenzied nature of the game, this does not provide a legitimate and believable excuse for Miller or Romano to simply assume, without inquiry, that Sorenson would know nothing about the alleged incident. The fact that no investigation was instigated by management, either prior or subsequent to the discharges, is conclusive evidence that management was quite aware that, in fact, there were no hustlers and there was no irate western-attired high roller who cashed in his chips and walked out into the night, never to darken Respondent's casino again. Finally, it would be difficult to have more probative evidence than the testimony of Supervisor Sorenson. As noted previously, he was a highly credible witness, and Respondent has not proffered any evidence tending to show that Sorenson would have a reason for fabricating his testimony. Thus, I find that Romano admitted to Sorenson that the discharges of Tocco and Citelli were a direct consequence of their union activities. By such conduct Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

I credit Tocco and find that after he had engaged in extensive union activity on the evening of May 4, Romano told him not to "pioneer" in any union efforts and to keep his nose clean and not to say anything about the union because he could not afford to lose his job. Later that night, when Romano discharged Tocco, he reiterated that he had previously warned Tocco not to say anything. By such conduct, Respondent unlawfully created the impression of surveillance of Tocco's union activity, attempted to unlawfully dissuade him from engaging in such activity, and threatened him with discharge, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

Similarly, I find that Romano, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, interrogated Citelli about his union activity, threatened him with discharge and with being blackballed by Respondent from other jobs, and promised him a permanent job with Respondent in the event he refrained from such union activity. I also find that, as Citelli credibly testified, Romano admitted to Citelli that his discharge for hustling was a mere pretext.

2. Shift changes

Supervisor Stevens appeared to be a credible witness. He forthrightly testified that about May 5 or 6 Romano told him to change the shift of six employees because they had been named in the Union's letter as "in house organizers" for the Union. The record evidence shows that the change in shift had a detrimental effect on the income of employee Erkenswick who testified that as a result of the shift change he worked approximately 3 days less per pay period. It would appear that the remaining five employees suffered similar reductions in income. Further, I credit Erkenswick and find that when he asked Romano why he had been placed on the swing shift, Romano told him that he "shouldn't have jumped the gun." Obviously, this was a reference to his union activity.

While Respondent maintains that it was not unusual for employees' shifts to be changed from time to time, the record is crystal clear that on the instant occasion shifts were changed not for permissible and customary business reasons, but as a direct and immediate result of the employees' union activity. Moreover, the record does not show that the shifts of the named employees would have been changed at that time even absent any union activity.

By the foregoing conduct, I find that Respondent discriminatorily changed the work shifts of employees Mark Erter, Bryan Mackey, Gerald Erkenswick, Jim Harshman, Danny Burrell, and Sonny Gee, to their detriment, and thereby has violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act, as alleged.[8] Further, Romano's statement to Erkenswick implying in no uncertain terms that the shift change was due to his union activity is clearly coercive and is violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

3. The discharge of Costanza; threats

Although Costanza appeared to be a very convincing witness, his testimony was inherently suspect. Thus, while he categorically denied that he had any conversations with dealers at the Big Six involving union solicitation, his involvement with the Union, according to a reasonable interpretation of his testimony, appeared to be obsessive. Given his vocal and demonstrative character traits, utilized to the fullest extent by Respondent as a vehicle for attracting customers to the Big Six, I find it implausible that Costanza possessed sufficient self-control, under the circumstances, to limit his union-related conversations to his breaks or off-duty hours, as he testified.

Moreover, extensive and seemingly credible testimonial evidence proffered by Respondent further tends to undermine Costanza's apparent credibility. It is unnecessary to reiterate the foregoing testimony of various employees, all of whom appeared to be candid and forthright, regarding their conversations with Costanza at the Big Six. A reasonable summary of their testimony demonstrates that Costanza engaged employees in union-related conversations at the Big Six on numerous occasions, sometimes when customers were present, and that the employees considered Costanza's conduct to be quite irregular and contrary to Respondent's established policy. Further, Costanza admitted to employee Elton Ebarb that he had been warned about such conduct by George Maxson.

I was likewise favorably impressed with the testimony of Supervisors Gundlack, Garcia, and Maxson all of whom testified that on numerous occasions they had warned Costanza about excessive talking and inattention to his duties, and that Costanza's failure to heed their warnings and discontinue the unacceptable conduct had become a matter of some concern. In fact, it appears that, under the circumstances, Costanza's supervisors were being extremely tolerant of his conduct.

Also noteworthy is the fact that La Fountain, who appeared as a witness on behalf of the General Counsel for other purposes, was not called as a witness to corroborate Costanza's testimony that certain incidents involving La Fountain did not occur. Thus, the record testimony shows that on several occasions Costanza was observed by Supervisors Gundlack and Garcia speaking to La Fountain at the Big Six. Indeed, on one such occasion, Garcia instructed the two employees to stop the talking.

As a result of the foregoing, and despite Costanza's convincing testimonial demeanor, I am constrained to conclude that the evidence is insufficient to show that he did not, in fact, engage in the conversations attributed to him, and that he was not, in fact, frequently warned for such conduct.

Although I find it highly unlikely that Maxson was not aware of Costanza's extensive union activities, nevertheless, it is significant that, insofar as the record shows, neither Maxson, Garcia, or Gundlack, who were subjected to extensive cross-examination and appeared to be credible, had engaged in any contemporaneous unlawful activity, and that neither Romano nor Miller were involved in Costanza's discharge. Further, while Costanza testified that during the sequence of events preceding his discharge Maxson had been drinking and, although not intoxicated, was obviously affected by the amount of alcohol he had consumed, the record does not substantiate this contention. Thus, Maxson denied that he had consumed any alcohol that evening prior to Costanza's discharge, and there is no corroborative testimony regarding Maxson's sobriety on the night in question, or his general drinking habits while on the job, that would tend to support Costanza's assertions.

In summary, despite the fact that Respondent engaged in blatant violations of the Act by discharging Tocco and Citelli, and that the discharge of Costanza, the Union's most vocal and active adherent, was precipitated by an alleged isolated, out-of-character expletive, uttered during a one-on-one conversation, only a week prior to the scheduled election, I conclude from the foregoing that the record is insufficient to establish that Costanza's discharge was motivated by his union activity rather than by his insubordinate behavior. Therefore, I shall dismiss this allegation of the complaint. For the same reasons, I conclude that the statements attributed to Maxson by Costanza, alleged as violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, must be dismissed.

[8] It has not been alleged or contended that the change in shifts of other individuals who replaced the aforementioned employees was likewise discriminatory.

Moreover, I am unable to credit Costanza regarding his alleged July 22 conversation with Romano, who denied that he had told Costanza anything to the effect that tokes would again be pooled if the Union was voted in. Under the circumstances, herein, the record evidence does not sufficiently demonstrate to my satisfaction that a statement of this nature was made by Romano, who is not alleged to have engaged in any further unlawful conduct subsequent to May 4. Therefore, I shall also dismiss this allegation of the complaint.

I credit Supervisor Giantonio's account of the August 2 conversation with Costanza, and find that he did not ask Costanza how he intended to vote or advise him to discontinue his union activity or make the other statements attributed to him by Costanza. However, as admitted by Giantonio, he did ask Costanza why he was so vocal on behalf of the Union. Consistent with established Board precedent, I find that such conduct on the part of Giantonio constitutes coercive interrogation which is violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the act, particularly absent any evidence that Costanza initiated the conversation or otherwise notified Giantonio of his union sympathies. PPG Industries, 251 NLRB 1146 (1980); Host Services, 263 NLRB 672, 681 (1982); Zero Corp., 262 NLRB 495, 496 (1982), enfd. 705 F.2d 439 (5th Cir. 1983).

4. The change in Costanza's schedule

The record reflects that about August 2 Costanza's schedule was changed. As a result, he was no longer scheduled to work the following Saturday, as previously scheduled. The General Counsel contends that the change was discriminatorily motivated.

It is clear that at the same time, eight employees, in addition to Costanza, were given either Friday or Saturday off by Maxson, in order to comply with Vickrey's instructions to reduce the personnel on certain games due to a decline in business. While such evidence would tend to show that Costanza was treated no differently than other employees, the General Counsel argues that because Costanza was considered to be the premier Big Six dealer, he would have been permitted to remain on the job on the following and each subsequent Saturday, the busiest night of the week, but for his union activity. However, it appears, according to Maxson's testimony, that he was attempting to treat the employees under his supervision equally during a unique situation, and intended that they be scheduled to work alternate weekends. Thus, had Costanza remained in Respondent's employ, he would have worked on alternate Saturdays. In this manner he would have been accorded the same treatment as the other employees. I therefore conclude that the record fails to establish that but for Costanza's union activity, he would have been given more favorable treatment than the other employees, by being permitted to work every weekend, rather than every other weekend, and I shall dismiss this allegation of the complaint.

5. Additional threats and interrogation

Giantonio impressed me as a forthright witness and I credit his account of the early August conversation with Flamm. Flamm did not appear to have a sufficient regard for the accuracy of his various conversations with management, as exemplified by the abrupt change in his testimony regarding his conversation with Mills, which resulted in the withdrawal of that particular allegation. Rather, it appears that Flamm's testimony was influenced by his subjective interpretation of the conversations. However, as Giantonio admitted, he did commence the conversation by asking why Flamm was so enthusiastic about the Union. Interrogation of this nature is violative of the Act, particularly as Flamm had not previously announced or identified himself to management as a union supporter. PPG Industries, supra.

La Fountain, a current employee, appeared to be a credible witness, and I credit his account of the early August conversation with Supervisor Mills. Thus, I find that Mills did ask him how he was going to vote, and did promise that if he would vote no he would be given a supervisor's job at the El Rancho, a hotel apparently owned by Respondent's principal owner. Such statements constitute a coercive interrogation and a promise of benefit in exchange for voting against union representation and are violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, as alleged.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by discharging employees Edward Tocco and Paul Citelli on May 4, 1983.

4. Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by changing the shifts of employees Mark Erter, Bryan Mackey, Gerald Erkenswick, Jim Harshman, Danny Burrell, and Sonny Gee.

5. Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by engaging in coercive interrogation of employees, by threatening them with discharge because of their union activity, and by promising benefits in order to induce them to refrain from such activity.

6. The record evidence is insufficient to establish that Respondent has violated the Act by discharging employee Anthony Costanza.

7. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent violated and is violating Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act, I recommend that it be required to cease and desist therefrom and from in any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights under Section 7 of the Act, and take certain affirmative action described herein, including the posting of an appropriate notice attached an appendix.

Having found that Respondent unlawfully discharged and thereafter failed and refused to reinstate employees Edward Tocco and Paul Citelli, it is recommended that Respondent offer them immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them. Backpay is to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950); Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 139 NLRB 716 (1962).

Further, Respondent shall be ordered to remove from its files any reference to the unlawful discharges and notify the employees in writing that this has been done and that the discharges will not be used against them in any way. See Sterling Sugars, 261 NLRB 472 (1982).

Having found that Respondent unlawfully changed the shifts of employees Mark Erter, Bryan Mackey, Gerald Erkenswick, Jim Harshman, Danny Burrell, and Sonny Gee, to their financial detriment, I recommend they be made whole, in the manner prescribed above, from any losses they have suffered.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[6]

ORDER

The Respondent, N & T Associates, Inc. d/b/a Aladdin Hotel, Las Vegas, Nevada, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Discharging employees because of their union activities.

(b) Changing the work shifts of employees because of their union activities.

(c) Coercively interrogating employees, threatening them with discharge because of their union activities, and promising them benefits in order to induce them to refrain from such activities.

2. Take the following affirmative action which is necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Edward Tooco and Paul Citelli immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

(b) Remove from its files any reference to the unlawful discharges and notify the employees in writing that this has been done and that the discharges will not be used against them in any way.

(c) Make whole the following employees, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of this decision, for any loss of earnings and other benefits they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them: Mark Erter, Bryan Mackey, Gerald Erkenswick, Jim Harshman, Danny Burrell, and Sonny Gee.

(d) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(e) Post at its Las Vegas, Nevada facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[7] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 31, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[6] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[7] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

> To organize
>
> To form, join, or assist any union
>
> To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
>
> To act together for other mutual aid or protection
>
> To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT threaten to discharge you because of your union activity.

WE WILL NOT coercively question you about your union support or activities.

WE WILL NOT promise you benefits in order to induce you to refrain from engaging in union activity.

WE WILL NOT change your work shifts because of your union activity.

WE WILL NOT discharge you for engaging in union activity.

WE WILL offer Edward Tocco and Paul Citelli immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed and WE WILL make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from their discharge, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL make whole, with interest, those employees whose work shifts have been changed, for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

N & T ASSOCIATES, INC. D/B/A ALADDIN HOTEL

United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, Pipefitters Local Union No. 392, AFL–CIO (The Oberle-Jordre Co., Division of the Bishopric Products Co.) and Melvin R. Snow. Case 9–CB–5527

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND HUNTER

On 15 March 1984 Administrative Law Judge Richard A. Scully issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions for the additional reasons set forth below[2] and to adopt the recommended Order as modified and set out in full.[3]

The judge found that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) by its efforts to cause six travelers to quit their jobs in order to provide employment for the Respondent's members and Section 8(b)(2) by attempting to cause the Employer to lay off the travelers.

The record evidence in this case reveals that the Respondent and the Employer are parties to a project agreement between the Kentucky Utilities Company and certain signatory labor organizations. The agreement contains an exclusive referral provision through which the Employer's pipefitters are hired. For some time prior to 19 November 1982[4] the Employer had about 10 pipefitters working on the project. Only the steward and an apprentice were members of the Respondent. The other pipefitters were travelers.

During the second week of November the Respondent's business agent visited the project site and spoke with the Employer's construction manager. The business agent advised the construction manager that there were about 450 local members out of work and asked the Employer to lay off the travelers and replace them with local members. The construction manager responded that he could not afford to lay off anyone but if anyone had to go he wanted to keep his welders.[5]

In the days immediately preceding 19 November the Respondent's steward Charles Murphy had one or more separate conversations with each traveler concerning his continued employment at the project site. The credited testimony shows that the conversations were substantially similar. Each traveler was advised that he should plan on making the next day his last day and further advised that anyone who was asked to leave and refused to do so would be sanctioned by the hall. To ensure that this request was not taken lightly Murphy told five of the travelers that he would not want to be a traveler and still be on the job on Monday. All of the travelers ultimately advised Murphy that they would cooperate. None of the six travelers appeared for work on Monday, 22 November, and after 3 days of unexcused absences all were terminated by the Employer.

As noted, the judge found that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) by the efforts of its steward whose threats caused the travelers to leave their jobs.[6] The judge ordered the Respondent to make the travelers whole for any loss of earnings suffered as a result of their compliance with the Respondent's unlawful requests.

Our dissenting colleague would reverse the judge's finding of an 8(b)(1)(A) violation as to traveler Theodore Linkous. The dissent is predicated on the view that the record does not show that the Respondent "caused" Linkous to lose his job. Although the dissent finds that Linkous did not return to work because of a back injury, he acknowledges that Linkous was discharged for absen-

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] In adopting the judge's conclusion that the Respondent coercively requested each of the six employees to quit their employment, we particularly rely on the credited testimony that the Respondent's steward told five of the six employees that he would not want to be a traveler on the job come Monday. A sixth employee overheard a conversation wherein the Respondent's steward was relating this admonishment to a group of three employees. Accordingly, it is clear that this particular threat was effectively communicated to each of the six employees.

[3] To help assure that the Respondent's unlawful conduct is remedied, we will require the Respondent to notify the Employer, The Oberle-Jordre Co., Division of the Bishopric Products Co., that the Respondent has no objection to Oberle-Jordre's rehiring the individuals named in the remedy section. We will also require that the Respondent notify those individuals that it has no objection to their working for Oberle-Jordre or any other employer.

In R. H. Macy & Co., 266 NLRB 858 (1983), the Board held the issuance of expunction remedies against unions to be necessary and appropriate in all cases where a union causes an employee to be unlawfully discharged, laid off, or otherwise discriminated against. We have accordingly incorporated an expunction remedy in the Order.

[4] All dates refer to 1982.

[5] In referring to his "welders" the construction manager was speaking of three of the six travelers.

[6] The judge relied on Sachs Electric Co., 248 NLRB 669 (1980), enfd. in relevant part sub nom. NLRB v. Electrical Workers IBEW Local 433, 668 F.2d 991 (8th Cir. 1982).

teeism and argues that the Respondent should not be liable for any of his backpay loss. We disagree.

The facts surrounding Linkous' discharge are not in dispute. Linkous was approached by Murphy on Thursday, 18 November, and asked to make the next day his last day of work. Linkous responded that he would have to think about it and would let Murphy know the next day. On Friday, 19 November, between 8 and 8:30 a.m., Linkous told Murphy that he had decided to leave the job that day. Murphy was pleased with Linkous' decision and invited Linkous, as he had the other travelers, to join him that afternoon for drinks. Linkous explained that he would have to stay until 4 p.m. and told Murphy that he would take a raincheck. The two men had no further conversations that day.

Later that morning between 10 and 10:30 a.m. Linkous reinjured his back. He then went to the nurse and reported the injury as he had done only a few weeks before. On the previous occasion Linkous had no contact with the Employer from 12 October until 26 October when he returned to work. On this occasion Linkous was immediately terminated for absenteeism when he failed to report for work for 3 consecutive days.

Our dissenting colleague finds that, although the Respondent attempted to have Linkous quit, the intervening back injury prevented the execution of its plan. It is the dissent's position that the fact that Linkous reported his injury before leaving the project site destroyed any inference that he was quitting and joining the ranks of the other travelers who quit work that day.[7] We believe the dissent misconceives the relationships in this case. The complaint alleges a violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A). This section is concerned with the rights of individual employees in their relation with labor organizations. However, the dissent is predicated on Linkous' conduct as it relates to the Employer. The relevant relationship is that of Linkous and the Respondent.

All of the evidence in this case as it pertains to the Respondent clearly shows that like the other travelers Linkous was approached by Murphy and advised to quit his job. Like the other travelers Linkous told Murphy that he would comply with the Respondent's request that he leave the job by failing to report for work on Monday. Like the other travelers Linkous did not report for work for 3 consecutive days and was terminated the following week.

Nevertheless, the dissent asserts that there is no evidence to show that the Employer actually considered Linkous to be a part of the group of travelers simply because he was discharged for the same misconduct. Not only does this argument miss the point but ignores the facts of the case. The record establishes that the Employer knew that Linkous was a traveler. The Employer also knew that the Respondent wanted the travelers off the job to make room for its local members. The Employer observed several travelers walk off their jobs that day. Yet, the dissent would have us believe that, when the Employer terminated the travelers for absenteeism the following week, unlike the other travelers Linkous was singled out and discharged for an abuse of sick leave. The record contains no evidence that the Employer made this distinction. Indeed, the Employer not only sent Linkous the same termination letter it sent to the other five travelers but also provided to Linkous a letter stating that he had been discharged for absenteeism and not due to his back injury.

Linkous' misfortune in reinjuring his back does not alter the plain fact that the Respondent successfully sought Linkous' announced compliance with its request that he quit his job. Such conduct by the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A). Moreover, the back injury is relevant only insofar as it affects Linkous' loss of earnings for which the Respondent is liable.[8] We would accordingly affirm the judge.

In addition, our colleague expresses concern over the judge's failure to make any findings as to whether the Respondent's statement constituted unlawful threats within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A). We note, however, that the judge did conclude that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) "[b]y its efforts to cause travelers to quit their jobs in order to provide jobs for Local 392 Members." Absent any specific findings by the judge, coupled with the absence of any exceptions by the parties themselves, we do not pass on these 8(b)(1)(A) statements.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified and set out in full below and orders that the Respondent, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, Pipefitters Local Union No. 392, AFL–CIO, Cincinnati, Ohio, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall [7] While the record does not show the time that Linkous actually left the project site, it is reasonable to infer that he left before the other travelers.

[8] The recommended Order of the judge provides that the extent to which Linkous' loss of earnings resulted from his coerced decision to give up his job as opposed to his being injured on the job should be determined during the compliance proceedings.

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Requesting travelers referred out of the Respondent's hiring hall to quit their jobs in order to make jobs available for members of Local 392.

(b) Attempting to cause The Oberle-Jordre Co. to terminate or in any other manner discriminate against employees who are not members of Local 392, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

(c) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which is necessary to effectuate the purposes of the Act.

(a) Make whole Melvin R. Snow, Charles Tunny, Gary Holder, Harry J. Smith, Jerry Luttrell, and Theodore Linkous for any loss of earnings they may have suffered because of their compliance with the Respondent's unlawful requests that they quit their jobs at Oberle-Jordre's Ghent jobsite, in the manner prescribed in the section of the judge's decision entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Notify The Oberle-Jordre Co. in writing that it has no objection to its reemployment of Melvin R. Snow, Charles Tunny, Gary Holder, Harry J. Smith, Jerry Luttrell, and Theodore Linkous.

(c) Notify in writing the above-named individuals that it has no objection to their working for The Oberle-Jordre Co. or any other employer.

(d) Remove from its files any reference to the termination of the above-named individuals and notify them in writing that evidence of their termination by The Oberle-Jordre Co. shall not be used as a basis for future action against them.

(e) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(f) Post at its business office, hiring halls, and meeting places copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[9] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(g) Forward a sufficient number of signed copies of the notice to the Regional Director for Region 9 for posting by The Oberle-Jordre Co. in places where notices to employees are customarily posted and ask Oberle-Jordre to remove any reference to its termination of Melvin R. Snow, Charles Tunny, Gary Holder, Harry J. Smith, Jerry Luttrell, and Theodore Linkous from its files and notify these individuals that it has asked The Oberle-Jordre Company to do this.

(h) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the allegation of the complaint not specifically found herein is dismissed.

MEMBER HUNTER, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I disagree with my colleagues' decision to adopt the judge's finding of an 8(b)(1)(A) violation concerning the discharge of traveler Theodore Linkous. Although I would reverse the judge as to Linkous, I would not disturb his findings as to the other five discharged travelers, in agreement with my colleagues. Unlike my colleagues, I would dismiss the complaint as to Linkous' discharge because I am persuaded that the record does not show that the Respondent caused Linkous to lose his job.

The record shows that all travelers were approached by the Respondent's steward to quit their employment to provide jobs for the Respondent's own members. Unlike Linkous, the other travelers walked off the job after lunch on 19 November 1982.[1] Earlier that day, Linkous had informed the steward that he would leave the job at the end of his shift. However, at work that day before his shift ended, Linkous suffered a back injury. The record shows that Linkous told the Employer that he had injured his back and was leaving the job to seek medical attention. Linkous then left the jobsite, sought medical care, and did not return to work the following week, as did the other travelers. After 3 days of unreported absences, Linkous, as well as the travelers who quit, was terminated for absenteeism. They all had violated an existing company rule requiring daily reporting of absences from work. As of the time of the underlying hearing, Linkous' back injury was still preventing him from returning to full duty work.

[9] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

[1] According to the judge's findings, Linkous left the project site after the other travelers. On the other hand, my colleagues in the majority find that it is reasonable to infer from the record that Linkous actually left before the other travelers. Regardless of which version is correct, the result is the same: Linkous did not join the other travelers.

In my view, the foregoing shows that Linkous never quit his employment at the urging of the Respondent, as did the other travelers. Contrary to the judge, I do not infer "quitting" or an intention to quit simply because Linkous never grieved his discharge. At best, I would find that the steward attempted to have Linkous quit but that the intervening back injury prevented the execution of any future plans which Linkous may have had to quit. Linkous' back injury necessitated his leaving the jobsite that day, and the only information supplied to the Employer by Linkous was that he was leaving because of his back injury. This specific reason given for his leaving, in my opinion, destroyed any inference that Linkous was quitting and joining the ranks of the other travelers who quit work that day.

Under the majority's reasoning, Linkous' status as a traveler was sufficient to connect him to whatever the other travelers did that day and the following week and for whatever purpose. This contradicts Linkous' own record testimony. Linkous himself testified that he left and did not return to work after 19 November 1982 because of the reinjury to his back. Linkous' testimony further indicates that it was his intention to return to work after his recuperation from his back injury but, meanwhile, he had been discharged. Thus, I fail to see the connection with the other travelers who left and did not return because the Respondent had requested them to quit their employment.

There is also no evidence to show that the Employer actually considered Linkous to be a part of this group of travelers simply because he was discharged for the same type of misconduct. Application of the same company absentee rule is not sufficient to establish liability on the part of the Respondent on the particular facts of this case. In addition, contrary to the judge's analysis, I do not consider significant the fact that on one prior occasion with Linkous, in the case of a previous injury, the Employer was more lenient in the enforcement of its absence reporting rule. The record is insufficient to show that the Employer's alleged stricter enforcement of its work rule was prompted by the Respondent's request to terminate nonmembers. As correctly found by the judge, the Employer had flatly refused such a request. The record shows no deviation from this firm stance taken by the Employer.

Another area of my disagreement with the majority opinion lies with its failure to find certain statements by the Respondent's steward Murphy to constitute unlawful threats within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A). As found by the judge, during the week preceding 19 November 1982, steward Murphy had separate conversations with travelers Snow, Tunny, Luttrell, Smith, and Holder. The judge further found that, in the course of these conversations, Murphy made the following statements. Murphy told Snow that if the travelers did not leave the job they "would never work out of 392 again" and that, if Snow wanted to be in good graces with the Respondent, he should leave the job. After Murphy requested Tunny to quit, Tunny said, "I really don't have much choice, do I?" to which Murphy replied, "[N]o, you really don't." Murphy told Luttrell that, if Luttrell did not leave, he would never work out of Local 392 again. Murphy also told Luttrell that Murphy "would not want to be a traveler on the job on Monday morning" and that the Respondent would not be responsible for what happened to Luttrell on Monday morning if he was on the job. Murphy repeated similar comments to a group of employees, including Snow, Smith, and Holder. Murphy also told Smith that the Union would not be responsible for travelers who were on the job on Monday morning. Murphy also told Holder that anyone who did not leave the job "would be sanctioned by the hall." The Respondent did not except to any of these statements. The judge did not make any findings with respect to whether these statements were violative even though encompassed by the outstanding complaint allegations of 8(b)(1)(A) threats made by the Respondent.[2] The General Counsel and the Charging Party did not except to the judge's failure to dispose of these 8(b)(1)(A) allegations. Because these matters were fully litigated and without exception to them from the Respondent, I would find all the above remarks by steward Murphy to constitute 8(b)(1)(A) threats and would correct the judge's decision to reflect this determination. I also would rely on these threats in support of the judge's conclusion that the Respondent coercively requested the travelers to quit.

[2] In substance, the complaint alleged that the Respondent threatened employees that they no longer would work out of Local 392 (the Respondent) if they did not quit their jobs and that the Respondent similarly threatened employees with unspecified physical harm. The complaint further alleged these threats to be violative of Sec. 8(b)(1)(A).

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES AND MEMBERS POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT request travelers referred out of our hiring hall to quit their jobs in order to make jobs available for members of Local 392.

WE WILL NOT attempt to cause The Oberle-Jordre Co. to terminate or in any other manner discriminate against employees who are not members of Local 392, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner restrain or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL make whole Melvin R. Snow, Charles Tunny, Gary Holder, Harry J. Smith, Jerry Luttrell, and Theodore Linkous for any loss of earnings they may have suffered because of their compliance with our unlawful requests that they quit their jobs at Oberle-Jordre's Ghent jobsite, with interest.

WE WILL notify The Oberle-Jordre Co. in writing that we have no objection to its reemployment of Melvin R. Snow, Charles Tunny, Gary Holder, Harry J. Smith, Jerry Luttrell, and Theodore Linkous.

WE WILL notify in writing the above-named individuals that we have no objection to their working for The Oberle-Jordre Co. or any other employer.

WE WILL remove from our files, and ask Oberle-Jordre to remove from its files, any reference to the termination of the above-named individuals and notify them in writing that evidence of their termination by The Oberle-Jordre Co. shall not be used as a basis for future action against them.

UNITED ASSOCIATION OF JOURNEYMEN AND APPRENTICES OF THE PLUMBING AND PIPEFITTING INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA, PIPEFITTERS LOCAL UNION NO. 392, AFL–CIO

DECISION

RICHARD A. SCULLY, Administrative Law Judge. Upon a charge filed on April 4, 1983, and amended on May 3, 1983, by Melvin R. Snow, a complaint was issued on May 11, 1983, by the Regional Director for Region 9 of the National Labor Relations Board (the Board), alleging that United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, Pipefitters Local Union No. 392, AFL–CIO (the Union), had committed violations of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act). The Respondent has filed a timely answer denying that it has committed any violations of the Act.

A hearing was held on July 5 and 6, 1983, in Cincinnati, at which all parties were given a full opportunity to participate, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to present other evidence and argument. Briefs submitted on behalf of all parties have been given due consideration. On the entire record and from my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE EMPLOYER

At all times material, The Oberle-Jordre Co., Division of the Bishopric Products Co. (the Employer or O. J.), was an Ohio corporation engaged in construction work, including installation of power plant equipment at a facility being constructed at Ghent, Kentucky, pursuant to a contract with Kentucky Utilities Company. During the calendar year 1982, in the course of its performance of that contract and others in Kentucky, the Employer purchased goods and materials valued at approximately $125,000, directly from suppliers located outside the Commonwealth of Kentucky. The uncontradicted testimony of the Employer's president establishes that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The Respondent admits and I find that it is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

The Employer has been working at the Ghent facility since 1977. The Respondent Union is a party to the project agreement covering the Giant project and represents and refers the pipefitters employed there. For some time prior to November 19, 1982,[1] the Employer had about 10 pipefitters working at the project. Of these, Union Steward Charles Murphy and an apprentice were the only members of Local 392, the others all being "travelers," union members working temporarily within the geographical jurisdiction of a local other than their own local unions. During the second week of November, Union Business Agent Dave Jeffers visited the Ghent site and spoke with the Employer's construction manager James Bowers. Bowers testified that Jeffers told him that because of the shutdown of construction at the Zimmer Nuclear Power Plant in Moscow, Ohio, the Union had about 450 local people out of work and he asked Bowers if he "could lay the travelers off and rehire with local people." Bowers responded that he could not lay anyone off. He told Jeffers that he had too much of a problem getting heavy wall welders who could meet the special qualifications required for the work being done; that he had some qualified welders who had been there a long time; and that, because of the tight schedule he had to meet, he could not go through the delay or expense of getting new people qualified. They discussed the number of heavy wall welds that had to be made and Bowers gave Jeffers a list of the qualified welders who were on the job and told him that if "anybody had to go," he wanted to keep the welders he had.

[1] Hereinafter, all dates are in 1982.

Jeffers denied that he ever asked Bowers to lay off travelers. He recalled a conversation with Bowers, at about the time Bowers indicated, in which he asked Bowers if he was going to build up his crew, but said he did not ask about a layoff. Jeffers could not recall if anything was said about the Zimmer plant shutdown and said he would not have brought it up "because it just would not be something I would be talking about." I credit the testimony of Bowers over that of Jeffers[2] and find that Jeffers did request that the Employer lay off the travelers on its crew and replace them with local union members.

During the week or so preceding November 19, Union Steward Murphy had separate conversations with each of the travelers on the Ghent job concerning the fact that the Zimmer job had shut down, causing the layoff of many members of Local 392. The Charging Party, Melvin Snow, is a traveler who had worked out of Local 392 off and on for about 5 years, starting at Ghent in July. About a week before Snow left the job on November 19, he spoke with Murphy, who told him "if Zimmer shuts down we are going to have to get rid of all the travelers here at Ghent and put local hands on." On the morning of November 18, Murphy was not at work and Snow was operating a stress machine in place of Murphy. When Murphy arrived on the job after lunch, he asked Snow to step out on the roof to talk to him. Murphy told Snow that he had just come from the union hall where he had talked to Jeffers and that all the travelers at Ghent were going to have to leave to make room for local hands being laid off at Zimmer. Murphy told him that if the travelers did not leave the job they "would never work out of 392 again" and that, if Snow wanted to be in good graces with the Union, he should leave the job. Murphy also told Snow that he and Jeffers were trying to get O. J. to lay them off so that they could draw unemployment compensation and that they were still talking to O. J. about it. On Friday, November 19, Murphy told Snow that he wanted him to make it his last day and offered to buy lunch for Snow and the other travelers.

Theodore Linkous is a traveler who had worked out of Local 392 for 9 years. Linkous testified that, on November 18, Murphy came to where he was working with two other pipefitters and asked for a word with him. After they moved about 50 feet away, Murphy asked Linkous to make the next day his last on the job. When Linkous said that if he quit he would not be able to draw unemployment compensation, Murphy told him that he and Jeffers had been trying all week to get O. J. to lay them off, but that O. J. would not cooperate with them. This, Murphy said, left him "to do the dirty work" of going around asking everybody to leave. Linkous told Murphy on the following morning that he had decided to leave as requested and Murphy offered to buy him a drink.

Charles Tunny had worked as a traveler out of Local 392 for about 5 or 6 years and had been on the Ghent job since October. He had never spoken to Murphy until the afternoon of November 18 when Murphy came to him and said that he wanted the following day to be his last because Murphy had some local men he wanted to put on the job. When Tunny questioned him about unemployment benefits, Murphy told Tunny to get himself fired by not showing up or calling in on the first 3 days of the following week and he would then be able to draw unemployment compensation in 4 to 6 weeks. When Tunny said, "I really don't have much choice, do I," Murphy responded, "No, you really don't." Murphy then mumbled something which Tunny understood to be "if I were a traveler, I would not want to be here Monday morning anyhow."

Jerry Luttrell is a traveler who has worked out of Local 392 since 1977 and had been with the employer at Ghent most recently since February. Luttrell testified that, after lunch on November 18, Murphy told him that Murphy had had a meeting with the business agent and that he was going to have to ask Luttrell to "drag up" or quit the job. When Luttrell responded that he would have to give it some thought, Murphy told him that, if he did not leave, he would never work out of Local 392 again. Murphy also said that he "would not want to be a traveler on the job on Monday morning" and that the Union would not be responsible for what happened to him on Monday morning if he was on the job.

Harry Smith had worked as a traveler out of Local 392 at Ghent for 4 years. He testified that, on November 17 or 18, Murphy told him that Jeffers was trying to get O. J. to lay the travelers off, but that O. J. would not go along with it so that the travelers were going to have to "drag up." He also said that at one point Murphy "blowed his top" and, using rough and foul language, said that the Union would not be responsible for travelers who were on the job on Monday morning. When Smith mentioned the possibility of a lawsuit, Murphy replied that he had spoken to all the travelers alone without witnesses so no one could prove anything. Murphy also said that, if Smith filed a lawsuit against the Union, he would "never work out of Cincinnati again."

Gary Holder had worked out of Local 392 as a traveler off and on since 1981 and had been at Ghent most recently since June. Holder testified that, on the afternoon of November 18, Murphy told him that he had asked some people to leave and that anyone who did not leave "would be sanctioned by the hall." On the following day, Murphy told a group including Holder, Snow,

[2] I found Jeffers' testimony in almost all respects to be unworthy of belief based on his demeanor while testifying and the content of his testimony. He struck me as having absolutely no regard for the truth of the testimony he gave.

Smith, and a pipefitter named Barnes that he "wouldn't want to be a fucking traveler and be on the job come Monday." Murphy also told them that the hall had agreed to let two of the three specially qualified hot welders stay on the job and that Holder and Smith could stay. When Barnes objected that he had been on the job longer than Holder and should be permitted to stay, Murphy told them he was going to call the hall and see if he could get it worked out so that all three hot welders could stay. Earlier, when Smith asked when he and Holder were going to be asked to leave, Murphy shouted, "You'll leave when I tell you to leave." After two or three telephone calls, Murphy came back and told Holder and Smith "that there was [sic] welders on the bench that wanted to complete those welds that we were doing." That afternoon, Holder, Smith, Luttrell, Snow, and Barnes went to lunch with Murphy who paid for their lunches and told them he appreciated what they were doing for the Union and that they "would be given first consideration when work broke again, as far as sending out travelers."

Snow did not return to the job after lunch and the other travelers, with the exception of Linkous, who apparently worked until the end of the day, walked off the job during the afternoon. None of the travelers returned to the job the following week and, after 3 days of unexcused absences, all were terminated by the Employer.

Charles Murphy denied that he had ever threatened any of the travelers that, if they continued to work past November 19, the Union would not be responsible for them or that they would not be able to work out of Local 392 again. He testified that all he did was ask the travelers to leave the job. He denied having any conversations with Jeffers concerning obtaining layoffs for the travelers from the Employer and said he last saw Jeffers at the jobsite 2 or 3 weeks before November 19. The credited testimony of Bowers shows that Murphy came into his office at the end of the meeting in which Jeffers asked him to lay the travelers off and that Murphy and Jeffers left together. Murphy did admit to having been asked by the travelers if the Employer would give them layoff slips and said he "probably told them that O. J. probably wouldn't give them one." He also told them if they left the job "they could probably collect unemployment." Throughout his testimony Murphy was hesistant, vague, and evasive. I do not credit his testimony[3] insofar as it conflicts with that of Snow, Linkous, Tunny, Luttrell, Smith, and Holder, who were credible witnesses, and I find that Murphy made the statements attributed to him by those individuals.

B. Findings and Conclusions

The General Counsel contends that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by the actions of Murphy, the union steward on the Ghent job, whose threats caused the travelers to leave the job. The Respondent contends that there was no coercion of any of the travelers by the Union and that all voluntarily chose to leave the job as a courtesy to unemployed local union members in accordance with custom or the "golden rule."

The evidence establishes that none of the travelers had any intention of quitting the Ghent job prior to their conversations with Murphy during the week preceding November 19. It also establishes that none of the travelers was approached by Murphy about leaving until after Jeffers had been unsuccessful in his attempt to get the employer to lay off the travelers. The evidence in the record does not establish the existence of the custom the Respondent relies on on or that anyone on the Ghent job was aware of it. Even Murphy, who was questioned repeatedly about this subject, could not testify to the existence of any such custom.[4]

Regardless of whether there it was a custom or merely the application of the "golden rule," the evidence is clear that Murphy was not content to rely solely on the moral persuasion of either to get the travelers off the Ghent job. While he may have phrased his remarks to the travelers in the form of requests that they leave the job, he added, among other things, that if they did not leave, they would be sanctioned by the hall, they would never work out of Local 392 again, and that the Union would not be responsible for what happened if they showed up on the job after November 19. That Murphy's requests were not simply appeals to the travelers' sense of altruism, but were directives, is evidenced by Murphy's care in talking to each traveler individually so there would be no witnesses and his angry statement to Smith that "you'll leave when I tell you to leave." As the deadline Murphy had set for the travelers came closer, he became more and more agitated and less cautious, telling a group of four of the travelers on November 19 that he "would not want to be a fucking traveler and be on the job come Monday." A short time later that day, after the travelers informed him they were leaving, Murphy treated him to lunch and expressed his appreciation for what they were doing.

The evidence also establishes that Murphy was acting as an agent of the Union in requesting that the travelers leave and that he made this clear to them. It was Jeffers, the Union's business agent, who initiated the efforts to get the travelers off the job. Jeffers met with Murphy at the jobsite immediately after his unsuccessful attempt to get the Employer to lay off the travelers. As job steward and the only local journeyman at the Ghent project, Murphy was the obvious choice for and, by his admission to Linkous, the one selected to do the "dirty work" of asking everyone to leave. Murphy told Linkous and Smith about Jeffers' failure to persuade the employer to lay them off when he asked them to leave. When Murphy came to the job on the afternoon of November 18, he told the travelers he spoke to individually that he had just come from the union hall and that they were going to have to leave. That the Union orchestrated the travelers' removal was further evident from what occurred on November 19 when Murphy told the travelers that the hall had determined that two of the travelers who were hot welders could stay on. When another traveler complained, Murphy made a series of telephone calls to the hall and announced the final decision, that there were local men who wanted the jobs, so all the travelers had to go. Also, Jeffers' failure to take any meaningful action after being informed by Bowers on November 19 that the travelers were leaving the job is further evidence that he instigated and was aware of what Murphy was doing at the jobsite.[5]

[3] I am convinced that Murphy carried through on a promise he made to Snow in the event that legal action was taken against the Union because of his requests that the travelers leave the job. Murphy told Snow, "I'm going to get up and lie like hell."

[4] The only evidence in the record concerning industry customs is the testimony of Harry Smith that, if a local man on a job is going to be laid off, "then a traveler will leave." But this custom had no application in the present case because, in Smith's words, "there wasn't no local man on the job, you see, to leave for."

In Sachs Electric Co.,[6] the Board considered similar "requests" that travelers quit their jobs so that unemployed local members could take their places and found them to be coercive. As in Sachs, the travelers here were "undoubtedly" aware that the "requests" came from "union officials who, by virtue of their responsibilities in administering the hiring hall, control, and will continue to control, the travelers' livelihoods within the hiring hall's jurisdiction," and were likely to construe them "as more than mere solicitations for 'volunteers.'" Ibid. I find that the Respondent's efforts to cause the travelers to quit their jobs in order to provide jobs for members of Local 392 were based on impermissible considerations and violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

The General Counsel also contends that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(2) of the Act by virtue of Jeffers' request to Bowers that the Employer lay off the travelers. As noted above, I credit the testimony of Bowers that Jeffers did ask him to lay off the travelers and rehire with local pipefitters prior to November 19, when the travelers left the job. There is no evidence that any threats were made or any inducements offered in order to get the Employer to lay them off or that the Employer had any intention of complying with the request.[7] Notwithstanding the fact that Jeffers made only a "bare request," which was not acceded to by the Employer, I find there was an unlawful "attempt to cause" the Employer to discriminate against the travelers in violation of Section 8(a)(3) because there was no legitimate basis for this request, which was premised solely on the Union's desire to employ its local members at the expense of the travelers. Consequently, the Respondent's action violated Section 8(b)(2) of the Act.[8]

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, Pipefitters Local Union No. 392, AFL-CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

2. The Oberle-Jordre Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

3. By its efforts to cause travelers to quit their jobs in order to provide jobs for Local 392 members, the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

4. By attempting to cause the employer to lay off all travelers employed by it at the Ghent, Kentucky jobsite and replace them with Local 392 members in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act, the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(2) of the Act.

5. The unfair labor practices found herein are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist from such violations and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. I shall recommend that the Respondent be ordered to make whole Melvin R. Snow, Charles Tunny, Gary Holder, Harry J. Smith, Jerry Luttrell, and Theodore Linkous[9] for any loss of earnings they may have suffered because of their compliance with the Respondent's unlawful requests that they quit their jobs with the Employer at the Ghent project. Backpay shall

[5] I have previously indicated that I did not believe much of Jeffers' testimony. This is particularly true with respect to his claim that he did not direct Murphy to have the travelers leave and that, when they left the job, he figured it was a "nooner," that is, "they go to lunch and do not come back." Equally incredible was his claim that, after he learned the travelers had been discharged for absenteeism, he tried to get the Employer to rehire them, in view of the fact that he never talked to any of the travelers about their leaving and he had done nothing to get them to return to the job after Bowers had requested that he do so. Since one of his duties as business agent was to see that the Ghent job was properly manned, his complete lack of concern about the travelers' leaving the job unmanned indicated his knowledge and complicity in getting them off the job.

[6] 248 NLRB 669, 670 (1980), enfd. sub nom. NLRB v. Electrical Workers IBEW Local 453, 668 F.2d 991 (8th Cir. 1982).

[7] Bowers' testimony that he told Jeffers, "If anybody had to go, I'd want to keep my welders," suggests that some kind of deal may have been discussed, but the evidence is not sufficient to establish this.

[8] See Commercial Workers Local 227 (Kroger Co.), 247 NLRB 195 (1980); Electrical Workers IBEW Local 112 (Ajax Electric), 231 NLRB 162 (1977).

[9] Linkous credibly testified that he decided to comply with the Respondent's request that he leave the job and informed Murphy on the morning of November 19 that it was to be his last day. However, later in the day, Linkous reinjured his back on the job and, as a result, was unable to work the following week in any event. Notwithstanding the fact that Linkous reported his injury to the Employer in the same manner as he had in the case of a previous injury, he was terminated by the Employer for "absenteeism" on November 24, as were the other travelers. Consistent with his decision to give up his job, Linkous did not contest what appears to be an arguably erroneous termination. As of the date of the hearing in this matter, Linkous had not been cleared to return to work by his physician. However, it is possible that, had he not been terminated, Linkous might have been able to return to work for the Employer on "light duty status" or "working with pain," even though he might not have been able to obtain new employment, because of his physical condition. The extent to which his loss of earnings resulted from his coerced decision to give up his job rather than his injury can be determined during the compliance stage of this proceeding.

be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1980), with interest to be paid on the amounts owing in accordance with Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[10]

[Recommended Order omitted from publication.]

[10] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

Quinn Company and Operating Engineers, Local Union No. 3 of the International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL–CIO. Case 32–CA–5228

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND DENNIS

On 27 October 1983 Administrative Law Judge Jay R. Pollack issued the attached decision. The General Counsel and the Charging Party filed exceptions and supporting briefs, the Respondent filed cross-exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Charging Party filed a brief in response to the cross-exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Quinn Company, Fresno and Salinas, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

DECISION

JAY R. POLLACK, Administrative Law Judge. I heard this case in trial at Monterey, California, on June 30, July 1, and August 2, 1983. Pursuant to a charge filed against Quinn Company (Respondent) on February 7, 1983, by Operating Engineers, Local Union No. 3 of the International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL–CIO (the Union), the Regional Director for Region 32 of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint and notice of hearing of February 28, 1983, alleging in substance that Respondent engaged in certain violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq. Specifically, the General Counsel alleges that Respondent's supervisors interrogated employees about their union sentiments, solicited employees to circulate, and themselves circulated, decertification petitions, and impliedly promised better benefits if employees abandoned the Union. Respondent filed an answer denying the commission of any unfair labor practices and affirmatively alleged that litigation of the alleged unfair labor practices was barred by a settlement agreement approved by the Regional Director.

All parties have been afforded full opportunity to participate, to introduce relevant evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to file briefs. On the entire record, from my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and having considered the posthearing briefs, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a California corporation with offices and places of business in Fresno and Salinas, California, where it is engaged in the sale and service of heavy mechanical equipment. During the 12 months prior to issuance of the complaint, Respondent purchased and received goods or services valued in excess of $50,000 directly from suppliers located outside the State of California. Accordingly, Respondent admits and I find that it is an employer engaged in commerce and in a business affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The parties stipulated and I find that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

As mentioned earlier, Respondent is engaged in the sale and service of heavy mechanical equipment at its facilities in Fresno and Salinas. Since at least 1970, the Union has represented Respondent's employees at both the Fresno and Salinas facilities in one bargaining unit.[1] The last collective-bargaining agreement between Respondent and the Union expired on November 22, 1982. During early November 1982, certain of Respondent's employees circulated a petition seeking to oust the Union as the bargaining representative of Respondent's employees. On November 8, Respondent received petitions signed by a majority of the employees in the bargaining unit stating that they no longer wished to be represented by the Union. The following day Respondent withdrew recognition from the Union. On November 12, the Union wrote Respondent claiming that a majority of the employees had signed authorization cards on behalf of the Union and requesting that Respondent negotiate for a

[1] The parties stipulated that the following unit of Respondent's employees constitutes a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Sec. 9(b) of the Act:

> All full-time and regular part-time mechanics, parts men, welders, utility men and janitors employed by Respondent at its Fresno and Salinas, California facilities; excluding all office clerical employees, confidential employees, sales employees, professional employees, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

succeeding contract. That same date, the Union filed a petition in Case 32–RC–1736, requesting a representation election, and an unfair labor practice charge in Case 32–CA–5035, alleging that Respondent had committed unfair labor practices in soliciting the employee petitions. On December 15, a petition was filed in Case 32–RD–452 by Leon Brown, an employee at Respondent's Fresno facility, on behalf of Respondent's employees seeking to decertify the Union.

In January 1983, the Union and Respondent attempted to amicably settle the issues raised by the representation petitions and the unfair labor practice charge. The Union agreed to withdraw the charge in Case 32–CA–5035 and not to refile the charge (until a consent election could be held). The parties further agreed to consent to a Board-conducted election to resolve the question concerning representation. The Union stated that this settlement was contingent upon Respondent refraining from any further unfair labor practices. On January 12, 1983, the Regional Director approved the Union's withdrawal of the charge and approved a Stipulation for Consent Election calling for an election to be held on February 10, 1983. On February 7, 1983, the Union filed the instant charge alleging violations of the Act covered by the withdrawn charge and also violations of the Act allegedly occurring after the charge was withdrawn. Based on this charge, the Regional Director indefinitely postponed the scheduled election. On March 28, 1983, the Regional Director, based on the allegations of the instant complaint, dismissed the representation petitions.

Within this factual background, the General Counsel contends that Respondent committed certain unfair labor practices in soliciting employees to decertify the Union, including directly dealing with employees and promising benefits in order to induce employees to abandon union representation. Further, the General Counsel alleges that, after withdrawal of the first charge, Respondent, in campaigning for the scheduled election, continued to unlawfully promise benefits in order to induce employees to vote against union representation. As mentioned earlier, Respondent contends that its settlement of the first charge, approved by the Regional Director, bars litigation of the instant case. Further, Respondent raises a defense that the conduct of Gary Molezzo, shop foreman at Salinas, and Gene Harper, parts manager at Salinas, in support of the decertification campaign, is not imputable to Respondent because both Molezzo and Harper are bargaining unit employees and members of the Union.

B. The Decertification Campaign

Leon Brown, a parts man at Respondent's Fresno facility, testified that there "had always been talk among the employees about getting rid of the union" and that he and Joe Harrah, another Fresno employee, increasingly discussed the matter during the summer of 1982. Brown attributed these discussions to concerns over recent agreements between the Union and two competitors of Respondent, one in Sacramento and the other in Stockton. According to Brown, the employees at both companies received pay cuts as a result of the newly negotiated union agreements. Brown heard that Harrah was attempting to decertify the Union in September but Brown neither saw nor signed a decertification petition at that time. However, in October, Brown contacted the Board's Oakland Regional Office and, based on advice received from Board personnel, composed and circulated an employee petition. Brown used company paper and personnel to type the petition which he circulated on company time. Brown circulated the petition between November 1 and 8. There is no evidence that Respondent encouraged Brown's decertification activities or even that Respondent was aware of such activities until after Brown had obtained the signatures of several employees November 1 and 2.

Prior to his circulation of the petition, Brown discussed "getting rid of the Union" with Gary Molezzo, shop foreman, and Gene Harper, parts manager, both of whom are employed at Respondent's Salinas facility. After circulating the petition in Fresno, Brown called Harper and asked if Harper would circulate a petition in Salinas. After Harper agreed to do so, Brown dictated the wording of the petition to Harper over the telephone. Harper handwrote a petition and, with Molezzo's assistance, he circulated the petition at the Salinas facility.

C. The Employee Meetings

Blake Quinn, Respondent's president, credibly testified that, in late October and early November, conversations concerning the Union and decertification were keeping "a lot of work" from getting done.[2] Dan Cunningham, Respondent's vice president, informed Quinn that a decertification petition was being circulated at the Fresno facility and that the employees had been questioning their supervisors about Respondent's health plan and profit-sharing plan. Based on this information, Quinn decided to call a meeting for all bargaining unit employees. Thus, on November 5, mandatory meetings for all bargaining unit employees were conducted at both the Fresno and Salinas facilities.

At the Salinas meeting, Quinn read a prepared statement which stated in pertinent part:

> Recently there has been a lot of discussion in the shop concerning the upcoming expiration of the contract between Quinn Company and the Operating Engineers and what will happen when the contract expires.
>
> By law an employer must bargain with a union so long as that union represents a majority of the employees. Quinn Company has not received any evidence which demonstrates that the union does not enjoy majority status even though there have been rumors that some employees no longer wish to be represented by the union. Quinn Company intends to abide by the law and bargain with the union concerning entering into a new contract so long as the union represents a majority of employees.
>
> As to what to expect in upcoming negotiations, Quinn Company cannot bypass the union and negotiate directly with employees as that would be an unfair labor practice. Therefore our proposed renegotiations of the contract will be presented to the union at the bargaining table.

[2] This testimony was corroborated by Brown.

If anyone has any questions concerning this matter please feel free to ask me, your union representative or any member of the NLRB. If anyone wishes to contact the NLRB in Oakland their phone number is (415) 273-7200.

Quinn then said he had heard through the "grapevine" that the employees had "some questions" and that he was there to answer three of those questions. Quinn then listed three topics: decertification, Respondent's profit-sharing plan, and Respondent's health and welfare plan. Quinn then turned the meeting over to Cunningham. Cunningham wrote the NLRB's phone number on a chalk board along with the figures 30 percent and 50 percent. Cunningham explained that if 30 percent of the employees signed a decertification petition, the NLRB would conduct an election and if 50 percent of the employees signed such a petition, Respondent would no longer have to bargain with the Union.

Cunningham emphasized that he could make no promises. He then explained "in some detail the basic wording of the profit-sharing plan." Cunningham told the employees that to be eligible for the Company's profit-sharing plan an employee had to be 25 years of age (soon to be reduced to 21 years) and have worked for the Company for at least 3 years. He then gave an example of two employees who had recently left Quinn Company after 10 and 15 years, respectively. Cunningham said that had the two employees been covered by the Company's profit-sharing plan the 10-year employee would have retired with $30,000 and the 15-year employee with $70,000. Cunningham explained that employees covered by the Union's pension plan were not eligible for the Company's profit-sharing plan.[3]

As to health and welfare, Cunningham compared Respondent's plan to the Union's plan and concluded that they were "equal to or almost equal to" each other. Cunningham added that Respondent was changing carriers so details about Respondent's new plan would not be available until some time later.

Both Quinn and Cunningham emphasized that they could make no promises in regard to the profit-sharing or health and welfare plans. Moreover, both Quinn and Cunningham refused to respond to certain questions because their answers might be construed as promises.

It is undisputed that the Company's profit-sharing plan has been in effect for nonunion employees since about 1965. The plan provides in pertinent part:

> Notwithstanding the foregoing, an employee for whom the Company is required to make or making contributions to any pension or other retirement plan (other than this plan and social security) pursuant to a collective-bargaining agreement or agreements on the date when such employee would otherwise be eligible to become a participant shall not become a participant so long as he remains subject to such condition but shall become a participant immediately thereafter if such employee ceases to be an employee for whom the Company is required to make or makes such contributions.

On November 9, Respondent called another mandatory employee meeting at the Salinas facility. Rick Gregerson, shop manager, read a prepared statement in which he announced that Respondent had been presented with a decertification petition signed by a majority of its employees. Gregerson said that based on the petition Respondent would no longer bargain with the Union. Gregerson thanked the employees for their support and said that the petition would be forwarded to the NLRB.

In anticipation of the election scheduled for February 10, 1983, Respondent held a mandatory meeting for employees in late January or early February. At this meeting, Respondent distributed to employees a seven-page document concerning Respondent's benefits.[4] The seven-page handout included one page which was personally tailored to the recipient employee and which compared the employee's estimated retirement benefits under Respondent's profit-sharing plan and the employee's estimated retirement benefits under the Union's pension plan. The personalized page for employee John Larsen estimated that if Larsen worked 35 years under the union pension plan, Respondent would contribute $67,184 on Larsen's behalf, the contribution would experience zero growth and Larsen's pension at age 65 would be $1,411 a month. Larsen would not be able to withdraw a flat sum on retirement. The document showed two alternatives under Respondent's profit-sharing plan. The first alternative, based on 35 years of work, showed a company contribution of $61,880. The contribution would grow to $701,301 and, at age 65, Larsen's monthly pension would be $9,159 per month. Instead of taking a monthly pension, Larsen could withdraw a lump sum of $763,181. Under the second alternative, which was also based on 35 years of employment, the Company would contribute $125,230 which would grow to $1,419,262. At age 65, Larsen would receive $18,536 a month or a lump sum payment of $1,544,492.

The handout also compared Respondent's health and welfare plan with that of the Union, and compared the yearend value of the profit-sharing plan with that of the Unon's pension fund. There is no contention that any of the information contained in the document was false.

[3] The evidence is not clear as to what Cunningham actually said concerning the disqualification under the plan of employees covered by a pension or retirement plan under a collective-bargaining agreement. The best I can ascertain from the vague testimony of the employee witnesses is that Cunningham made it clear that employees could not be covered by the Union's pension plan and the Company's profit-sharing plan at the same time.

[4] The handout included the following disclaimer:

> Attached is information concerning the present benefits for employees both for in the bargaining unit and for Quinn Company nonunion employees.
>
> In viewing these calculations, bear in mind that all the law permits us to do is to compare, or give you information which you can use to compare present benefits. The law expressly prohibits the employer from making any promises in this period before an election.

Based on its belief that Respondent's distribution of the handout constituted an unfair labor practice, the Union filed the instant charge on February 7, 1983, and requested that the Regional Director postpone the scheduled election.

D. Harper's Participation

Gene Harper is parts manager at Respondent's Salinas facility. At all times material herein, Harper has been covered under the terms of the collective-bargaining agreement and has been a member of the Union. Harper assigns, directs, reviews, and evaluates the work of the seven employees in his parts department. Harper interviews job applicants and narrows down the applicants to one or two. The remaining applicant or applicants are then interviewed by the shop manager. Harper recommends who shall be hired and his recommendations have always been followed. Further, Harper grants employees time off and authorizes overtime. Finally, Harper is responsible for written evaluations of parts department employees. Accordingly, I find that Harper is a supervisor within the meaning of the Act. As will be discussed, infra, the issue is whether, in view of Harper's inclusion in the bargaining unit, his conduct in support of the decertification petition can be imputed to Respondent.

Harper testified that he went to each of the people under his supervision and explained that, because he desired decertification, he had signed the petition. Harper further explained that it was up to each employee to decide whether to sign the petition. Harper denied talking with the store manager or the representatives of management about the petition. Jess Barba, an employee and shop steward, testified that when he refused Harper's request to sign the petition, Harper responded that Barba's refusal put Barba in a "bad light." Although Harper did not specifically address Barba's claim, he did deny making any threats or promises. Having observed Harper's demeanor and having considered the corroborative testimony of employees Larry Shepherd, Frank Shillak, and Daniel White, I credit Harper's testimony over that of Barba. Shepherd, a parts man under Harper's supervision, testified that Harper informed him that a decertification petition was "going around." According to Shepherd, Harper said he did not want to influence Shepherd's decision and that the decision to sign the petition was entirely up to Shepherd. Shepherd further testified that Harper did not make any promises or any threats. Shillak and White, two other employees supervised by Harper, similarly testified that Harper indicated a personal decision to sign the petition but that the employees could decide for themselves whether to sign the petition. Shepherd, Shillak, and White all signed the petition on November 5, 1982.

As mentioned earlier, Brown had begun circulation of an employee petition at the Fresno facility on November 1. Harper and Molezzo did not begin circulation of a petition at the Salinas facility until after the employee meeting of November 5.

E. Molezzo's Participation

Gary Molezzo is the shop foreman at Respondent's Salinas facility and is in charge of 12 mechanics. At all times material, Molezzo has been included in the bargaining unit and a member of the Union. Molezzo does little, if any, mechanical work, and spends most of his time directing and assigning mechanics' work. Molezzo prepares evaluations of mechanics for employee personnel records. In order to be promoted to field mechanic, the highest paid mechanics' classification, an employee must have Molezzo's recommendation for the job. Molezzo interviews job applicants and makes hiring recommendations to the shop manager. Molezzo's recommendations have always been followed. In addition, Molezzo has authorized time off for employees and has effectively recommended discipline for employees. Accordingly, there is little doubt that Molezzo is a supervisor within the meaning of the Act. However, as stated above, the issue is whether, in view of Molezzo's inclusion in the bargaining unit, his conduct in support of the decertification campaign can be imputed to Respondent.

In September 1982, prior to the circulation of the decertification petitions at either the Fresno or Salinas facility, Molezzo asked employees about his desire to "get rid of the Union." Molezzo testified that he was "not too fond of the Union" because, in his view, his mother did not receive sufficient benefits upon the death of his father. Molezzo discussed this dissatisfaction with the employees. The General Counsel concedes, on brief, regarding Molezzo's conduct in September and October, "as an individual member of the bargaining unit Molezzo had a right to participate in decertification activity, absent evidence that he was acting on behalf of Respondent." However, the General Counsel alleges that Molezzo's conduct, associated with the decertification petition in November, violated the Act, on the ground that Molezzo was acting on behalf of Respondent.

John Larsen, a mechanic supervised by Gary Molezzo, testified that Molezzo walked up to Larsen, placed the petition containing employee signatures in front of Larsen and said, "No, huh?" Larsen answered "No." Loren Herr, another employee under Molezzo's supervision, testified that Molezzo asked him to sign the petition. Herr asked Molezzo if the employees would "be able to get a raise" without the Union. According to Herr, Molezzo answered that Respondent had always been "fair in the past" and there was no reason would "change the policy" in the future.

Norman Clatterbuck, a mechanic at the Salinas facility, testified that Molezzo, his supervisor, presented the petition to him, asked Clatterbuck to read it and asked Clatterbuck to sign if he wanted to do so. Clatterbuck testified that Molezzo made no threats nor promises. Clatterbuck signed the petition. Richard Dampier and Ted McLaughlin, mechanics at the Salinas facility, similarly testified that Molezzo, without making any threats or promises, asked them to sign the petition. Both Dampier and McLaughlin declined to sign the petition to which Molezzo made no response.

Charles "Skip" Bates, a former employee of Respondent, testified that, while he was employed by Respondent, Molezzo was both his friend and supervisor. Bates and Molezzo often ate lunch together and debated the Union, decertification, and related matters. Molezzo expressed displeasure with the Union because Molezzo's mother had received an allegedly inadequate death benefit. According to Bates, Molezzo claimed on more than one occasion that the Union was "holding back Bates and that Bates would be better off without the Union." According to Molezzo, if Respondent was not required to pay lesser skilled employees an inflated wage rate it would be able to pay more skilled employees, like Bates, a better pay rate. Bates argued that Respondent could not entirely be trusted and that there was safety in the employees acting together as a group.

Bates further testified that, some 4 months prior to the decertification petition, Molezzo, while on the telephone to someone at the Fresno facility, asked Bates whether the employees knew that "the Company can save $5,000 on each one of you if you weren't union?" Bates answered, "Yeah, right out of my pocket." On another occasion, Molezzo asked Bates to sign a decertification petition but Bates simply told Molezzo "where to put it." While Molezzo denied telling Bates that management could save $5,000 per employee or that Bates could make more money without the Union, I have decided to credit Bates' testimony over that of Molezzo. Bates appeared to be a forthright and sincere witness. Further, Bates, a former employee, had little to gain by his testimony; rather, he ran the risk of unnecessarily alienating his friend Molezzo.

F. Quinn's Conversation with Bates

Bates further testified that he had a conversation with Blake Quinn, Respondent's president, shortly after the employee meeting of November 5. According to Bates, he told Quinn that he liked the Union and believed himself to be better off with the Union. Quinn said the Union was "holding back" Bates and that, without the Union, Bates could make more money because Respondent would not have to pay "as much" to employees less talented than Bates.

In early January 1983, Quinn again discussed the Union with Bates. According to Bates, Quinn said he understood that Bates was supporting the Union but that Quinn would "appreciate" Bates' support, if Bates could "swing over" to Respondent's side in the election. Quinn repeated his claim that the Union was holding Bates back and that Bates, because of his skills, could make more money without the Union. Quinn acknowledged that he had at least one and perhaps more than one conversation with Bates. However, he denied that he told Bates that the employee could receive better wages without the Union or that Bates was being held back by the Union. As discussed above, I found Bates to be a credible witness. In addition, Quinn could not recall the substance of his conversation with Bates. Accordingly, I credit Bates' testimony over that of Quinn.

G. Analysis and Conclusions

1. The settlement agreement

It is well established that a finding of an unfair labor practice cannot be based on presettlement conduct unless there has been a failure to comply with the settlement agreement or subsequent unfair labor practices have been committed. See, e.g., Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel Co., 235 NLRB 1397 (1978); Northern California Council of Laborers (Joseph's Landscaping Service), 154 NLRB 1384 (1965), enfd. 389 F.2d 721 (9th Cir. 1968). A settlement disposes of all issues involving presettlement conduct unless previous violations of the Act were unknown to the General Counsel, not readily discoverable by investigation, or specifically reserved from the settlement by the mutual understanding of the parties. Hollywood Roosevelt, supra; Steves Sash & Door Co., 164 NLRB 468 (1967), enfd. as modified in other respects 401 F.2d 676 (5th Cir. 1968). However, the Board has also consistently held that where a charging party requests that a charge be withdrawn, and the Regional Director approves that request, the allegations contained in the withdrawn charge may nonetheless be realleged and litigated. See, e.g., Gulf States Manufacturers, 230 NLRB 558 (1977), enf. denied 598 F.2d 896 (5th Cir. 1979); John F. Cuneo Co., 152 NLRB 929 (1965); Zimnox Coal Co., 140 NLRB 1229, 1230, 1237 (1963), enfd. 336 F.2d 516 (6th Cir. 1964). In the absence of a Regional Director signing or approving a settlement agreement, any such agreement between a charging party and a respondent which resulted in the withdrawal of the charge is viewed by the Board as a private arrangement which does not estop the Regional Director from proceeding on any new charges alleging the same conduct as the withdrawn charges. Id.

Applying the above legal principles, I find that while the Regional Director approved the Union's withdrawal request, he did not enter into or approve the private agreement between the parties. Hollywood Roosevelt, supra, relied on by Respondent, involved a valid settlement agreement approved by a Regional Director which provided that the employer take certain remedial action. In the instant case, the Regional Director merely approved withdrawal of the charge, apparently to expedite the election process. The Regional Director made no attempt to resolve the unfair labor practices. Accordingly, I find that the Regional Director was not estopped from issuing complaint on the instant charge.

2. The conduct of Molezzo and Harper

While an employer is usually liable for the conduct of its supervisors, an exception exists where the supervisor is also a bargaining unit member. Where supervisors are members of the bargaining unit, they may lawfully solicit signatures on a decertification petition so long as there is no evidence that the employer "encouraged, authorized or ratified the conduct" or that the employer "acted in such a manner as to lead employees reasonably to believe" that the supervisors were acting on the behalf of management. A. T. & K. Enterprises, 264 NLRB 1278 (1982); Times-Herald, Inc., 253 NLRB 524 (1980). See also Montgomery Ward & Co., 115 NLRB 645, 647

(1956), enfd. 242 F.2d 497 (2d Cir. 1957), cert. denied 355 U.S. 829 (1957).

There is no dispute that Molezzo and Harper were included in the bargaining unit and covered by the last collective-bargaining agreement between the Union and Respondent. Notwithstanding that Molezzo and Harper are supervisors within the meaning of the Act, for the following reasons I find that their conduct cannot be imputed to Respondent.

There is undisputed evidence that Molezzo had strong personal reasons for favoring decertification and that he communicated these reasons to other employees on many occasions prior to the decertification campaign. Molezzo was upset that his mother received only a small sum upon his father's death and he communicated that fact to other employees. Similarly, Harper told employees that he "personally" favored decertification but that the decision to sign was entirely up to them. Leon Brown, employed at the Fresno facility, discussed getting rid of the Union with Molezzo and Harper prior to November. After Brown began circulating a petition on November 1 at the Fresno facility, he spoke to Harper about having a petition circulated at the Salinas facility. The decertification process had begun prior to Respondent's mention of decertification at the meetings of November 5. In fact, Respondent held the employee meetings of November 5 in response to the activities of the unit employees at the Fresno facility. Thus, the fact that Molezzo and Harper circulated the decertification petition after Respondent mentioned decertification at the Salinas employee meeting does not raise an inference that Respondent encouraged, authorized, or ratified their conduct. Nor do I find that Respondent caused employees to reasonably believe that Molezzo and Harper were acting on behalf of Respondent in circulating the decertification petition. Rather, I find that under the circumstances of this case the conduct of Molezzo and Harper, as bargaining unit members, cannot be imputed to Respondent. Accordingly, I shall recommend dismissal of those allegations of the complaint which allege unlawful statements by Molezzo and Harper.

3. The employee meetings

In the absence of union animus, an employer does not violate the Act by providing accurate information regarding the mechanics of decertification, in response to questions from its employees. GAF Corp., 195 NLRB 169 (1972). Similarly, an employer may give its employees advice about how to withdraw support from a union, if the employees have, on their own initiative, requested such advice. Tartan Marine Co., 247 NLRB 646 (1980); Payless Drug Store, 210 NLRB 134 (1974). The General Counsel, relying on Craftool Mfg. Co., 229 NLRB 634 (1977), argues that Respondent violated the Act because its remarks concerning decertification were unsolicited and not the result of employee questions. The Craftool case, however, is not helpful because, in that case, the employer suggested a decertification petition before the employees took independent action on their own. Moreover, the employer in Craftool advised the employees concerning tactics and instructed them to return the petition to him.[5]

In the present case, the decertification campaign clearly originated with the employees and was well underway, at least in the Fresno facility, before Respondent made its remarks. More importantly, the decertification activity was disrupting productivity at the Fresno facility and Respondent sought to minimize the problem by referring employee questions to the Board's Regional Office. Thus, in this case, it cannot be said that Respondent's remarks instituted or directly assisted the decertification drive. Respondent told the employees that there had been rumors and questions about decertification. It then simply informed employees that it would not cease bargaining with the Union based on a decertification petition supported by 30 percent of the unit employees but that, if a majority petitioned to decertify, Respondent would no longer have to bargain with the Union. The employees were then given the Board's telephone number. The giving of such information, unaccompanied by any threat of reprisal or promise of benefit, cannot be found to be violative of the Act.

In my view, the General Counsel's argument ignores the fact that the Fresno employees were included in the bargaining unit. The General Counsel argues that "no employee in Salinas asked at the meeting [or before] about decertification, profit sharing, or about Respondent's health plan." However, Respondent's employees at Fresno were taking worktime to discuss these matters and Respondent chose to minimize this problem by calling an employee meeting at Fresno. It is only logical that Respondent would hold a similar meeting with its Salinas employees. The employees from both facilities were included in the bargaining unit, had telephonic contact with each other, and were similarly affected by these matters.

The General Counsel does not dispute the accuracy of Respondent's remarks concerning the Company's profit-sharing plan. Rather, the General Counsel argues that Respondent implied that the employees would get the Company's plan only if they decertified the Union. Further, the General Counsel argues that the discussion of the profit-sharing plan, when "viewed in the context of Respondent's prior unfair labor practices," constitutes direct dealing in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.

As discussed above, the employees were told that they could not be covered simultaneously by both the Union's pension plan and the Company's profit-sharing plan. At the same time, the employees were warned that there were no "guarantees" or "promises." Considering the number of years the Company's plan had been in effect, the employees could reasonably discount the warning against "guarantees" and conclude that the plan would continue in existence if they withdrew their support from the Union.

Section 8(c) of the Act states that the expression of "any views, argument, or opinion" shall not be evidence of an unfair labor practice so long as such expression contains "no threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit." Moreover, an employer may make a prediction as to the precise effects he believes unionization will have on his company so long as the prediction is "carefully phrased on the basis of objective fact to carry an employer's belief as to demonstrably probable consequences beyond his control." NLRB v. Gissel Packing Co., 395 U.S. 575, 618 (1969).

[5] For other cases in which the employer intitiated the decertification or repudiation activities, see Texas Electric Coop., 197 NLRB 10, 14–15 (1972), and Pembek Oil Corp., 165 NLRB 367, 374–375 (1967).

An employee benefit plan which restricts coverage to unrepresented employees is per se violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, regardless of whether the employer adds to the misconduct by implementing the restriction or exploiting it during an organizing campaign. See, e.g., Niagara Wires, Inc., 240 NLRB 1326, 1328 (1979); Greenbrier Hotel, 216 NLRB 721, 727 (1975). In Belcher Towing Co., 265 NLRB 1258 (1982), the Board found that an employer violated Section 8(a)(1) by implying that company benefit plans would be forfeited if employees voted for the union. The employees' benefits booklet in the Belcher Towing case stated that employees could not participate in the plans if they were covered by a collective-bargaining agreement. In addition the employer told employees that they would "lose" the benefit plans if the union came in. These statements were found to be misrepresentations of the eligibility requirements of one plan which lawfully excluded employees from that benefit if they were covered by collective-bargaining agreement providing for the same or similar benefit.

On the other hand, the Board has approved benefit comparisons under a number of circumstances. Absent threats of reduction of benefits or promise of increased benefits, benefit comparisons are permissible campaign techniques which fall within the bounds of free speech permitted by Section 8(c) of the Act. See, e.g., Thrift Drug Co., 217 NLRB 1094 (1975); Orchard Corp. of America, 170 NLRB 1297 (1968); American Thread Co., 101 NLRB 1306, 1324 (1952).

Applying the above principles to the facts of this case, I find that Respondent indicated to employees that they could not be covered by the Union's pension plan and the Company's profit-sharing plan at the same time. The employees were not told that the union members were ineligible for the profit-sharing plan. While the distinction between ineligibility due to a plan provided for in the collective-bargaining agreement and ineligibility due to union representation might be too subtle for the employees to distinguish without a fuller explanation than that given by Respondent, I cannot find on the record before me that Respondent impermissibly equated union membership or union representation with disqualification from the profit-sharing plan. In Belcher Towing, supra, relied on by the General Counsel, the employer was found to have violated Section 8(a)(1) by misrepresenting the disqualification for a lawful benefit plan. In the instant case there is insufficient evidence that Respondent misrepresented the fact that employees receiving a pension or retirement plan under a collective-bargaining agreement were lawfully ineligible to participate in the profit-sharing plan.

At the employee meeting of February 2, Respondent presented each employee with a personalized document which estimated, based on past experience, what the employee could expect to receive under Respondent's profit-sharing plan. Although the estimates were quite generous, it is not alleged that they were inaccurate; rather, it simply is alleged that the estimates constitute an implied promise of better benefits. However, like the remarks made in November, Respondent qualified the remarks by emphasizing that it was making no promises. Indeed, the document warned that it was no comparison and that the "law expressly prohibited the employer from making any promises in this period before the election." As discussed above, such comparisons have been held to be permissible campaigning. The fact that the comparisons mentioned large sums of money should not make unlawful an otherwise permissible comparison.

4. Quinn's conversations with Bates

As discussed earlier, Charles Bates credibly testified that on two occasions Quinn, Respondent's president, told Bates that the Union was holding Bates back and that, without the Union, Bates could make more money. These conversations occurred on November 5 and sometime in early January 1983. Bates could reasonably conclude, and it is here concluded, that Quinn was impliedly promising Bates an increase in pay if the Union were decertified. Accordingly, I find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by such conduct. Cummins Component Plant, 259 NLRB 456, 460 (1981).

Conclusions of Law

1. Respondent, Quinn Company, is an employer engaged in commerce and in a business affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Respondent engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act on November 5, 1982, and again in January 1983, by promising an employee increased wages if the Union were decertified.

4. The aforementioned unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

5. Except as set forth above, the General Counsel has not established that Respondent has violated the Act.

The Remedy

Having found that Respondent engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the purposes of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[6]

[6] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

ORDER

The Respondent, Quinn Company, Fresno and Salinas, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Promising employees higher wages, or other benefits, in order to induce them to withdraw their support from Operating Engineers, Local Union No. 3 as their bargaining representative.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Post at its Fresno and Salinas, California facilities copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[7] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 32, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[7] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, and has ordered us to post this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT promise higher wages, or other benefits, in order to induce you to withdraw your support from Operating Engineers, Local Union No. 3 as your bargaining representative.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

QUINN COMPANY

Martin-Brower Co. and Truck Drivers and Helpers Local Union No. 728 and Sandra K. McGill. Cases 10–CA–19074–1, –2, and 10–CA–19400

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND DENNIS

On 22 February 1984 Administrative Law Judge Howard I. Grossman issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed cross-exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] as modified and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[3]

The judge found that the Respondent's reasons for abolishing employee McGill's job were pretextual and her discharge violated Section 8(a)(3). We disagree.

In March 1981, because of increased volume and inventory shrinkage, the Respondent created the warehouse clerk position and assigned McGill to the job. According to Warehouse Manager Waters, the shrinkage problem was almost eliminated after McGill became warehouse clerk. Before the organizing campaign commenced, the Respondent began considering abolishing her job and hiring another checker. By the time the Respondent terminated McGill, many of her duties had been discontinued or divided among remaining employees. The Respondent hired no one to replace McGill. Although previously offered a checker position, McGill had declined to accept it. We conclude that the Respondent had a legitimate business reason for abolishing the warehouse clerk position[4] and would have done so absent her alleged protected activity.[5]

AMENDED CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Substitute the following for Conclusion of Law 4.

"4. By discharging Stephen M. Fortner, Alvin Lemacks, and Billy E. Powell on 11 March 1983 because of their support of the Union and activities on its behalf, the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act."

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Martin-Brower Co., College Park, Georgia, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraphs 2(a) and (b).

"(a) Offer Stephen M. Fortner, Alvin Lemacks, and Billy E. Powell immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

The Respondent excepts to several misstatements in the judge's decision. For example, the judge suggested that a pickup order would have had a route number notation on it if it were for the Lemacks/Powell 8 March run because there are two weekly runs to Memphis; but the Respondent asserts that one Memphis run is on the weekend and therefore could not be utilized for pickup orders because pickups cannot be made on weekends. Also, the judge stated that Lemacks told Powell in the presence of a dispatcher that their trip packet did not contain a pickup slip; in fact, the person present was an administrative clerk, not a dispatcher. We correct the misstatements, but we do not believe that they affect the judge's conclusions.

[2] We agree with the judge's conclusion that the Respondent discharged Fortner because of his protected activity. The record supports the judge's findings that Fortner could not have taken Burdette's equipment on 27 February and that Fortner's preparing a hotel receipt was accepted practice. We believe the Respondent took advantage of Fortner's use of Burdette's equipment on 3 March to devise a justification for discharging him. We find it unnecessary to adopt the judge's additional findings concerning questionable discipline and disparate treatment.

[3] In addition to modifying the judge's recommended Order, in accord with the amended Conclusions of Law, we modify the remedy, recommended Order, and notice to conform with the Board's standard reinstatement and expunction language.

[4] The judge stated that Waters was surprised by the abolition of McGill's job. In fact, Waters admitted that the decision was cost effective, and he knew that the Respondent was contemplating abolishing the job and hiring another checker.

[5] Because McGill was terminated, rather than laid off, the Respondent had no obligation to hire her for a different position that unexpectedly opened soon after her discharge.

Member Zimmerman, for the reasons set forth by the judge, would find that McGill was unlawfully discharged. He notes in particular that Supervisor Waters had told McGill that prounion employees' jobs could be eliminated—as McGill's was—and that "they never forgive and they never forget." Further, the majority's finding that McGill's duties had been discontinued or divided (for reasons found a pretext by the judge) is contrary to McGill's credited testimony that there was only a minimal reduction in her work, that business was increasing, and that she worked overtime.

Chairman Dotson and Member Dennis note that the judge ignored the fact that McGill's supervisor wanted to abolish her position; the judge ignored the fact that the problem McGill was hired to correct largely had evaporated; and the judge ignored McGill's own admission that the overtime she worked shortly before her discharge was due partly to seasonal inventory rather than to an increase in her daily duties. Because of these omissions, Chairman Dotson and Member Dennis do not find the judge's pretext finding persuasive.

them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

"(b) Remove from its personnel records or other files any reference to the unlawful discharges of the above-named individuals and notify them in writing that this has been done and that the discharges will not be used against them in any way."

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT tell employees that their jobs may be eliminated if we find out that they support the Union or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT tell employees that we will never forgive and forget union supporters.

WE WILL NOT tell employees that we know the names of employees who have signed union cards, and that the Union is going to lose an election.

WE WILL NOT tell employees that they had better get the Union in because we are going to fire them.

WE WILL NOT tell employees that there will be no raises if they vote for the Union, and that we will hold on as long as possible in litigation.

WE WILL NOT tell employees that we will move our plant, and that they will lose their jobs, if they select the Union as their representative.

WE WILL NOT tell employees that we will take away their telephone credit cards, holidays, uniforms, or any other privilege, if they select the Union as their representative.

WE WILL NOT discharge or otherwise discriminate against employees because of their membership in or activities on behalf of Truck Drivers and Helpers Local Union No. 728, or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce any of our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Stephen M. Fortner, Alvin Lemacks, and Billy E. Powell immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed and WE WILL make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from their discharge, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL notify the foregoing employees in writing that we have expunged all reference to their unlawful discharges from our personnel records and other files, and that the discharges will not be used against them in any way.

MARTIN-BROWER CO.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

HOWARD I. GROSSMAN, Administrative Law Judge. The charges in Cases 10-CA-19074-1 and -2 were filed on March 15, 1983,[1] by Truck Drivers and Helpers Local Union No. 728 (the Union), and a complaint issued on April 29. The complaint in Case 10-CA-19400 was filed on July 14, by Sandra K. McGill (McGill),[2] and an amended consolidated complaint on August 5. As further amended at the hearing, the complaint alleges that Martin-Brower Co. (Respondent) solicited employees concerning grievances and promised to adjust same following the advent of a union organizational campaign; created an impression of surveillance of its employees' union activities; threatened its employees with loss of employment benefits, denial of wage increases, and discharge if they engaged in union activities; and further threatened them with closing and removal of the plant if they selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative—all in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act). Further, the complaint alleges that Respondent, on March 11, discharged Stephen M. Fortner, Alvin Lemacks,[3] and Billy E. Powell, and, on April 30, discharged McGill, because of their union activities, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

A hearing was conducted before me on these matters in Atlanta, Georgia, on August 29 through September 2. On the entire record, including briefs filed by the General Counsel and Respondent, and on my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a Delaware corporation with an office and place of business located at College Park, Georgia, where it is engaged in the warehousing and transportation of food products. During the calendar year preceding issuance of the complaint, a representative period, Respondent sold and shipped from its College Park, Georgia distribution facility finished products valued in excess of $50,000 directly to customers located outside the State of Georgia. The pleadings established, and I find, that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

[1] All dates are in 1983 unless indicated.

[2] McGill's middle initial, omitted in the charge, is set forth as stated by her at the hearing.

[3] The spelling of Lemacks' last name is that set forth in the transcript rather than the complaint.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The pleadings established, and I find, that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Union's Campaign and the Representation Petition

About January 5, alleged discriminatee Stephen M. Fortner asked the Union for assistance, obtained authorization cards, and began distributing them. He gave cards to alleged discriminatee Billy Powell and to Arthur L. Rogers, both of whom returned signed cards to Fortner. Fortner, Powell, and Rogers were the most prominent supporters of the Union. Powell had formerly filed a charge against Respondent, which was settled, while Rogers was the Union's observer in a forthcoming election. These employees organized a meeting of company clericals and truckdrivers at a restaurant in early January, and thereafter arranged several meetings at the union hall.

Robert L. Wallace, a former truckdriver for Respondent who resigned about 4 months before the hearing, testified that he was in the office of Respondent's transportation manager George R. Gertenbach when another employee, Harlan Ford, came into the office. Ford told Gertenbach that the Company did not need a union, and that one was being organized by three individuals because they could not get along with the Company. According to Wallace, Ford identified the employees as Fortner, Powell, and Rogers.

Gertenbach admitted talking to Ford in his office in the presence of Wallace, but denied that Ford ever mentioned the leaders of the union movement. Wallace was the more believable witness, and I credit his testimony.

McGill attended all the meetings, while Lemacks attended at least two of them, and both signed union authorization cards. In addition, Lemacks asked other employees to support the Union.[4]

The Union filed a representation petition on January 24, asking to be represented in one unit composed of office clericals, and another composed of truckdrivers. The elections were conducted on April 1, and the Union was defeated in both of them. No objections were filed.

[4] On cross-examination, Lemacks appeared to testify that his pretrial affidavit affirms that he did not talk to other employees about the Union. However, the transcript is ambiguous in that Lemacks may merely have been denying union activity "while at work." The affidavit is not in evidence, and Lemacks reiterated his attempts at solicitation after having read the statement. I credit this latter testimony.

B. The Alleged Independent Violations of Section 8(a)(1)

1. The alleged solicitation to adjust grievances

a. Summary of the evidence

In late 1982, Respondent conducted a meeting intended to instruct drivers in the correct preparation of their paperwork, including "logs." On January 20, 1983, the Company issued a notice to drivers requiring them to attend a series of meetings to be held the week of January 31 to "get into the subjects that really concern you" (G.C. Exh. 4). Powell testified that he attended the meeting on January 31, and that Frank W. Quinn, Respondent's distribution manager,[5] told a group of truckdrivers that he wanted to hear about their complaints and problems, and see whether the Company could straighten them out. Thereafter, the meeting got "out of hand" according to Powell, with many complaints from employees. Fortner and Lemacks were "very vocal," and Powell also spoke up.

Fortner attended the same meeting, and averred that Quinn and Transportation Manager Gertenbach said that the purpose of the meeting was to see what could be done about driver complaints. A number of complaints were voiced, including unsafe working conditions and failure to provide copies of insurance policies. The last time such a meeting was held was in 1980, after the filing of a prior representation petition. Rogers also attended the first meeting, and testified that Quinn said that the purpose was to see whether the Company could "work out" some of the employees' problems.

Robert L. Wallace, a former employee who had resigned, declared that he attended the second employee meeting, on February 2, and that Quinn said that the Company brought the drivers together to see whether it could "straighten out" some of their problems.

Gertenbach testified that Quinn referred to the representation petition, and told employees that he could not promise anything because of the petition. Asked whether Quinn promised to adjust any of the grievances that he heard, Gertenbach denied it. "Like I said, at the beginning of the meeting, he told them right up front he couldn't do that." According to Gertenbach, Quinn said the same thing at meetings on February 2 and 4. "Up front he advised them he could not make any promises or changes."

Quinn testified that he spoke at the meetings, and went into "three areas basically"—he could not make any promises which would tend to make employees change their vote; he could not ask questions about their union activities; and he could not make any threats against employees. Quinn was asked whether he made any promises regarding employment conditions. He denied this, but asserted that he told the drivers that the Company "would look into some things and see what could be done about it." However, Quinn denied that he made any promises that the Company "would get anything changed."

[5] The pleadings establish, and I find, that Quinn was a supervisor within the meaning of the Act.

b. Factual and legal analysis

The testimony of the employees is consistent—Quinn said that the purpose of the meeting was to ascertain the employees' complaints and to see whether something could be done about them. This evidence is not rebutted by the Company's witnesses, and I credit it. It is thus clear that Quinn solicited the expression of grievances from his employees. Under established Board law, this created an inference that he was implicitly promising to correct any inequities that he discovered, in violation of Section 8(a)(1). Cutting, Inc., 255 NLRB 534 (1981), enfd. as modified 701 F.2d 659 (7th Cir. 1983).

The inference is rebuttable, however, and the real factual issue is whether Quinn expressly said something which negated the inference. Crediting Quinn and Gertenbach, I find that the former told employees that he could not make any promises. Under these circumstances, I conclude that Respondent rebutted the inference that it was impliedly promising to adjust grievances. Uarco Inc., 216 NLRB 1 (1974). Accordingly, I shall recommend that this allegation of the complaint be dismissed.

2. McGill's conversations with Warehouse Manager Waters

a. Summary of the evidence

McGill testified that she had a conversation with Warehouse Manager Bill Waters[6] a few weeks after the petition had been filed (January 24). McGill was doing some work in Waters' office, and he remarked that "some things" were happening around the office. When McGill replied that she did not know what he was talking about, Waters told her to close the door, and asked, "Why does the office think that they need a union?" McGill replied that the employees were concerned about job security, and would like to make more money.

Waters leaned over as if telling her a secret, and, according to McGill, said that he had heard a rumor that an employee's job could be eliminated if "they" found out that the employee favored the Union. When McGill denied that the Company could have such knowledge because of the secret ballot in Board elections, Waters replied, "Believe me, they'll know. They know that the Union is going to lose the vote." McGill argued that the election was going to take place in the future, and Waters responded that "they already knew who signed cards." He asked McGill whether her husband knew that she was involved in union activities, advised her not to get involved, and said that the Company was trying to keep her from voting.[7]

[6] The pleadings establish, and I find, that Waters was a supervisor within the meaning of the Act.

[7] During the representation proceeding, the Employer (Respondent) contended that the clerical unit should include customer service representatives, an inventory clerk, and an electronic data processor. The Petitioner (the Union) contended that the warehouse clerk (McGill) should also be included. The Regional Director's Decision and Direction of Election, dated March 2, excluded McGill from the clerical unit (R. Exh. 3).

McGill testified that she had a second conversation with Waters in the warehouse during an inventory, at a time when the decision had been made that she would not be able to vote in the election.[8] McGill said to Waters that her job was "safe," whereupon the warehouse manager replied: "I don't know. They never forgive and they never forget." Thereafter, a few weeks before the election, according to McGill, she said to Waters, "I'm eliminated from the vote, now, so my job is secure, isn't it?" Waters merely replied, "Oh, yes."

Waters acknowledged having a conversation with McGill in his office about the end of February, but gives a different version of it. He asserted that McGill was "shying off" from him, and asked whether anything was worrying her. When she denied this, he said that she was worrying, and that it affected her job. He told her that, if it was "about the Union," she had nothing to worry about, since she was not a clerical employee. McGill said that she did not want to discuss the matter. Waters denied the other statements attributed to him by McGill. Although he acknowledged talking with McGill in May, he did not specifically deny having additional conversations with her prior to the election on April 1.

b. Factual analysis

Respondent argues that it is not credible to believe that Waters would have talked to McGill about the Union, since she was not part of the unit. However, this was not known until the Decision and Direction of Election issued. Moreover, it is inconsistent with Waters' admission that it was he who raised the issue of the Union with McGill, professing to believe that she was "worried" about the matter.

McGill's testimony is replete with realistic details which give it verisimilitude. Her averment that Waters said the Company was trying to keep her from voting is corroborated by the record in the representation proceeding. Waters' contention that McGill did not want to discuss the Union is inconsistent with McGill's personality on the witness stand, which was that of a candid and effusive individual. By contrast, Waters' testimony is artificial and contrived. He appeared to be a less credible witness than McGill. Although there is some inconclusive testimony on cross-examination about the dates of McGill's conversations with Waters, it is insufficient to invalidate her testimony on direct examination, and I credit that testimony.

3. Powell's conversation with Waters

Powell testified that he had a conversation with Waters in the mailroom during February. The warehouse manager walked up to him and said, "This time you better get the Union in here. Frank's [Quinn] going to fire you." On cross-examination, Powell testified that Waters said Frank was going to fire "all of them." Powell was one of the principal union activists in a prior attempt to organize the shop.

[8] McGill placed this conversation "around the end of February." The Decision and Direction of Election did not issue until a few days later, on March 2.

Waters' testimony on this subject consists of a simple denial that he ever talked to Powell about the union campaign. Powell was not one of the employees whom he supervised.

Respondent argues that Powell should not be credited because he changed his testimony on cross-examination, and because Waters was not his supervisor. Neither of these reasons is persuasive. Powell amplified rather than contradicted his testimony on direct examination, and the fact that Waters was not his supervisor is irrelevant. Waters did not specifically deny threatening Powell with discharge. Powell was a more credible witness than Waters, and I accept his testimony.

4. Robert L. Wallace's conversations with Transportation Supervisor Holsumback

Former employee Wallace testified that he had two conversations with Transportation Supervisor Carl R. Holsumback[9] while still employed. The first conversation took place in Captain D's, a restaurant, about 2 weeks before the election (April 1). Wallace had come to the office to pick up his check, and Holsumback asked him to go to lunch. They discussed the union campaign. Holsumback told Wallace that he had already seen the company budget, and that it included very good raises for the employees. However, "if the Union was voted in, there would be no raises at all," because of "contract litigation" which the Company would "hold as long as they possibly could."

The second conversation occurred on a date closer to the election, in the dispatch office. Wallace was sitting at one desk, and Holsumback at another. The transportation supervisor said that the Company had acquired an option to purchase land in LaGrange, Georgia, about 60 miles from Atlanta according to Wallace. If the Union was voted in, it intended to move to this location, and the employees would lose their jobs.

Holsumback testified that he participated in preparation of the Company's budget, and acknowledged that he had lunch with Wallace at Captain D's. He stated that Wallace asked him what the budget provided for drivers' raises, and that he replied that he could not tell Wallace the answer to this question. He denied any discussion of the union campaign or litigation or negotiations with the Union. With respect to a prospective company move to LaGrange, Georgia, Holsumback testified that he heard a rumor to this effect from a driver, and informed his superiors. It was just a rumor, according to Holsumback, and he denied telling any drivers that the Company would move to LaGrange if the Union won the election. Other company witnesses denied the existence of any such option.

Holsumback's testimony is improbable. There is ample evidence in this proceeding that the Company was opposed to the union campaign, and it is therefore unlikely that Holsumback would have passed up an opportunity to answer an employee's question about forthcoming raises, if he could have done so in a lawful manner. He did not give the existence of the petition as the reason for his asserted refusal to answer Wallace. In fact, Holsumback gave no reason. Wallace was a candid and believable witness, while Holsumback, as appears more fully hereinafter, was untrustworthy. I credit Wallace's version of these two conversations.

5. Fortner's conversation with Holsumback

Fortner testified that he had a conversation with Holsumback in the equipment trailer on March 3 between 3 and 6 p.m. He had just come back from a trip, and was returning some equipment (rollers) which belonged to another driver. Fortner's equipment had been used by still another driver, after a prior injury to Fortner, had been retrieved by Holsumback, and was in the equipment trailer. Fortner's rollers were aluminum, and were preferred to the heavier steel rollers. This subject is one of the principal issues in connection with Fortner's discharge, and is more fully discussed hereinafter.

Holsumback returned Fortner's rollers to him, according to the latter. When they were inside the equipment trailer, Holsumback said that he would be glad when the union vote was over. He said that it was getting on his nerves, and that all the drivers did was "bitch and complain." The transportation supervisor said that if the Union came in the Company would take away the drivers' privileges such as telephone credit cards, personal holidays, and uniforms. The drivers were "crazy as hell if they [thought] they needed a union." Fortner opposed this view, and the two men left the trailer. As Fortner was putting his rollers away, Holsumback asked him whether he thought the Union was going to win the election. Fortner replied, "If I have anything to do with it, it will."

Holsumback acknowledged that Fortner's rollers were in the equipment trailer, and that he offered them to Fortner on March 3, just after Fortner had returned from a trip. However, Holsumback contended that Fortner declined to take them back, saying that he would return the next day, but never did so. Holsumback denied having a conversation with Fortner in the equipment trailer, and denied the other statements attributed to him by Fortner.

It is unlikely that Fortner would have refused his aluminum rollers, and, because of this improbability and other reasons more fully described in the discussion of Fortner's discharge, I conclude that he did take them back on March 3. I, therefore, infer that Fortner and Holsumback were in the equipment trailer on March 3. It is incredible that the two men went into the trailer to get Fortner's rollers in complete silence. And, whether inside or outside the trailer, Holsumback admitted having a conversation with Fortner on March 3. Fortner was a more believable witness than Holsumback, and I credit his version of the conversation.

6. Summary and conclusions

Waters' statement to McGill that an employee's job could be eliminated if "they," i.e., the Company, found that the employee favored the Union, is obviously coercive under established Board law. After McGill had been excluded from the unit by the Decision and Direction of [9] The pleadings establish, and I find, that Holsumback was a supervisor within the meaning of the Act.

Election, she announced to Waters that her job was "safe." "I don't know," he replied. "They never forgive and they never forget." This clearly had reference to the prior conversation about the discharge of employees who favored the Union, and implied that employees who favored unions would be discharged without regard to their membership in the voting unit. In this context, the statement was also unlawful, as was Waters' statement to Powell that Quinn was going to fire him.

Waters' telling McGill that Respondent knew who had signed cards, and thus knew that the Union was going to lose the election, constituted the creation of an unlawful impression of surveillance under well-established principles.

Similarly, Holsumback's statements to Wallace that the employees would not receive raises if they voted for the Union and would lose their jobs because the Company would move the plant to another location are classic instances of coercion. Holsumback's statement to Fortner—that the employees would lose their privileges in the event of a union victory—is simply another unlawful variation on the same theme.

C. The Alleged Violations of Section 8(a)(3)

1. The discharges of Powell and Lemacks

a. Respondent's policy on pickups

(1) Summary of the evidence

Powell, Lemacks, and Fortner were discharged on the same day, March 11. However, Powell and Lemacks worked as a team on the same truck, running "Route 20," and the reasons asserted by the Company for their terminations are different from those advanced to support the discharge of Fortner.

Powell and Lemacks had both been drivers for about 5 years. One of the principal reasons asserted by the Company for their discharges was their failure to make up a pickup when on a run. There were two kinds of pickups, the first where an order was taken by a driver on a long-distance run from a supplier on or near the driver's route to a location other the Company's College Park warehouse (designated a "linehaul" by company witnesses). The second kind of pickup was called a "backhaul" by company witnesses, and indicated a pickup to be delivered back to the Company's warehouse. The record discloses that Respondent's drivers for the most part did not understand the distinctions between linehauls and backhauls, and referred to both as pickups. Since the drivers were paid partially on a mileage basis, they made more money on a run which included an off-route pickup, and there is evidence of drivers protesting the absence of a pickup on a run.

According to Transportation Manager Gertenbach, an order to a driver to make a pickup was formerly indicated at the bottom of the driver's manifest. This proved to be inadequate. Accordingly, on September 8, 1982, Respondent issued a written directive to drivers, reading as follows:

> Beginning immediately, there will no longer be a pick-up written on the bottom of your Driver's Manifest. A copy of the PICK-UP REPORT FORM will be in your delivery packet. Another copy of that form will be kept here if you should happen to lose or misplace the form. (See attached copy.) This procedure is to help insure all pick-ups are made in a timely fashion and to avoid an inventory shortage. Your help and cooperation in this matter is [sic] greatly appreciated [G.C. Exh. 2].

Gertenbach acknowledged that the new directive did not instruct drivers what to do in event of the absence of a pickup order in the delivery packet. He further affirmed that none of his supervisors had issued any such directive.

Billy E. Powell testified that Transportation Supervisor Holsumback was responsible for the preparation of pickup orders and their insertion into the driver's packets containing the shipping documents. If a pickup order was inadvertently omitted from the packet, Holsumback would call the driver on the route, and give him a pickup instruction and an order number. The Company knew the exact sequence of stops which the driver was scheduled to make, and the approximate time he would arrive at each stop. Powell stated that there were no pickup orders in his and Lemacks' packets on three or four of the seven runs prior to their discharges. On these occasions, Holsumback called the drivers during the run and gave them pickup instructions. Wallace gave similar testimony about his routes.

Lemacks affirmed on direct examination that, during the 8 or 9 weeks that he drove the same route with Powell, there were 3 or 4 weeks in which there was no pickup.[10] On one occasion, about Thanksgiving 1982, Dispatcher Hallman told Lemacks that there was a pickup on the route. On arrival at his destination, Lemacks discovered that there was no pickup order in his packet. He called Transportation Supervisor Holsumback, and told him that there was no pickup order and nothing to pick up. Holsumback asked him why he was bothering to call, and instructed him to come back. "Yes, sir," Lemacks answered, and that ended the conversation. Thereafter, Lemacks never called the office when there was no pickup order in his packet. Lemacks distinguished drivers on "bid" runs such as Route 20, which included a pickup in the bid, from "unassigned" drivers whose run had been cut short. In such event, the drivers would normally call the office.

Transportation Manager Gertenbach testified that, after Powell and Lemacks had been discharged, he investigated their drivers' logs and determined that there was a pickup in 6 of the last 7 weeks when they ran Route

[10] Lemacks' testimony on direct examination was unambiguous. On cross-examination, he was asked the leading question as to whether there was only 1 week that he did not have a pickup. He answered that it was 2 weeks "without Billy [Powell]," and 1 week that Lemacks did not have a pickup—a total of 3 weeks. Counsel then asked whether there was only one pickup (linehaul) "the last seven weeks" Lemacks drove with Powell, and the witness answered, "The last one, yeah." In light of the witness' clear testimony on direct and initial cross-examination, I conclude that he misunderstood the last question, and that the substance of his testimony is that there were three occasions on Route 20 in which there were no pickups.

20, i.e., there was no pickup on one run. Dispatcher Hullman affirmed that there was no pickup on this run "once or twice." The logs themselves are not in evidence. Gertenbach denied that a pickup order was supposed to be in the driver's packet every time there was a pickup, despite the contrary language in the Company's September 1982 memorandum (G.C. Exh. 2). He distinguished between "possible" pickups and "designated" pickups (such as Rte. 20), and contended that, if a pickup order was absent in the latter case, it was standard policy for the driver to call the Company. However, Gertenbach admitted that there was nothing in writing that stated this policy. Transportation Supervisor Holsumback in general corroborated Gertenbach's testimony.

Herbert L. Fendley, one of Respondent's truckdrivers, testified that he called regularly from a Florida run whenever there was no pickup order in his driver's packet. However, Fendley acknowledged that he had never seen a written order to this effect, nor had he heard an oral instruction applying to runs in general. On occasion, he would receive a specific order to call on a particular run. Vernon R. Burdette, a driver, gave similar testimony.

(2) Factual analysis

There is nothing in Respondent's September 1982 memorandum, which revised pickup procedure, to indicate that it was a driver's responsibility to call the office in the event there was no pickup order in his packet. Respondent's witnesses Gertenbach and Fendley admitted that no such order had ever been issued. I credit Lemacks' testimony that, on one occasion when he did call Holsumback about the absence of a pickup order in his packet, the transportation supervisor asked why he had called and told him to come back. I credit the testimony of Powell and Lemacks to the effect that it was customary practice for the Company to call the driver on the road whenever a pickup order had inadvertently been omitted from the driver's packet, and to issue appropriate instructions. It was not the driver's responsibility to call the office.

I further conclude that there were no pickups on several, possibly three, of the Route 20 runs which Powell and Lemacks made. Gertenbach and Hallman admitted that this was true with respect to one or two of the runs, and the Company failed to introduce the drivers' logs for the last seven to nine runs. Accordingly, I credit the testimony of Powell and Lemacks.

b. The DOT regulations and the drivers' logs

Falsification of the driver's log was one of the reasons asserted by Respondent for the discharge of Powell, and the issue of drivers' logs and the Federal Department of Transportation (DOT) rules which governed them are therefore relevant.

Transportation Manager Gertenbach asserted that the drivers' lack of compliance with DOT rules on preparation of their logs was one of the principal problems which he faced on taking office in August 1982. He arranged for a company specialist in DOT rules, Bud Hargis, to speak to the drivers in October 1982. Gertenbach thereafter prepared a form to advise drivers concerning mistakes in their paperwork (R. Exhs. 4(a)–(d)). All of the drivers received such letters, according to Powell and Lemacks. Some of the early forms contained the legend that continued violations might lead to disciplinary action (R. Exh. 4(c)). However, on November 2, 1982, Gertenbach issued a memorandum reading in relevant part as follows:

> There has been a little confusion recently concerning the purpose of the new driver's "paperwork check-off" sheets. Their purpose is to show individual drivers their paperwork mistakes and not to be used as a disciplinary report . . . .
>
> We got this form from another center and didn't take out the discipline statement at the bottom of the form. That statement has now been taken out and replaced with the following statement:
>
> > Please use this information to help you comply with D.O.T. and Company rules. Thank you for your cooperation. [G.C. Exh. 7.]

According to driver Billy E. Powell, more than 15 hours of work in any 24-hour period, or more than 10 hours of driving, are illegal under DOT rules. However, Powell affirmed, emergencies such as flat tires or breakdowns occasionally made it impossible for the driver to finish the run within the DOT guidelines. In such event, Powell testified, the Company instructed drivers to prepare their logs in a manner which complied with the rules, but did not comport with the actual facts.

The General Counsel introduced several of Lemacks' logs to illustrate this practice (G.C. Exhs. 9(a)–(d)). The top part of the logs contain legends showing whether the driver is driving, on duty, off duty, or in the sleeper. The bottom part, however, reflects the actual hours worked, and it is on this basis that the driver is paid, according to Lemacks. Where the actual facts conflict with the "official" DOT report on the top of the page, the discrepancy is noted on the bottom of the log by a reference to a phone call with a company supervisor authorizing the "illegal" work, according to Lemacks. These logs are dated in December 1982—2 months after Gertenbach brought in Hargis to tell the drivers how to maintain their logs. Powell testified that the drivers protested "illegal" logging as late as their January 31 meeting with Quinn and Gertenbach, and Lemacks affirmed that the Company authorized improper logging after Hargis' talk.

Fortner asserted that the DOT rules also prohibit logging more than 47 miles per hour. However, on occasion the Company needed a trailer out on the road for a "preload" prior to its scheduled arrival time. If the driver logged his actual arrival time, the result would show a violation of the 47-mile-per-hour rule. Accordingly, the driver logs in a later arrival time. If this results in his being out overnight—"on paper"—he gets paid for overnight lodgings.

Gertenbach testified that Hargis told the employees that log falsification would no longer be tolerated. The transportation manager also denied telling drivers to engage in log falsification, and stated that he had never been present when a supervisor did so.

Gertenbach's denials are obviously insufficient to rebut the preponderance of the evidence, which shows that the Company was willing to bend the DOT requirements whenever business purposes required it, and to instruct drivers to prepare their logs accordingly.

c. Powell's and Lemacks' last run of Route 20

(1) Summary of the evidence

Route 20 was a "bid" run, and its initial stops were in Memphis, Tennessee. It normally included a pickup in Stuttgart, Arkansas, for delivery elsewhere on the route, or return to the warehouse in College Park (Atlanta). There are several factual issues, one of which is the question of whether Transportation Supervisor Holsumback placed a pickup order in the drivers' packet.

Holsumback testified that the actual scheduling of pickups is made in the Company's Chicago office, and is transmitted to the College Park warehouse by teletype. The responsibility for preparing the pickup orders and placing them in the drivers' packet is shared by Holsumback and dispatcher Hallman.

Holsumback identified a pickup schedule received from Chicago, dated March 7, containing the pickup locations, purchase order numbers, and destinations for the following week when the drivers were discharged (R. Exh. 19). Holsumback testified that he made some of the entries on this form. Thus, he made the notation "Rt #53" on the first line, and testified that this showed that Route 53, in Florida, was to handle that particular pickup. At the same time, Holsumback averred, he prepared the driver's pickup order. The second pickup was in Florida, and Holsumback wrote "Rt. 52" on the pickup schedule and prepared the driver's pickup order. The third pickup source on Respondent's Exhibit 19 is a company called "Riceland," in Stuttgart, and was on the Powell-Lemacks run. There is no notation of a route number opposite this pickup. In explanation, Holsumback averred that there was no necessity to write down the route number, since the Powell-Lemacks run to Memphis was the only route which could make the pickup. The Company in fact had two runs to Memphis. Nonetheless, Holsumback contended that he did write a pickup order for Stuttgart.

Dispatcher Hallman testified that he prepared driver's pickup orders on occasion. The procedure was to note, on the pickup schedule from Chicago, the route numbers which were making the pickups, and transfer the pickup information to a driver's pickup order. Contrary to Holsumback, Hallman stated that all the route numbers, including the one designating Stuttgart, were noted on the pickup schedule from Chicago. Then, on redirect examination, Hallman contended that the absence of a route number on the pickup schedule sheet would not have any "impact" on whether the route was to be run.

Powell and Gertenbach agree that the former had a conversation with the transportation manager a week before the final run, in which Powell asked whether there would be a pickup the following week. Powell's son, on duty with the Navy, was home visiting his father, and Powell wanted more time at home. Gertenbach replied that he could not eliminate the pickup if in fact there was one, but that he could assign Powell different work. Powell said that he spoke to Dispatcher Hallman the following Monday, March 7, and told him that he did not need a replacement for the Route 20 run because his son's leave had been extended. Hallman agreed that he had a conversation with Powell on Monday, but denied that Powell withdrew his request for a replacement. Instead, according to Hallman, he told Powell that there was a pickup in Stuttgart. However, Hallman testified that it was Holsumback who prepared the pickup order, and that he did not see it himself. Powell denied that Hallman said anything about a pickup during this conversation.

Lemacks called Hallman the following day, March 8, and inquired about the run. According to Lemacks, the dispatcher gave Lemacks the tractor number and other details about the trip, and said that there would "probably" be a pickup. According to Hallman, his information about the pickup was definite. Lemacks informed Powell about this conversation.

Later the same day, March 8, Powell and Lemacks went to the truck rental agency used by the Company, and obtained their tractor. They then returned to the warehouse to get their trailer and shipping documents. Opening the packet, Lemacks did not see a pickup slip, and commented to Powell in the presence of the dispatcher that they did not have a pickup that week. Gertenbach, who testified that he later investigated the matter, said that he determined there had been a pickup slip in the drivers' packet. He relied on Holsumback's affirmation that such was the case. Asked whether there were any copies of the pickup order, Gertenbach replied that it was not company practice to make such copies "at that time," but that the practice later changed.

(2) Factual analysis

The central issue is whether Holsumback placed a pickup order in the drivers' packet. I conclude that he did not do so. Hallman, contradicting Holsumback, said that route numbers were placed on the pickup schedule from Chicago in all instances, including the Stuttgart pickup, and that the information was transferred to a driver pickup order. The fact that there is no route number opposite the order for the Stuttgart pickup on the teletype from Chicago, while such numbers were written by Holsumback for the other pickups, suggests that no pickup order was written for Stuttgart.

Nor is there any copy of the alleged pickup order. Gertenbach testified that the Company did not make copies of pickup orders at the time, i.e., March 8, 1983, and that the practice of making copies did not start until a later time. However, Respondent's own memorandum changing pickup procedure states that a copy would be made of the pickup report form, in the event the driver lost or misplaced the original. That memorandum is dated September 8, 1982 (G.C. Exh. 2). I infer that Respondent did what its own memorandum said that it intended to do, and started making copies of pickup orders in September 1982. The fact that it did not produce at the hearing a copy of a pickup order allegedly written in March 1983 suggests that no such order was ever written.

Since drivers made substantially more money on runs with pickups, it is incredible that Lemacks and Powell would have passed up such an opportunity to their own financial detriment.

Finally, Powell and Lemacks were inherently more credible witnesses than Holsumback and Gertenbach, and for this reason, in addition to the objective considerations set forth above, I credit their testimony that there was no pickup order in their drivers' packet on March 8.

I also credit Powell's testimony that he told Hallman that his son's leave had been extended, and that he no longer needed a replacement for the run. In addition, I accept Lemacks' testimony that Hallman told him on March 8 that he "probably" had a pickup, rather than telling him definitely that this was so. Hallman acknowledged that he never saw the order, and was a less believable witness than Powell and Lemacks.

d. The discharges of Powell and Lemacks

Powell and Lemacks proceeded on their route. There was no call from the office during the run, which in itself was unusual according to Lemacks. They returned on Thursday, March 10, earlier than would have been the case had they made a pickup in Stuttgart. As they pulled into the yard, their truck was approached by Gertenbach, Holsumback, and Hallman. Gertenbach asked why they had not made a pickup, and Lemacks replied that they were not given a pickup (slip) that week. The three management officials then returned to the office.

The drivers turned in their paperwork, and looked for their paychecks. They were not in their usual place, and Holsumback told them that Gertenbach wanted to see them, Powell first, and then Lemacks.

Powell then had a conversation with Gertenbach in the latter's office. According to Powell, the transportation manager said that he was giving Powell warning letters for losing a set of padlocks and for falsifying records. Powell had lost some company padlocks about 2 weeks before. Powell testified that he replaced the padlocks at his own expense, informed Gertenbach of this fact, and never ran his truck without padlocks. Gertenbach denied that Powell informed him of the latter's replacement of the missing locks. Powell's testimony that he did in fact replace the locks is unrebutted, and I credit it. It is unbelievable that he would have failed to inform his supervisor of the replacement at his own expense in the face of company discipline over the matter, and I credit his testimony that he did so inform Gertenbach. The latter replied, according to Powell, that it "didn't matter."

The alleged log falsification had occurred back in mid-January, when Powell's foot was injured by a falling case in the trailer, at a time when his log showed that he was in the sleeper. Gertenbach acknowledged learning about the injury in January, and said that he signed something about the matter in that month, but no warning letter was ever produced by Respondent. In explanation of the approximate 2-month delay in administering this discipline to Powell, Gertenbach asserted that he had not seen Powell very often during that period of time. Powell testified that he asked to see the alleged warning letters, but that Gertenbach refused. I credit Powell's testimony, conclude that Gertenbach's story is incredible, and find that there were in fact no such warning letters.

Powell testified, and Gertenbach admitted, that nothing was said during their March 10 conversation about the alleged missed pickup from Stuttgart, despite the fact that the conversation occurred immediately after Powell and Lemacks had returned from the trip, and after Gertenbach, Holsumback, and Hallman had approached the truck and had questioned them about the pickup. In explanation of this omission, Gertenbach said that he had already told Powell the previous week that the pickup could not be canceled. This answer, of course, is not an explanation of the omission.

Lemacks testified that he then went to talk to Gertenbach, who asked him whether he had talked to Hallman prior to the run. Gertenbach asked whether Hallman had told him that there was a pickup on the run. Lemacks replied that Hallman had mentioned this, but said that he did not have the information on it, and that the paperwork would be in the "pouch." That terminated the conversation.

Gertenbach testified that Hallman had previously informed him that the latter had told Lemacks that the Stuttgart pickup could not be canceled. He then called Lemacks and Hallman into his office together,[11] and asked Lemacks whether Hallman had told him there was a pickup on the trip. According to Gertenbach, Lemacks said, "Yes." Gertenbach then asked Lemacks whether Hallman was his supervisor, and the employee again answered affirmatively.

Gertenbach's version of this conversation is contrary to the credited facts, since Hallman never saw any pickup order, and merely told Lemacks that a pickup was "probable." Accordingly, I credit Lemacks' testimony concerning his March conversation with Gertenbach. Powell was waiting for Lemacks when the latter was in the office with Gertenbach. The two employees left together, and Lemacks told Powell that Gertenbach had mentioned the missed pickup.

On the following day, March 11, according to Powell, Gertenbach called and asked him to come in to the warehouse about noon, and Powell replied that he could not make it until about 1 or 2 p.m. Gertenbach called back, and said that it was not necessary for him to come in, that he could be fired on the phone, and that Powell was dismissed immediately. On direct examination, Powell testified that Gertenbach gave no reason for the discharge during the telephone conversation. On cross-examination, Powell was asked two questions in one—whether Gertenbach or Powell made the call, and whether Gertenbach told Powell that he was fired for missing a pickup "on the 11th." "Right? Not the 10th, the 11th," was counsel's last question. The witness answered, "Yes, sir, that's right." Powell later denied on cross-examination that he was told he had been fired for missing a pickup. I interpreted the witness' answers on cross-examination as his affirmation that the conversation took place on March 11, and not as a contradiction of his direct testimony that Gertenbach gave no reason for the discharge.

[11] Gertenbach reversed the order of the interviews, asserting that he talked to Lemacks before Powell.

Gertenbach, on the contrary, asserted that he told Powell on the phone that he was discharged for failure to make the pickup in Stuttgart. Powell later called his office, asked about his pay, and further requested the reason for his termination in writing. On the same day, March 11, Gertenbach wrote Powell a letter reading as follows:

> Pursuant to your request we are notifying you in writing that your employment has been terminated due to insubordination [G.C. Exh. 5].

I credit Powell's testimony on direct examination that Gertenbach did not give him the reason for the discharge during the March 11 telephone conversation. Gertenbach admitted that he did not raise the issue of the pickup during his March 10 conversation with Powell in the office. The only subjects he did mention—the alleged log falsification in January and the lost padlocks—could not reasonably be considered "insubordination," nor were they labeled as such by Gertenbach. Powell continued to maintain at the hearing that, although Lemacks told him that a missed pickup was the reason for the discharges, the Company had never told him this. I credit that testimony,[12] and conclude that Respondent alternately gave no reason and inconsistent reasons for the discharge of Powell.

Lemacks was discharged on the same day, March 11, in a very brief interview with Gertenbach and Quinn. Lemacks said that Gertenbach stated that Lemacks was guilty of "gross negligence," and Gertenbach affirmed that he gave the failure to make the pickup in Stuttgart as the reason. The transportation manager admitted that Lemacks had a good record, his only prior deficiency having been an occasion when he inadvertently left his packet of documents in a truck which had broken down, thus causing the Company to send the documents to him in another vehicle.

2. The discharge of Fortner

a. The visit to the union hall and the telegram to Respondent

On leaving Gertenbach's office after having been dismissed, Lemacks saw Fortner in the outer office, and the two employees decided to visit the union hall. They stopped on the way, and Lemacks called Powell. In the middle of this conversation, Powell put Lemacks "on hold," and later returned to Lemacks' line to inform him that Powell had just been fired by Gertenbach. Fortner and Lemacks proceeded to the union hall, where they were joined by Powell and Rogers. They consulted a union lawyer, and the Union attempted to send the following telegram, dated March 11, to Center Manager Frank Quinn, in care of Respondent:

> Please be advised that your drivers of their own free will and choice volunteered to help support and actively assist Teamsters Local Union No. 728 . . . in the organization of your company and in general to exercise all their legal rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.
>
> Listed below are some of the employees that will be active on the Union's behalf:
>
> Stephen W. Fortner and Arthur Rogers
> [Signed] G. B. Profitt, Assistant Business Agent
> [R. Exh. 9].

The parties stipulated that the manager of the Western Union office, if called as a witness, would have testified that Western Union attempted to read the message to Quinn over the telephone, but that he refused to accept any further reading after 72 words. When a Western Union messenger later attempted physical delivery of the telegram, a company representative first signed for it, then scratched out her name, and returned the telegram to the messenger (R. Exhs. 9, 10).

Quinn acknowledged that he stopped the attempted telephonic reading of the telegram at the point where the operator said she was going to list some names of employees. He also agreed that the attempted physical delivery of the telegram was blocked by the Company. The reason, he said, was that he did not want to know the names of his employees engaged in union activities. Accordingly, Quinn maintained, he did not know on March 11 that the names of Fortner and Rogers were listed in the telegram.

b. Rogers' trip to Charleston on March 6

As indicated above, Rogers was one of the union activists, and was the union observer during the April 1 election. He had a route to Charleston on Sunday, March 6. This run had a possible pickup, and the usual departure time was 4 p.m. on Sunday. In the event the run had no pickup, Rogers could leave at 12:30 a.m. Monday, since the elimination of the mileage for the pickup made it possible to complete the run "legally" within the DOT regulations. This would also save the Company money, since it would not be required to pay him overnight expenses.

On Sunday, March 6, Rogers called Warehouse Supervisor Kirk Kitchens and asked him to look in Rogers' packet to determine whether there was a pickup. Rogers did this in order to get an additional 8 hours at home if possible. Kitchens reported to Rogers that there was no pickup order in his packet, and, accordingly, Rogers left at 12:30 a.m.

---

[12] Powell's pretrial affidavit, introduced by Respondent, is not inconsistent with this finding (R. Exh. 8). Although Powell testified that he initialed a statement in the state unemployment office indicating that he had been fired for missing a pickup, he affirmed that it was the Company, rather than he, that told this to the state official. The finding of the State's administrative hearing officer was that Powell was discharged for failing to make a pickup, but that he could not be held at fault because he had been given any bills to make the pickup, and therefore could not have known that they were to be made (G.C. Exh. 6).

On his return, there was a message for him to call Transportation Supervisor Holsumback. The latter asked whether Rogers had made a pickup at Savannah Foods. When Rogers replied in the negative, Holsumback asked the reason, and Rogers replied that there was no pickup slip in the packet. The transportation supervisor replied that there was a pickup slip, since he had personally put it there the preceding Friday. Rogers replied that this was not possible, because pickup slips are not placed in the drivers' packets until Saturday or Sunday. Further, Rogers told Holsumback that Rogers called Warehouse Supervisor Kitchens on Sunday, and had been informed that there was no pickup order in his packet of documents.

According to Rogers, Holsumback's reply was, "Ah, ah, ah, you talked to Kirk, huh?" "Yes, sir," Rogers replied, "sure did."

Rogers further affirmed that Kitchens told him that Center Manager Quinn asked Kitchens whether Rogers in fact had inquired about the pickup on Sunday.

Gertenbach corroborated Rogers' testimony. Holsumback testified on both sides of the issue. First, he asserted that he did place a pickup order in Rogers' packet of documents. Then, he was asked why Rogers continued to be employed at the Company after missing a pickup, and replied that Rogers had called Kitchens and had discovered that there was in fact no pickup order. Holsumback's contradictions of himself, Gertenbach, and Rogers are substantial factors in my determination that he was a completely unreliable witness, and would testify to anything which he thought might aid Respondent's cause. There was in fact no pickup order in Rogers' packet on March 6.

The following week, when Powell and Lemacks were discharged, Rogers made a run to Macon on March 10. On his return, Gertenbach asked him whether he had obtained permission to leave at midnight on the preceding run to Charleston. When Rogers replied that there was no pickup, but that he had not received permission to leave at midnight, Gertenbach required him to sign a "warning letter," without giving him a copy. Rogers protested this to Quinn, who told him that it was a minor matter. This was the first time that Rogers had ever been reprimanded over a departure time, according to his testimony. Rogers was a trustworthy witness, and I credit his testimony in its entirety.

c. Fortner's injury and loss of equipment

(1) Summary of the evidence

In November 1982, the refrigeration unit in Fortner's trailer failed to function, resulting in damage to food products, and Fortner was reprimanded. In December 1982, he received a 3-day suspension with loss of pay, and a 3-month probationary period ending March 9, 1983, because of customer complaints (R. Exh. 24). On December 31, 1982, there was a fuel leakage at the fuel pump in the company yard, and Fortner's boots became oily. He slipped and fell backwards while getting into the tractor, and was injured and hospitalized for 5 days. Gertenbach reprimanded him for failure to observe safety regulations. As indicated above, when Fortner left the hospital about January 5, he became a leader of the union movement.

According to Fortner, when he was taken to the hospital, his equipment, consisting of a handtruck, stands, and four rollers were left unattended. Holsumback visited him in the hospital to inquire about his paperwork, and at that time Fortner asked the transportation supervisor to check on his equipment. However, when Fortner returned to work, his equipment was missing. It had been stamped with Fortner's clock number, and he testified that he located his rollers in the bin of another driver, Jimmy Mitchell. In late January or early February, according to Fortner, he took Holsumback to Mitchell's bin and showed him the rollers. Holsumback promised to get the equipment back from Mitcheli and return it to Fortner, but did not do so according to the latter. Instead, Holsumback placed Fortner's equipment in the utility trailer, for which Holsumback had the key. Fortner had a conversation with Holsumback about his equipment a short time before making a run to Charleston on February 27, but Holsumback claimed that he had not yet seen Mitchell. It was not until Fortner's March 3 conversation with Holsumback in the utility trailer, described above, that he obtained his equipment.

Holsumback gave a different chronology of events. According to him, Fortner did not return to work after his injury until about the last week of January, and at that time reported that his equipment was missing. Holsumback does not deny Fortner's averment that the latter told Holsumback about the equipment during a hospital visit, in early January.

Continuing with Holsumback's version, when Fortner reported the loss in late January, Holsumback offered him a handtruck, stands, and steel rollers, which Fortner refused because his own were aluminum. Fortner did not need the equipment at that time, since he was making runs with another driver, and the latter's equipment was sufficient.

Holsumback also contended that he investigated on receiving Fortner's report, and located Fortner's handtruck, stands, and two of his (aluminum) rollers "scattered out in the yard." Fortner came by and reported that he had located two of his rollers. At that point, Fortner and Holsumback went to the bin of another driver, where Fortner identified two of his rollers. Fortner did not say whose bin it was, although the bin had an employee's clock number. Holsumback knew it was Mitchell's bin, but did not tell this to Fortner, according to his own testimony. He asserted that Fortner took his handtruck and three stands, but would not take the two aluminum rollers which Holsumback had found in the yard until the other two rollers were retrieved from Mitchell's bin.

Holsumback contended that he reached Mitchell, then on a trip, and the latter asserted that he had found the two rollers in the yard, had placed them in his bin for safekeeping, and had reported the matter to his supervisor. Holsumback reminded Mitchell of a company letter warning drivers that use of another driver's equipment warranted immediate termination (R. Exh. 12). Holsumback asserts that he checked with Mitchell's supervisor, who corroborated the latter, and Holsumback then gave Mitchell a "verbal warning." The transportation supervisor then took the two aluminum rollers out of Mitchell's bin, and placed them in the utility trailer, together with the other two rollers which he had found in the yard.

Thereafter, as recited above, Holsumback contends that he offered Fortner his four aluminum rollers on March 3, and that the latter declined.

(2) Factual analysis

Holsumback is not explicit on the time that he recovered the two rollers from Mitchell, but the context of his testimony suggests that it took place in late Janaury or early February. This is consistent with Fortner's testimony that he took Holsumback to Mitchell's bin at that time and showed him Fortner's rollers.

As indicated above, Holsumback's position—that Fortner continued to reject his own aluminum rollers, for one reason or another, until after March 3—is incredible. I credit Fortner's testimony, and find that Holsumback placed Fortner's equipment in the utility trailer about early February and, when Fortner questioned him in late February, denied having seen Mitchell. I credit Holsumback's testimony that the discipline administered to Mitchell for having taken Fortner's equipment was a verbal warning.

d. Fortner's trips to Charleston and Macon, and his discharge

(1) Fortner's testimony

On February 27, Fortner made his first single run since returning to work. The destination was Charleston, and Fortner did not have his own equipment. However, the Company allowed some equipment left by former drivers to be stacked in the yard, while assigned equipment was supposed to be kept in the drivers' bins. Fortner picked up some equipment in the yard for this trip. He did not know whose equipment it was, if anybody's. According to Fortner, he left at 3:30 p.m. on Sunday, February 27, and replaced the equipment on his return.

On March 3, Fortner made a trip to Macon. Again, he picked up equipment in the yard. He discovered that it belonged to another driver, Vernon Burdette, because of the clock numbers on the equipment. When he returned the same day, Holsumback offered Fortner his own equipment, and Fortner said that Burdette would probably be glad to get his back. Holsumback inquired whether he had Burdette's equipment, and Fortner replied affirmatively. Fortner returned it.

According to Fortner, March 10 was "bid" day, and Fortner was in the office examining his options for the next routes to be bid. He took his bids into Gertenbach's office, and the latter asked whether he had used Burdette's rollers. Fortner replied affirmatively, explaining that Holsumback had Fortner's equipment locked up in the trailer. "Is there a problem?" Fortner asked Gertenbach, "No," replied Gertenbach, "[T]here's no problem. I just wanted to ask you about them." Lemacks later came out of Gertenbach's office and said that he had been fired. As this actually took place on March 11, Fortner's March 10 date is erroneous.

Later in the afternoon of March 11, Fortner and Rogers were at the union hall, as described above, and caused the telegram to be sent to Quinn which the latter rejected. Gertenbach called Fortner that afternoon and said, "Per our conversation this morning, this is to inform you that you have been terminated with the Martin-Brower Company." He then hung up. Fortner received a telegram from Gertenbach reading as follows:

> This is a confirmation copy of a telegram addressed to you. This is to confirm that your employment with the Martin-Brower Company was terminated effective today as we discussed on the phone [G.C. Exh. 10].

Fortner filed a claim for unemployment compensation benefits, and, a few days later saw the Company's response, alleging that he was discharged for unauthorized use of another employee's equipment, and for falsification of records (G.C. Exh. 11).[13] Fortner testified that this was the first time he knew the Company's reasons for discharging him.

(2) The Company's position

Respondent's witnesses contended that Fortner falsified his log by showing that he left on the February 27 trip at 3:30 p.m., whereas he did not really leave until after midnight. Respondent supports this position with evidence that Burdette last saw his own rollers about midnight on February 27, as he was leaving on a trip with another driver utilizing the latter's equipment. Accordingly, the Company argues, Fortner could not have left at 3:30 p.m. with Burdette's equipment, and must have left after midnight. When asked to produce a motel receipt, Fortner could only produce a form receipt without the name of any motel, and could not recall where it was that he stayed that night. His motive, the Company argues, was to obtain expenses for a night's lodging to which he was not entitled.

(3) Gertenbach's testimony

Gertenbach testified that Burdette reported to him on March 1 that his equipment was missing since February 28, after having been secured in the trailer. The transportation manager asserted that Holsumback told him on March 4 that the latter had obtained Burdette's equipment from Fortner the prior day, March 3. Gertenbach stated that he called Fortner's house on March 4, but that the call was not returned until Sunday, March 6, to the Company's answering service. Gertenbach returned the call, and Fortner's wife informed Gertenbach that her husband was ill. Gertenbach asserts that he finally reached Fortner on Monday, March 7, and that Fortner then told him that he had taken Burdette's equipment on February 27, with Holsumback's permision. Gertenbach said that he questioned Holsumback, who denied giving [13] The State's claims examiner allowed the Company's defense, on the ground that Fortner had falsified his logbooks.

Fortner permission to take Burdette's equipment. Gertenbach asserts that he concluded that the "timing was off," since Fortner was supposed to have left for Charleston on Sunday afternoon, whereas Burdette had reported seeing his equipment about midnight. Gertenbach testified that Fortner's log showed an arrival in Summerville, South Carolina, at 10:30 p.m., and that the driving time is 5-1/2 to 6 hours.

The log actually shows that Fortner left at 3:30 p.m. on February 27, arrived in Columbia, South Carolina, at 8 p.m. ("20.00"), was off duty an hour, left at 9 p.m., drove until 10:30 p.m., and was then "off duty" (R. Exh. 22). The next log shows him arriving at Summerville, South Carolina, at 6 a.m. on February 28, remaining there 15 minutes, and arriving at Charleston, South Carolina, at 8:45 a.m. Fortner worked until 6:15 p.m. on February 28 (R. Exh. 23).

According to Gertenbach, Fortner was told to come into the office to make his bid for the next route. Also, Gertenbach wanted to talk to him about Burdette's rollers. Fortner did so, but on March 11, rather than March 10. Fortner was first given his bids, and then had a conversation with Gertenbach. The latter told Fortner that he had said "on Monday the 27th" [sic] that he had taken Burdette's equipment with Holsumback's permission.[14] According to Gertenbach, Fortner denied this, saying that he had told Gertenbach that he took the equipment on March 3 on a solo run to Macon. Gertenbach asked Fortner the name of the town and motel where Fortner had stayed on February 27, and Fortner could not remember.

Gertenbach, on the assumption that it was February 27 that Fortner took Burdette's rollers—and therefore could not have left at midnight—testified that he conducted an investigation to determine when it was that Fortner actually left. The alleged investigation was singularly inconclusive.

None of the warehousemen remembered seeing Fortner leave on February 27. The supervisor on duty (Kitchens) could not remember seeing Fortner that afternoon. Although there is a dispatch sheet, the departure time is not listed. Although Fortner was hauling a refrigerated trailer, whose temperatures were supposed to be recorded every 2 hours by a security guard, Gertenbach did not investigate any such records. He asserted that Warehouse Manager Waters had supervision over the security guards, and that he did not talk to Waters about the matter. According to Gertenbach, a driver could simply walk in, get his papers, hook up the trailer to his tractor, and leave without talking to a security guard.

The truck itself, or tractor, was rented by Respondent from a rental company (Ryder). Gertenbach asserted that he called Ryder, but did not know whether it had a log on the time that Fortner picked up the tractor on February 27. As far as Gertenbach could determine from Ryder, the keys are left in the ignition, and Fortner simply arrived, got in, and drove off without talking to anybody. On Gertenbach's theory, this took place some time after midnight, February 28. Fortner then drove to Respondent's warehouse, hooked up a trailerload of refrigerated merchandise, and again drove off without talking to anybody, and without any record of departure time.

Gertenbach testified that he discussed the matter with Quinn, and that the decision was made to terminate Fortner. The first reason was log falsification—Fortner's claim that he had a layover on February 27, whereas in fact he drove straight to his first stop. Gertenbach conceded that the question about the rollers and the layover money was "a bit shady," but gave major consideration to Fortner's prior discipline and the probationary period. However, if Fortner had been able to come up with the name of a motel where he stayed on February 27, this would have indicated that he could not have taken Burdette's equipment on that day.

Quinn communicated with his own superior in Chicago, and Fortner was informed of his discharge by telephone about 3 p.m., Friday, March 11, followed by a telegram.

(4) Burdette's testimony

Burdette asserted that his rollers were imprinted with his clock number, and were locked up in his bin at midnight on February 27, when he left with another driver using the latter's rollers. Burdette's rollers were missing when he returned on February 28 (R. Exh. 26). He said that Holsumback told him about 3 days later that he had found them, i.e., about March 3. However, it was not until about a week and a half later that Burdette got his rollers back, and was told that it was Fortner who had them.

(5) The General Counsel's evidence on motel receipts

The actual motel receipt which Fortner submitted to the Company is in evidence. It is a printed form without the name of the motel. Fortner's name and address are printed on the form, together with an indicated arrival date of February 27, and a departure date of February 28. The room number is "16," and the room rate is $26 (R. Exh. 13). Fortner testified that he could not remember the name or motel, or the name of his first stop. He returned to the warehouse on Tuesday, and submitted two expense vouchers for layovers in the amount of $32 each. He testified that he had turned in similar receipts in the past, and none had been questioned.

The General Counsel elicited additional evidence on this point. Thus, Powell testified that the nightly layover rate at the time he was employed was $32, and that no motel bill was required to substantiate the charge. Powell turned in receipts which he made up himself, and most of the drivers have their own "receipt book" for this purpose. At one point, Gertenbach said that he was trying to eliminate the receipts completely, and "just pass the money up front." Wallace testified to similar effect, and said that expense receipts were never investigated. Lemacks made similar averments, and stated that Holsumback explained the Company needed something on file for "tax purposes." Rogers, currently an employee of Respondent, identified a blank receipt form which is the same as the one Fortner submitted, and testified that he is routinely paid by the Company on submission of such a form (G.C. Exh. 13).

[14] The transcript is erroneous at this point since Gertenbach's actual testimony was that Fortner told him on Monday, March 7, that it was on February 27 that Fortner took Burdette's equipment.

(6) Factual analysis

The distance from Atlanta to Columbia, South Carolina, is 214 miles and from Atlanta to Charleston, South Carolina, is 289 miles.[15] At the "legal" DOT speed of 47 miles per hour, the trip from Atlanta to Charleston would have required more than 6 hours of driving time alone, exclusive of rest stops, meals, etc. Fortner's log shows that he reached Charleston at 8:45 a.m. on February 28. Respondent has submitted nothing to cast doubt on this arrival time. Burdette asserted that his rollers were locked in his bin at midnight on February 27. In order for Fortner to have taken Burdette's rollers on that night, as Respondent asserts that he did, Fortner would have had to arrive at the warehouse some time after midnight, take the time necessary to break the locks on Burdette's bin, take out the rollers, place them in his tractor or trailer, hook up the trailer to the tractor, and then start out for Charleston, with stops at Columbia and Summerville on the way. It may have been possible for a determined driver in a passenger car to have reached Charleston by 8:45 a.m. by sacrificing rest stops and meals. It is highly improbable that a commercial driver, with a relatively cumbersome tractor-trailer combination, would have started out after midnight, somehow raced to Charleston by 8:45 a.m., and then would have worked throughout the day without any rest whatsoever.

Gertenbach's alleged investigation of the time that Fortner left on February 27 resulted in conclusions which are unbelievable. According to that investigation, an individual was able to walk into the Ryder yard, find a tractor with gasoline in the tank and a key in the ignition, drive off without being seen, go to the Martin-Brower warehouse sometime after midnight, break the locks on a bin, hook up a trailer loaded with valuable refrigerated perishables, and drive off again without being seen and without any records. This attains the height of incredibility.

Because of the foregoing improbability of the time factor, the incredibility of Gertenbach's investigation, and the fact that Fortner was a more believable witness, I accept his testimony that he left on Sunday afteroon, February 27, as recorded in his log.

I also find that Fortner stayed at a motel the night of February 27. The fact that he could not remember the name of the motel is of no moment, since only a driver with computerized recall could remember the name of every motel where he stayed. The fact that Fortner could not supply a motel receipt with the name of the motel imprinted on it is also irrelevant, since the General Counsel supplied abundant evidence, which I accept, that it was company practice to accept personalized receipts without such names.

I conclude that Fortner in fact did not take Burdette's rollers on February 27. There is no reason to question his testimony that he found them in the yard on March 3, and took them on his trip to Macon, and I credit that testimony. How Burdette's rollers came to be in the yard on March 3 is unknown.

Since Fortner did not take the rollers on February 27, would he then have told Gertenbach that he took them on that date with Holsumback's approval? This assertion by Gertenbach is also incredible, and I reject Gertenbach's testimony that, during his conversation with Fortner on March 11, he asserted, and Fortner denied, that the latter had admitted in a prior conversation on March 7 that it was on February 27 that he took Burdette's rollers. Like Hamlet, Gertenbach staged a play within a play. His object was to justify his false accusation that Fortner had logged his departure time inaccurately on February 27. Gertenbach was tied into this date by Burdette's testimony.

I reject Gertenbach's account of his conversation with Fortner on March 11, and accept Fortner's version, with the correction that it took place on March 11 instead of March 10. I, therefore, find that Gertenbach asked Fortner whether the latter had used Burdette's rollers, and that Fortner replied affirmatively, explaining that Holsumback had locked up Fortner's rollers in the trailer. Fortner asked whether there was any "problem," and Gertenbach replied that there was none. Later that day, Gertenbach called Fortner, discharged him, and sent him a telegram advising him that he was terminated per that conversation.

3. Legal conclusions on the discharges of Powell, Lemacks, and Fortner

Respondent's animus against the union movement is established by its violations of Section 8(a)(1) described above. The Company threatened employees with loss of privileges, pay raises, plant removal, and discharge for favoring or voting for the Union, and engaged in other unfair practices showing its hostility to the union movement.

The Company also knew that Powell, Fortner, and Rogers were the leaders of the union movement, since Ford informed Gertenbach of this fact. Quinn's rejection of the union telegram, identifying Fortner and Rogers as union supporters, was a calculated stratagem. Fortner's conversation with Holsumback on March 3 showed that he was a strong union supporter. Waters told McGill that the Company knew who had signed cards. Powell spoke up at the employee meeting on January 31, and Waters flatly told him that he had better get the Union in, because Quinn was going to fire him. Lemacks, together with Fortner, was "very vocal" at the employee meeting. Although not identified by Ford as one of the leaders of the union movement, Lemacks also attended union meetings, asked other employees to support the Union, and was known by management to be the co-driver with known union activist Powell. The General Counsel has thus established a strong prima facie case that Respondent discharged Powell, Lemacks, and Fortner because of their union activities.

[15] I take judicial notice of the mileage figures set forth in "Standard Highway Mileage Guide," p. 36, published by Ran McNally & Company (Chicago, New York, San Francisco, 1978).

Respondent has not rebutted this case. With respect to Powell, Respondent wandered from one excuse to another for his discharge. On March 10, after the missed pickup, all that Gertenbach talked about was log falsification and lost padlocks. The former concerned a picayune matter 2 months before, where Powell's log showed that he was in the sleeper when in fact he was in the trailer. The Company, despite the lecture from Hargis on accuracy of logs, tacitly or explicitly advised drivers to alter their logs to make them "legal" when business circumstances required it. Nor has Respondent advanced any convincing reason why it waited 2 months to mention this infraction to Powell. As for the lost padlocks, Powell told Gertenbach that he had replaced them at his own expense, but the transportation manager said that that fact did not make any difference.

On the next day, March 11, Gertenbach fired Powell on the telephone without giving him any reason. He followed this with a letter saying that the discharge was for "insubordination." Although this reason was never explained to Powell, it apparently referred to the company theory that Powell and Lemacks had defied direct orders from Gertenbach and/or Hallman to make a pickup in Stuttgart. As the facts show, however, there were only conjectural statements from Gertenbach the week before, and from Hallman just before the last trip, but no direct order, and there was no pickup slip in the drivers' packet of documents. Although the route was supposed to have a pickup, on several prior runs there was none.

With respect to Lemacks, Respondent explicitly gave the missed pickup as the reason for the discharge, calling it "gross negligence." However, as the facts show, Respondent's new policy was to order pickups by means of a pickup order in the driver's documents, and to call them on the road when such an order had inadvertently been omitted. There was no written or verbal order requiring drivers to call the office on long-distance runs to inquire about pickups, despite Respondent's recent publication of a memorandum on the subject. When Lemacks on one occasion did not make such a call, after having been told by Dispatcher Hallman that there was a pickup and after discovering that there was no pickup order, Holsumback asked him why he was bothering to call. It is obvious that Respondent's charge of "gross negligence" under these circumstances is itself gross exaggeration. This is especially so in light of Lemacks' good record, which the Company admitted.

The case of union activist Rogers, still employed by the Company, is the same as that of Powell and Lemacks, with one important difference. Like the latter two employees, Rogers was charged with missing a pickup. Unknown to Respondent, however, Rogers had called the warehouse manager and had determined that there was no pickup order in his packet, thus disproving Holsumback's assertion that he had prepared one. The Company reluctantly withdrew its case against Rogers, on learning this, and charged him only with changing his scheduled departure time. The General Counsel suggests that the Rogers case indicates that Respondent was following a policy of entrapment by prearranging reasons for the discharges of Powell, Lemacks, and Rogers. I need not decide this issue, but merely find that the stated reasons for the discharges of Powell and Lemacks were obviously pretextual under established Board criteria.

The fact pattern in Fortner's case is different, but with the same result. After Fortner showed Holsumback his missing equipment in Mitchell's locker, Holsumback retrieved the equipment, but locked it up in the utility trailer instead of returning it to Fortner. When Fortner went on his first solo run and needed equipment, he picked it up in the yard, first on February 27, and again on March 3. Discovering on the latter occasion that he had Burdette's equipment, he returned it to the Company which thereupon invented the concatenation of absurdities and contradictions, outlined above, to justify Fortner's discharge.

I have carefully considered Fortner's record, which Respondent states was important in its decision to discharge him. The 3-month probationary period was apparently grounded on customer complaints, but had expired 2 days before Fortner was discharged. The reprimand to him for violating safety regulations, when it was a leaky fuel pump which made his boots oily and caused him to slip, seems to have been rather questionable discipline. In any event, the Company discharged him in part for using Burdette's equipment, and gave Mitchell merely a verbal warning for using Fortner's equipment. The disparate nature of the discipline is evidence of discriminatory motivation in Fortner's case.

I conclude that Respondent has not established that it would have discharged Powell, Lemacks, and Fortner even if they had failed to engage in protected activity. Accordingly, Respondent has not rebutted the General Counsel's prima facie case, and its discharge of those employees on March 11, 1983, was violative of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393 (1983); Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 989 (1982).

4. The discharge of McGill

a. McGill's hiring and employment history

McGill started working for Respondent in 1979. She was first classified as a temporary employee. However, Respondent moved into its new facility in College Park about March 1981 and began experiencing problems. One of these was increased volume, and another was inventory shrinkage. Accordingly, Respondent created the position of warehouse clerk, and assigned McGill to the position. This permitted Warehouse Manager Waters to spend more time on the floor, and resulted in a general tightening of receiving procedures.

Waters testified that the inventory shrinkage problem improved "almost 90 percent" after the hiring of McGill. In November 1981, McGill received a performance evaluation which rated her as "proficient" in six categories and "more than proficient" in three categories. There were written comments on the evaluation report, such as "very good, catches a lot of receiving errors," and "always on top of her functions and helps out the Inventory Control Coordinator (ICC)." The report described her as "real good" in learning ability, with no complaint about learning new procedures. She volunteered her services when needed, and manifested initiative to assure the accuracy of receiving reports. McGill had a "real good attitude towards the Company and employees, and [got] along well with everyone." She was "a very intelligent and conscience [sic] employee" (G.C. Exh. 14).

In August 1982, McGill received another performance evaluation almost the same as the first one, although her overall performance rating was raised from "proficient" to "strong proficient." This evaluation was signed by Warehouse Manager Waters and Center Manager Quinn (R. Exh. 29). A few months thereafter, McGill received a pay raise.

As already described, McGill attended the union meetings in early 1983. She also had the conversations with Warehouse Manager Waters about the union campaign and about her own job, set forth above. On April 29, Quinn told McGill that she was laid off because her job no longer existed.

b. McGill's duties

In addition to Waters as warehouse manager and McGill as warehouse clerk, there were three warehouse supervisors and various warehousemen and checkers. There was also an inventory control coordinator (ICC). He had overall responsibility to maintain compliance with the Martin-Brower inventory control system, and various specific responsibilities.[16]

McGill was in an office on the warehouse floor, and performed a variety of functions. Drivers from vendors delivering merchandise to Martin-Brower would bring freight bills to her, and McGill would check to see that the Company had received exactly what the warehouseman reported. Thereafter, she stamped the vendor's document "Received." These drivers came in at various times scattered throughout the day until 3 p.m., when receiving was stopped. The Company never knew at what time a product was being delivered to it, and McGill was therefore required to be on a standby basis much of the time. She started at 7:30 a.m., and handled up to 30 or more inbound carriers daily. The number of such carriers fluctuated on a daily basis. When there were about 15, it was a "slow" day but, when the number reached 30, it was a "hectic" day.

McGill also answered the telephone in Waters' absence from the warehouse office, and made truck-driver appointments. She brought incoming mail upstairs. On occasion in the late afternoon, she did typing for company officials upstairs. Quinn said that McGill's typing for him only took 15–30 minutes, and not on a daily basis. McGill, however, testified that she also typed for other company officials, and that the total time ran to half an hour to an hour a few times a week. The Decision and Direction of Election states that about 10 percent of warehouse clerk's time was spent upstairs doing copying and typing (R. Exh. 3), but McGill said that it was more like 20–25 percent. Waters admitted that McGill stayed upstairs after 2 or 2:30 p.m.

For a time, McGill was also "logging product codes for Red Lobster." She was relieved of this work, and assigned the duty of assisting the ICC with "receivers," i.e., a tally sheet containing detailed information on incoming freight. McGill prepared this document, checked it with other records, made copies, and transmitted them to Chicago. She also did some filing for the ICC and some checking of linehaul-backhaul allowances.

c. The replacement of the ICC

Waters testified that the ICC during 1982, an employee named Garland Smith, was doing unsatisfactory work, and Waters began interviewing other individuals to replace him. McGill asked Waters for the job, but he did not consider her qualified because she did not have a college degree, and because of his belief that she could not "take the pressure." Smith was replaced by Mark McCormick on January 3, 1983.

Waters contended that the hiring of McCormick reduced McGill's duties. Thus, the warehouse manager asserted that McGill did not "do receivers" after the hiring of McCormick. He stated that McGill continued "to make Xerox copies and put them together for mailing," but denied that she had any telecopying responsibilities. In fact, Waters argued, McGill used the telecopying equipment only 5–10 times after the release of Smith. Unlike Smith, McCormick did his own typing, and had a better attendance record than the former. His office was moved downstairs.

McGill testified to the contrary. McCormick did not do any more than Smith did with "receivers." He took the purchase order and made an entry of the number, but it remained for McGill to make the copies, send them to Chicago, and make entries in the receiving log. McGill continued to check linehaul-backhaul allowances with transportation. She checked the daily inventory analysis (DIA) against the purchase orders under both Smith and McCormick. Smith's attendance had actually improved during his last months at Martin-Brower. The only difference in McGill's work after McCormick was hired is that she had less filing to do.

Waters was less credible than McGill. I accept her testimony and find that the replacement of Smith by McCormick resulted in only a minimal reduction in McGill's duties.

d. The increase in Respondent's business

McGill testified that, during the last 3 months of her employment, she was required to type a weekly report for Quinn justifying overtime for various employees. The explanation invariably was that the warehouse was breaking receiving and shipping records. Waters admitted that McGill prepared such reports. McGill said that she and other administrative employees were busier during the last 3 months than during the preceding months. McGill, who normally worked a 40-hour week, earned over $250 in overtime from January to mid-April, just before she was laid off. (G.C. Exh. 15.)

[16] The ICC was required to prepare "receivers," i.e., receiving documents, on a daily basis, prepare them for mailing, coordinate with transportation to assure proper credit for backhaul-linehaul allowances, check receiving records for accuracy, transfer information from receiving records to the proper purchase order, teletype all purchase orders daily, check the daily inventory against purchase orders, transmit them to Respondent's office in Chicago, maintain "cycle counts" of products, coordinate with the purchasing department, and "assist in all phases of inventories" (R. Exh. 15 and testimony of Waters).

Waters testified that the Company had attained a record volume of business during the 9-month period ending in August 1983. However, Waters contended, the volume of business in April 1983, when McGill was released, was about the same that it had been in the fall of 1982.

The import of Waters' testimony is that the Company's volume of business stayed about the same level from the end of 1982 through April, and then suddenly increased. This assertion is contradicted by the statistical reports prepared by McGill for Quinn, by the documented evidence of McGill's overtime, and by McGill's more credible testimony. I find that the Company's business increased during the first 4 months of 1983, and that McGill worked overtime.

e. Waters' analysis of McGill's productivity

Waters testified that McGill spent some of her time reading newspapers, magazines, and books in the receiving office, and that Garland Smith complained that she was twiddling her thumbs. The warehouse manager analyzed her duties, contended that each of the functions she performed took only a few minutes a day, and concluded that she had only 2 hours of "productive time" out of an 8-hour workday. This had been the case for "a pretty good while" before she left the Company.

McGill agreed that she read a newspaper at work, but affirmed that this took place only on breaktimes. She never "shirked" her work. Other employees, customer service representatives (CSR's), listened to the radio when they were finished with their work for the day. McGill denied that she only worked productively 2 hours a day during her last months of employment. In fact, her work picked up because of the increased volume of business.

Since the Company never knew the exact arrival time of incoming freight, part of McGill's work was to be on a standby basis. This is simply the nature of one of her jobs. However, Waters' assertions are almost ludicrous in light of the documented record that Respondent was paying McGill overtime for working more than 40 hours a week, when, according to Waters, she was really working only 10 hours. The warehouse manager's contentions are implicitly contradicted by Respondent's evaluations of McGill. For these reasons, I reject Waters' analysis of McGill's productivity.

f. McGill's "layoff"

About the end of the day on April 29, McGill was called to the conference room. Quinn told her that she knew that the warehouse clerk's job was a "created" job, because there was no other position like it in the Martin-Brower system. That position no longer existed. McGill asked whether she had been laid off, and Quinn replied affirmatively. He said nothing about recalling her to work. Waters corroborated McGill on this latter point.

Waters testified that the abolition of McGill's job came as a surprise to him. He had made no recommendation in the matter, and the decision was made by "higher authority." Waters said that he would have liked to retain McGill, since he thought highly of her as a worker and an employee.

g. Availability of other work

McGill testified that another checker position was created after she left the Company. This was filled by a new employee, Mike Shelton. In addition, Cindy Hogan, one of the customer service representatives (CSR), resigned a week or two after McGill left. This position was filled by another new employee, Mickey Rich. McGill said that she was familiar with the product codes which would have been helpful in the checker's position, and that she was familiar with the paperwork requirements of the CSR position.

Waters said that he had hired a checker in late 1982, and that McGill knew about this and did not apply for the job. A checker had to be able to lift 74 pounds, according to Waters, and all of his checkers were men. However, on cross-examination, the warehouse manager refused to affirm that a woman was unable to perform the job of checker. He had made no decision on the matter. He also refused to deny that McGill was qualified for the CSR job, and his testimony suggests that "with training" she could perform this job. The "Red Lobster book," which McGill maintained for a time, was maintained by a CSR before and after McGill's tenure with the Company.

Quinn asserted that there were no job openings in the CSR department on April 29. On May 1, he took on Mickey Rich as a "temporary" CSR. Fifty percent of Cindy Hogan's work was done on the Burger Chef account, which Quinn knew that the Company was going to lose, and which it did lose in July. Hogan resigned without notice on May 5. Quinn interviewed some people for the job, kept Rich on as a temporary employee for some time, and offered her the CSR job in mid-June. She accepted.

I conclude that, after McGill's "layoff" on April 29, work became available for which she was qualified. This was clearly the case with respect to the CSR job which Rich obtained, and Waters had not ruled out the checker position as a job for women. It is also clear that Respondent did not offer McGill either of these jobs.

h. Legal conclusions

As described above, McGill attended union meetings and signed a union card and Waters told her that the Company knew who had signed cards. After McGill had been excluded from the voting unit, and said to Waters that her job was "safe," he replied: "I don't know. They never forgive and they never forget." This clearly establishes Respondent's animus against union supporters in general, and against McGill in particular.

I conclude that McGill in fact was discharged, rather than laid off, on April 29. She was never recalled, although work for which she qualified became available. I also conclude that the General Counsel has established a prima facie case that her discharge was discriminatorily motivated. This case is established by the specific evidence of Respondent's animus against her as a union supporter, and is buttressed by her record of good work, and by the fact that her immediate supervisor, Waters, was not consulted concerning her discharge, and, indeed, wanted to retain her.

Respondent has not rebutted the General Counsel's case. The reasons given by Respondent for the alleged abolition of her job are pretextual. The need for the warehouse clerk position was clearly recognized by Respondent when it created that position, and that need became even greater as Respondent's business increased in early 1983. The reason given to McGill by Quinn on April 29 for elimination of the job—that it was the only one in the Martin-Brower System—is irrelevant, since Respondent was obviously aware of that fact when it created the job in the first place. Waters' attempt to demonstrate that there was no real need for the job, and that McGill really worked only 2 hours a day, was unpersuasive for the reasons set forth above.

I, therefore, conclude that Respondent has not established that it would have terminated McGill even if she had not been a union supporter. Accordingly, the General Counsel's case is unrebutted, and I find that, by discharging McGill on April 29, because of her support for the Union, Respondent thereby violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., supra, Wright Line, supra.

In accordance with my findings above, I make the following

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Martin-Brower Co. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Truck Drivers and Helpers Local Union No. 728 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By engaging in the following conduct, Respondent committed unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act:

(a) Telling an employee that her job could be eliminated if Respondent found out that she favored the Union.

(b) After a union supporter said that her job was "safe" following her exclusion from the voting unit, replying to her: "I don't know. They never forgive and they never forget."

(c) Telling an employee that it knew who had signed union cards, and that the Union was going to lose the election.

(d) Telling a known union supporter that he had better get the Union in, since Respondent was going to fire him.

(e) Telling an employer that if the employees voted for the Union, there would be no raises, only litigation, and that the Company would "hold as long as they possibly could."

(f) Telling an employee that Respondent had purchased an option to buy land elsewhere, and that if the employees voted for the Union, Respondent would move its plant to this new location, and the employees would lose their jobs.

(g) Telling an employee that Respondent would take away the employees' telephone credit cards, holidays, and uniforms, if they voted for the Union.

4. By discharging Stephen M. Fortner, Alvin Lemacks, and Billy E. Powell on March 11, 1983, and by discharging Sandra K. McGill on April 29, 1983, because of their support of the Union and activities on its behalf, Respondent thereby violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

5. The foregoing unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

6. Respondent has not violated the Act except as hereinabove set forth.

THE REMEDY

It having been found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, it is recommended that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative actions designed to effectuate the purposes of the Act.

It having been found that Respondent unlawfully discharged Steven M. Fortner, Alvin Lemacks, and Billy E. Powell on March 11, 1983, and Sandra K. McGill on April 29, 1983, it is recommended that Respondent be ordered to offer each of them immediate and full reinstatement to his or her former position or, if such position no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his or her seniority or other rights and privileges, dismissing if necessary any employee hired to fill the position, and to make him or her whole for any loss of earnings he or she may have suffered by reason of Respondent's unlawful conduct, by paying him or her a sum of money equal to the amount he or she would have earned from the date of his or her unlawful discharge to the date of an offer of reinstatement, less net earnings during such period, with interest thereon to be computed on a quarterly basis in the manner established by the Board in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[17] In addition, it is recommended that Respondent be required to expunge from its personnel records all references to its aforesaid unlawful discharges, and to notify each employee in writing that this action has been taken and that evidence of its unlawful discharge of him or her will not be used as a basis for future personnel action against him or her.

I shall recommend that Respondent be required to post appropriate notices.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[18]

---

[17] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[18] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

ORDER

The Respondent, Martin-Brower Co., College Park, Georgia, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Telling employees that their jobs can be eliminated if Respondent finds out that they favor the Union.

(b) Telling known union supporters who have been excluded from the voting unit, and who then affirm that their jobs are safe, that Respondent never forgives and never forgets.

(c) Telling employees that it knows who signed union cards, and that the Union is going to lose the election.

(d) Telling a known union supporter that he had better get the Union in, and that Respondent was going to fire him.

(e) Telling employees that if they voted for the Union there would be no raises, only contract litigation and that the Company would "hold as long as they possibly could."

(f) Telling employees that Respondent had purchased an option to buy land elsewhere and that, if the employees voted for the Union, Respondent would move its plant to this new location, and that the employees would lose their jobs.

(g) Telling employees that Respondent will take away their telephone credit cards, holidays, and uniforms if they voted for the Union.

(h) Discouraging membership in Truck Drivers and Helpers Local Union No. 728, or any other labor organization, by discharging or otherwise discriminating against its employees with regard to their hire, tenure of employment, or any term or condition of employment.

(i) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights under Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Stephen M. Fortner, Alvin Lemacks, Billy E. Powell, and Sandra K. McGill immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if any such position no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his or her seniority or other rights and privileges, discharging if necessary any employee hired to replace him or her, and make him or her whole for any loss of earnings he or she may have suffered by reason of Respondent's discrimination against him or her in the manner described in the section of this decision entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Expunge from its personnel records or other files of the above-stated individuals, any reference to his or her unlawful discharge, and notify him or her in writing that this action has been taken and that evidence of his or her unlawful discharge will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against him or her.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its facility in College Park, Georgia, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[19] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 10, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint be dismissed insofar as it alleges violations of the Act not specifically found herein.

---

[19] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Health Care Logistics, Inc. and Jon B. Jacobs and Mark A. Cox and Robert D. Fox, Jr. Cases 9-CA-20594, 9-CA-20712-1, and 9-CA-20712-2

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

On 24 July 1984 Administrative Law Judge Claude R. Wolfe issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Health Care Logistics, Inc., Circleville, Ohio, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the administrative law judge.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

Near the beginning of his decision the judge mistakenly stated that Jacobs was discharged on 8 December 1984 instead of 8 November 1984. Additionally, in his notice the judge inserted the name of the wrong labor organization involved. The notice is revised to correct this error.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT discharge or otherwise discriminate against any of you for supporting the United Steel Workers of America, or any other union.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Jon B. Jacobs, Mark A. Cox, and Robert D. Fox Jr. immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed and WE WILL make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from their discharge, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL remove from our files any reference to the terminations of Jon B. Jacobs, Mark A. Cox, and Robert D. Fox Jr. on 8 November 1983, and WE WILL notify them in writing that this has been done and that evidence of these unlawful actions will not be used as basis for future personnel actions against them.

HEALTH CARE LOGISTICS, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

CLAUDE R. WOLFE, Administrative Law Judge. This consolidated proceeding was litigated before me at Circleville, Ohio, on May 10 and 11, 1984, pursuant to charges timely filed and consolidated amended complaint issued April 17, 1984. It is alleged, and Health Care Logistics, Inc.[1] (Respondent) denies, that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by terminating Charging parties Jon B. Jacobs,[2] Mark A. Cox, and Robert D. Fox Jr. in order to discourage union membership and activity among its employees.

On the entire record and my observations of the testimonial demeanor of the witnesses, and after considering the arguments advanced by the parties in their posttrial briefs, I make the following

[1] Respondent's name appears as amended at hearing.

[2] The charge prepared and signed by Jacobs shows the proper spelling of his name to be Jon.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, an Ohio corporation, is engaged in the manufacture of carts, cabinets, and related products used in the health care industry at its facility in Circleville, Ohio. During the past 12 months, a representative period, Respondent, in the course and conduct of these business operations, sold and shipped from its Circleville, Ohio facility goods, products, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the State of Ohio. Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

The United Steelworkers of America (the Union) is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES[3]

At the time of the events giving rise to this proceeding Respondent was manufacturing medical carts and cabinets in a 2000-square feet one-story building, about the size of a three-car garage, divided into an open manufacturing area, a paint room, and a restroom. The work force then was about 10 or 12 employees, including Operations Manager Ted Salyers and Shop Supervisor Robert Erwin.[4] Salyers and Erwin spent their working time at this facility. Respondent's president Gary L. Sharpe had his office in a house three doors away from the manufacturing operation.

Some time in early or mid-October 1983 the employees, including Supervisor Erwin, began discussing the possibility of union representation. There were several such informal conversations among the employees continuing into early November. Jon Jacobs became the leader in these discussions, and expressed his feelings in favor of a union. When a number of employees, including Cox and Fox, stated a desire to further explore the matter, Jacobs called Union Representative Hoover on November 7, about 1:30 p.m. during a work break, and arranged a meeting between Hoover and the employees for November 10. After completing his call to Hoover, Jacobs returned to the work area and told all the employees and Erwin of the scheduled meeting. Sharpe decided on the evening of November 7 to let Jon Jacobs, Mark Cox, and Robert D. Fox Jr. go. They were terminated on Tuesday, November 8.

Jacobs, Cox, Fox and other employees were clearly engaged in statutorily protected activity when they discussed union representation, decided to meet with a union representative to further explore it, and arranged the meeting with Hoover through Jacobs. Respondent's knowledge of that activity would ordinarily be imputed from the presence of Erwin, Respondent's agent, during these activities, but Erwin, Sharpe, and Salyers credibly agree that Erwin did not tell Sharpe or Salyers of the employee union activities. I therefore conclude that knowledge of union activities may not be imputed to Sharpe or Salyers merely because Erwin had such knowledge. Dr. Phillip Megdal, D.D.S., Inc., 267 NLRB 82 (1983). I do, however, agree with the General Counsel that the circumstances warrant the application of the "small plant rule" permitting a presumption of employer knowledge where the facility is small and open, the work force is small, employees made no great effort to conceal their union conversations, and management personnel are located in the immediate vicinity of the protected activity. See, e.g., Class Watch Strap Co., 267 NLRB 276 (1983); NLRB v. Instrument Corp. of America, 714 F.2d 324 (4th Cir. 1983). The activities were carried out on Respondent's very small and open facility where Salyers was always present when at work. The no more than seven or eight employees involved took no special precautions to conceal their activities. It is highly improbable that the employees' interest in union representation, expressed in several conversations within the shop, would remain a secret unknown to Salyers who spent his workday in the facility. The absence of any office or other private place where Salyers might have fortuitously stationed himself and thus avoided any knowledge of any of the union talk in a building of such small dimensions lends support to this conclusion. I am persuaded the small plant rule is here applicable and the resulting presumption of employer knowledge on this ground has not been credibly rebutted. The timing of the termination in midworkweek and on the very next day after the meeting with the Union was arranged and announced to employees also indicates knowledge, Class Watch Strap, supra, as well as cause and effect. There is no evidence that Respondent expressed any hostility toward union activities during the October-November period in which the protected conduct occurred, but Jacobs gave credible testimony of such expressions by Sharpe and Salyers in June 1983.[5] On a day in June, while investigating a workmen's compensation claim, Salyers told Jacobs that the brother of the employee involved had threatened to beat up Sharpe's father, or perhaps bring a union to Respondent's facility to "straighten things up." Salyers then told Jacobs that if a union representative walked in "we'll run him out." The following day Jacobs was discussing the situation vis-a-vis the former employee with Sharpe when Sharpe commented that if a union ever got in his facility he would close it down. Salyer's statement

[3] The facts set forth below are derived from the credited aspects of the testimony of all witnesses, the exhibits, comparative testimonial demeanor, and careful consideration of the logical consistency and inherent probability of the facts found. Although I may not, in the course of this decision discuss every bit of record testimony or documentary evidence, it has been weighed and considered. To the extent that evidence not mentioned herein might appear to contradict my factfindings, that evidence has not been disregarded but has been rejected as incredible, lacking in probative worth, surplusage, or irrelevant.

[4] Salyers and Erwin are alleged and admitted to be statutory supervisors and agents of Respondent.

[5] There are some differences between the version Jacobs gave on direct examination and that which he gave on cross-examination when confronted with his pretrial affidavit. Neither version is denied by Sharpe or Salyers. Jacobs' version, after Respondent refreshed his recollection with his pretrial statement, is credited because the written statement was closer in time to the events and more likely to be accurate than his later recollection.

does not necessarily connote hostility toward unions, but strikes me as being more in the nature of a determination to respond to a threat with resolute action regardless of the identity of the emissary of the person issuing the threat. The comment of Sharpe does, however, amount to a declaration of obdurate opposition to unionization of his employees even to the extent of closing his business. The General Counsel has established the existence of union activity, Respondent knowledge, Respondent hostility, and precipitous adverse action hard on the heels of significant union activity. This is sufficient to establish a prima facie showing that the separations were discriminatorily motivated. This being so, the burden now shifts to Respondent to demonstrate that it would have taken the same action in the absence of protected activity. Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980).

In addition to its claim, which I have rejected, that it had no knowledge of the protected activities before it terminated the three employees, Respondent advances various other reasons for the separations. The major contention is that financial and production problems required termination of the least productive employees, and that Jacobs, Fox, and Cox were selected on the basis of comparative performance. The record fairly reflects that Respondent was in financial difficulty and had production problems prior to the onset of the discussions about a union, and continued in such straitened circumstances into February 1984, long after the dismissal of the three, yet Respondent hired one employee on November 21, 1983, and three in January 1984. By far the worst month for Respondent financially was September 1983,[6] Respondent's financial situation in November 1983 has not been shown to be more severe than in immediately prior months. Quite the contrary. The $8000 loss in November represents a considerable improvement over the $15,000 September loss. The record reflects nothing other than Respondent's ipse dixit to support a notion that the termination of three employees was urgently needed for financial, production, or other reasons on November 8, 1983. The hiring of a new employee the same month and three more in January suggests the terminations were not in fact a necessary exercise of good business judgment.

Respondent's purported reasons for the selection of each of the three separations were enunciated at trial by Gary Sharpe, Respondent's president, in testimony that was often vague, circumlocutory, and evasive.[7] Respondent's posttrial brief also specifies reasons for selection, as does Respondent's answer to the consolidated amended complaint in this case. These different expositions are not always consistent each with the other or with additional evidence elicited from Respondent's witnesses.

Jon Jacobs

With respect to Jacobs, Respondent first advances the defense that Jacobs was a supervisor and therefore not protected by the Act. There is sufficient evidence in the record to indicate that Jacobs was foreman of the second shift and was probably a statutory supervisor for 3 weeks or so in September 1983. This, however, is irrelevant because Jacobs' protected activity and discharge occurred after the second shift was terminated at the end of September 1983. The issue is whether he was a statutory supervisor commencing in October 1983 when he once again went on the first shift which was already supervised by Salyers and Erwin. Respondent's contention that there were three supervisors on the first shift where there were no more than seven or eight employees working together in a small area, a ratio of one supervisor to two or three employees if Jacobs be found to be a supervisor, is extremely improbable. I also note that Jacobs was paid $3.65 an hour, the same as Mark Cox who was clearly not a supervisor, but less than the $3.90 paid Erwin.

Jacobs was given the title of field maintenance supervisor on his return from the second shift to the first. Titles are not dispositive of supervisory status,[8] nor do conclusory statements that an employee possesses any or all of the supervisory authorities enumerated in Section 2(11) of the Act establish that he or she in fact does.[9] Jacobs spent 30 to 40 percent of his worktime in October 1983, and until his discharge, traveling to customers' facilities for the purpose of repairing Respondent's products. He traveled and worked alone with no one to supervise. He had the authority to purchase repair parts on Respondent's behalf as dictated by the needs of the article being repaired. This involved no significant exercise of independent judgment of the type involved in assessing possible managerial or supervisory status. When not on his field maintenance trips, Jacobs performed routine assembly work in the shop and conducted a materials in-

[6] Respondent lost $15,000 in September and $8000 in November. The loss in December dwindled to $1917, but this obviously could not have been due to the discharge of the three employees after only 5 working days in November.

[7] The following is a representative sample of Sharpe's periphrasis:

Q. Mr. Sharp, are you telling us this morning that these problems that you have mentioned from Mr. Jacobs, Mr. Cox, and Mr. Fox were confined to them alone, that you had no problems with any other employees in your employ?

A. Well—I can't say—you know—it is an ongoing thing sometimes, things come up and it was a process there of I couldn't afford to carry unproductive employees and I had to make some decisions.

People don't like it when they don't get their paycheck and I didn't want to be forced into a situation where I couldn't make a payroll.

Q. Are you telling us that you have had similar problems with other employees such as the same you have had with Mr. Cox, Fox and Jacobs?

A. You know, at any one time an employee may have a problem. You try to work with them and sometimes given certain conditions, and you have to make a decision, should I bet on them that they will come along, do I have the time, the resources, the energy, should I bet on them or not, should I go with them, what can I do.

These—through September and October leading up—it was getting tighter and tighter, and consultation with Ted, why isn't productivity better than it is. I reached a point that I had to make some cuts, who were the least productive.

JUDGE WOLFE: The real question was, have you had production and quality problems with other employees, not why you selected these at that given time, but have you?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

[8] Saladmaster Corp., 216 NLRB 769, 773 (Santiago) (1975).

[9] United States Gypsum, 118 NLRB 20, 25 (1957).

ventory. The inventory was a solitary affair with no one else involved. On occasion Jacobs showed less senior employees how to do their work, and answered their work-related questions. He also occasionally transmitted Salyers' instructions to Erwin and other employees. There is no evidence he had any independent authority to nullify Salyers' instructions, and I conclude he was merely acting as Salyer's messenger. The only control Jacobs exercised over other employees at times relevant to this proceeding was that derived from his superior experiences. This does not make him a statutory supervisor.[10] A careful reading of the entire record convinces me that Respondent has not shown by reasonable modicum of credible evidence that Jacobs at the time of his discharge possessed any of the supervisory authorities enumerated in the Act. Respondent therefore has not carried its burden of proving Jacobs was a supervisor at relevant times.

The answers filed by Respondent in response to the complaint in Case 9-CA-20594 and the consolidated amended complaint assert that Jacobs was discharged due to poor work performance and misappropriation of Respondent's funds. Respondent's posttrial brief does not mention the alleged misappropriation, but argues poor performance as the cause for Jacobs' selection. Sharpe's file memo, drafted the evening of November 7 and dated November 8, 1983, notes that he and Salyers concurred in firing Jacobs. He recites poor productivity of second shift under Jacobs, unsatisfactory dress when on field maintenance work, "verbal reports" that Jacobs was "mouthing off" to Salyers, and "reports" that Jacobs used poor judgment when sorting scrap. He also notes that Jacobs took 8 hours on November 7 to do an hour's work of making small dividers, "on another recent occasion" he and another employee took 6 hours each to build two wooden cart frames (although another man by himself built three large crates with hinged doors in 6 hours.) After he discharged Jacobs on December 8, Salyers noted the following on the bottom of Sharpe's memo to file:

> The above employee was informed by undersigned on November 8, 1983 he was being terminated for his poor unacceptable quality of work, failure to attain production goals, poor and discourteous attitude in general toward co-workers and employer. Also, a payroll deduction had been made in his final check for his mis-use of Company Travel Funds.

Salyers' note of misuse of company funds relates to Jacobs' purchase of a radio from his travel allowance while in Philadelphia doing field maintenance. Jacobs credibly testified that his personal radio, which he carried with him in the van, fell and broke. He could not get a motel room that night so he slept in the van and used $60 of his expense money to buy the radio. He reported the purchase to Sharpe when he returned, presented Sharpe with the receipt, and offered to pay for the radio. Sharpe merely nodded his head and never thereafter mentioned the radio purchase.[11] Sharpe concedes the decision to discharge was made without reference to the purchase of the radio. Salyers agrees that he first learned of the radio purchase when he had Jacobs' final check prepared on November 8, 1983. There is no evidence of any other incident that might possibly be construed as misappropriation. Accordingly, I find that misappropriation of Respondent's funds was not a reason for Jacobs' discharge as Respondent's answers contend. The positing of a false motive for discharge warrants an inference there is an unlawful motive the employer wishes to conceal.[12] My decision with respect to Jacobs does not rest on this inference alone but it is entitled to some weight and has been considered along with the other relevant factors discussed in this decision.

Sharpe says Jacobs was discharged because his performance had started deteriorating while he was on the second shift, continued to deteriorate, until it reached the point on November 7, 1983, that Jacobs took a day to do an hour's work. When pressed for particulars, Sharpe conceded that a major production problem on the second shift was paint failure caused by bad paint. This obviously cannot be blamed on Jacobs. Sharpe further explained that, although Jacobs had trouble supervising and made mistakes in judgment, "That's common. We all do and that's part of the growing process." Although agreeing that Jacobs was out of town several times doing field maintenance work in October, Sharpe asserts that during that month Jacobs took too much time doing his portion of the work on some night cabinets. The final incident which led to Jacobs' discharge was, testifies Sharpe, that Sharpe thinks Jacobs took all day on November 7 to produce only seven or eight small drawer dividers, an hour's work. Sharpe is not sure how many dividers were produced. In view of Sharpe's uncertainty and Jacobs' positive testimony on the matter, I credit Jacobs that on November 7 he produced 24 dividers and also gave assistance to other employees in their work. Salyers gave no testimony on this matter. I further credit Jacobs that neither Sharpe nor Salyers ever complained about his work or attitude or told him his work performance needed improvement. Both Sharpe and Salyers contented themselves with vague assertions that they had spoken to Jacobs generally about overall plant and employee productivity.

Salyers testified that Jacobs was fired because of his declining leadership ability on the first shift, attitude, and inability to produce products in an orderly fashion. Salyers indeed told Jacobs that his discharge was caused by a dropoff in his work and attitude. He, like Sharpe, offered little in the way of particulars. As far as the claim of declining leadership ability on the first shift, there is no probative evidence to support the conclusion. The same is true of the "attitude" criticism. Neither Salyers

[10] Rich's Precision Foundry, 250 NLRB 1317, 1320 (1980), enfd. 667 F.2d 613 (7th Cir. 1981).

[11] I do not credit Sharpe, who concedes Jacobs told him of the purchase, that he told Jacobs to set up a weekly deduction schedule with Sharpe's father, and became angered when he told his father to make up Jacobs' final check and only then found Jacobs had made no such payments. Jacobs was more believable. Sharpe's father did not testify.

[12] Shattuck Denn Mining Corp. v. NLRB, 362 F.2d 466, 470 (9th Cir. 1966).

nor Sharpe give any evidence to support the bare conclusions of Sharpe's November 8 memo insofar as it notes Jacobs dressed unsatisfactorily, "mouthed off" to Salyers, or used poor judgment when sorting scrap. Salyers, like Sharpe, does advert to the amount of time Jacobs spent working on night cabinets, even though conceding they were not rush jobs, and says he is sure other employees worked with Jacobs on these cabinets but "can't recollect" whether they did or not. Salyers adds that Jacobs failed to carry out his instructions on occasion, but cites no specific occasion.

Jacobs relates that he did indeed spend 14 to 16 days on the cabinets, and that this was due in large part to faulty instructions from Salyers. Salyers does not deny this claim and it is credited. Jacobs also credibly relates he finished the cabinets by himself except for the painting.

Mark Cox

According to Sharpe, Mark Cox was selected for layoff because all Cox wanted to do was shear and break work, wanted help on that work, and had no interest in performing other assembly functions even though he did so without protest. Sharpe's impression of lack of interest in duties other than shear and break was garnered from his observation that Cox took a long time and was lackadaisical when on the other duties. He adds that the problem of getting Cox to perform other functions was affecting Erwin's abilities as a supervisor because Cox always wanted a helper when shearing and breaking. This confused proffer simply does not make sense. Salyers testified that he chose Cox as one to be eliminated because Erwin had said that Cox did not want to do anything other than shear and break because that is what Cox excelled in. This testimony was then amended by Salyers on cross-examination when he explained that Erwin actually said that Cox liked to do shear and break best and would excel at that. Salyers added that he did not from that statement of Erwin arrive at the conclusion Cox did not want to do anything else but shear and break, nor was he of that opinion. Salyers agrees Cox would and did do other work.

Erwin relates that Cox was hired as a fabricator which usually includes only shear and break work. He continues that Cox occasionally did assembly work, and was not skilled at work other than shear and break, and it was sometimes a problem getting Cox to perform other functions. Erwin gives no details of any problems encountered with assigning Cox to other functions.

Cox, who gave direct answers without hesitation and impressed me as a credible witness, agrees that his primary job was shearing and breaking, and that he did other work once or twice a week as needed and instructed by Erwin. He never refused to do other work, or stated he would only do shear and break work. He never received any complaints or warnings, written or oral, from supervision about his work and, on October 13, 1983, was given a 30-cent pay raise and a $50 bonus by Sharpe who told Cox the reasons were that Cox had done good work on some cabinets and Sharpe liked the way he was working. The work referred to by Sharpe was apparently shear and break work.

Salyers laid Cox off about 3:15 p.m. on November 8, 1983, told Cox his work was good, and gave as a reason for the layoff the transfer of work to Wolf Welding.

Robert D. Fox Jr.

When Robert D. Fox Jr. was discharged on November 8, Salyers told him that he was fired because his work was unsatisfactory. Fox was told on hire that there was a 90-day probationary period. He was still within that period at the time of his discharge. In addition to general statements that Fox was not a satisfactory fabricator, Sharpe and Salyers focus on two specific incidents. The first involved a failure by Fox, in spite of explicit instructions, to use the proper clamps and jigs in performing welding fabrication, with the result that the finished products, carts, were warped and unsatisfactory. Fox concedes some carts he worked on within a day or two of his discharge were crooked, but claims this was due to a crooked jig. In the face of the testimony of Salyers, Erwin, and employee Keith Hudson to the effect that the crooked carts were the result of Fox's failure to follow instructions and due entirely to his poor work, I do not credit Fox's contention that the problem was due to a defective jig, and therefore find his work was indeed unsatisfactory on this occasion. In so finding I am mindful that he received a 15-cent raise on October 13 for good work, but this does not mean his work in the first week in November was satisfactory. The second incident Respondent adverts to occurred on November 8 when Fox did unacceptable aluminum welding work. Fox admits this work was unsatisfactory, but avers he told Respondent he could not do aluminum welding. There is no need to resolve this issue because it occurred on November 8, after the decision to discharge Fox had already been reached on November 7, and played no part in that decision.

Conclusions

Respondent's asserted reasons for a reduction of employees on November 8, 1983, and the selection of Jacobs and Cox lose persuasive effect because the evidence offered to support the reasons is singularly unconvincing and sometimes refutes the very reason it is introduced to support. Much of the supporting testimony offered by Respondent is given to sweeping generalization, displays no objective basis, and is the product of circumlocution. Some of Respondent's evidence reveals the pretextual nature of reasons advanced (e.g., the alleged misuse of company funds by Jacobs.) In short, Respondent's defenses are not convincing, and Respondent has failed to demonstrate that it would have taken the same action in the absence of union organizing activity. See Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980). Accordingly, I find the terminations of Jacobs and Cox were designed to discourage union membership and activity, and violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

With respect to Robert Fox, Respondent has demonstrated that he was a probationary employee whose work was unsatisfactory. It therefore cannot be said that Fox might not have been discharged for cause in the absence of union activity. This does not, however, answer the question of whether he would have been discharged in any case. The matter is not entirely free from doubt, but I am persuaded that the frailty of Respondent's reasons for having any reduction of force on November 8, 1983, and its efforts at trial to suggest that Fox's poor aluminum welding, which was performed after the decision was made to discharge, was a reason for his discharge requires a conclusion that Respondent was in Fox's case, as well as the cases of Jacobs and Cox, consciously erecting pretextual defenses. As I have noted above, an inference of unlawful motivation is permissible in such circumstances. Moreover, the proffer of pretexts seriously diminishes the probative weight of evidence favorable to Respondent. On the evidence before me Respondent has not shown that it would have discharged Fox on November 8, 1983, if there had been no threat of union activity present, and has therefore not rebutted the General Counsel's prima facie case. His discharge is found to be in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent, Health Care Logistics, Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By discharging Jon B. Jacobs, Mark A. Cox, and Robert D. Fox Jr. in order to discourage union activity and union membership, the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

4. The unfair labor practices set forth above are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

In addition to the usual cease-and-desist order and notice posting, my recommended Order will require Respondent to offer Jon B. Jacobs, Mark A. Cox, and Robert D. Fox Jr. unconditional reinstatement to former jobs, or substantially equivalent positions if their former jobs no longer exist, and make them whole for all wages lost as a result of their unlawful discharge. Said backpay and interest thereon is to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[13] There was some indication at hearing that Respondent no longer manufactures, and that there may be a successor liable to remedy the unfair labor practices found. This is a matter for compliance proceedings if the Board agrees the law has been violated in this case. I shall also recommend that Respondent be ordered to remove from its files any reference to the terminations of Jon B. Jacobs, Mark A. Cox, and Robert D. Fox Jr. on November 8, 1983, and notify them in writing that this has been done and that evidence of these unlawful actions will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against them.

[13] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[14]

ORDER

The Respondent, Health Care Logistics, Inc., Circleville, Ohio, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Discouraging union activity or membership in the Union, or any other labor organization, by discharging or otherwise discriminating in any manner with respect to their tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment.

(b)In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer to Jon B. Jacobs, Mark A. Cox, and Robert D. Fox Jr. immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights or privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered by reason of their discriminatory discharge, in the manner set forth in the section of this decision entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Remove from its files any reference to the terminations of Jon B. Jacobs, Mark A. Cox, and Robert D. Fox Jr., on November 8, 1983, and notify them in writing that this has been done and that evidence of these unlawful actions will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against them.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its Circleville, Ohio offices and facilities copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[15] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

[14] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[15] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons International Association, Local Union 744, AFL–CIO (Chamac Inc.) and Dennis O. Jones. Case 21–CB–8734

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND HUNTER

On 31 July 1984 Administrative Law Judge Earldean V. S. Robbins issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief and the General Counsel filed a brief in response.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] and to adopt the recommended Order as modified and set forth in full below.[3]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons International Association, Local Union 744, AFL–CIO, San Diego, California, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Maintaining in its governing documents the restrictions on resignations set forth in bylaw 47(d) and in the corresponding provision of the Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons International Association's constitution.

(b) Restraining or coercing Dennis O. Jones, Orvel Jones, or any other employee who has resigned from, and is no longer a member of, the Respondent in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, by fining them because of their post-resignation conduct in refusing to leave a jobsite when requested to do so by the Respondent's business agent.

(c) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Expunge from its governing documents the restrictions on resignations set forth in bylaw 47(d) and in the corresponding provision of the Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons International Association's constitution.

(b) Rescind the fines levied against Dennis O. Jones and Orvel Jones because they refused to leave a jobsite when requested to do so by the Respondent's business agent; expunge from its records any reference to such fines and all disciplinary actions which led thereto and notify them in writing that this has been done; and refund any money paid to the Respondent as a result of such fines, plus interest.

(c) Post at its business office and meeting halls copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[4] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 21, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

---

[1] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] We agree with the judge's finding that, although the Respondent had not notified its International Association of its receipt of Dennis and Orvel Jones' resignations prior to their refusal of the Respondent's order to leave the jobsite of a nonsignatory employer, this notification was not a precondition under the Respondent's bylaws to perfecting their resignations. We also agree with the judge's conclusion that the Respondent accordingly violated Sec. 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by fining Dennis and Orvel Jones for refusing its order after they had effectively resigned from the Respondent's membership. We find, moreover, that the restrictions on resignations in the Respondent's bylaws are invalid, and that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(b)(1)(A) by imposing fines on Dennis and Orvel Jones pursuant to such provisions. See Machinists Local 1414 (Neufeld Porsche-Audi), 270 NLRB 1330 (1984).

For the reasons stated in his dissenting opinion in Neufeld Porsche, supra, Member Zimmerman agrees that Sec. 47(d) of Respondent's bylaws, which restricts resignations only to union members who have been on the rolls for 5 years, constitutes an unreasonable restriction on a member's right to resign and violates Sec. 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

[3] The order is modified to require the Respondent to notify Dennis and Orvel Jones, in writing, that it has rescinded its fines against them and that it has expunged from its records evidence of its unlawful discipline of them. It is also modified to require the Respondent to expunge the restrictions on resignations set forth in bylaw 47(d) of its governing documents. See Neufeld Porsche-Audi, supra.

[4] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO MEMBERS
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

> To organize
>
> To form, join, or assist any union
>
> To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
>
> To act together for other mutual aid or protection
>
> To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

Accordingly, we give you these assurances.

WE WILL NOT restrain or coerce Dennis O. Jones, Orvel Jones, or any other employee who has resigned from, and is no longer a member of, the Union, in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, by fining them because of their postresignation conduct in refusing to leave a jobsite when requested to do so by our business agent.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner restrain or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL rescind the fines levied against Dennis O. Jones and Orvel Jones because they refused to leave a jobsite when requested to do so by our business agent, and expunge from our records any reference to such fines and all disciplinary actions which led thereto and notify them in writing that this has been done; and WE WILL refund any money paid to us as a result of such fines, plus interest.

WE WILL expunge from our governing documents the restrictions on resignations set forth in bylaw 47(d) and in the corresponding provision of the Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons International Association's constitution.

MASONS INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION LOCAL UNION 744, AFL–CIO

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

EARLDEAN V. S. ROBBINS, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was heard before me in San Diego, California on May 3, 1984. The charge was filed by Dennis O. Jones, an individual, on January 18, 1984, and served on Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons International Association, Local Union 744, AFL–CIO (Respondent), on January 19, 1984. The complaint, which issued on February 8, 1984, alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the National Labor Relations Act (the Act). The basic issue herein is whether Respondent imposed court-collectible fines on employees Dennis Jones and Orvel Jones for refusing Respondent's instructions to leave a jobsite where they were working for a nonsignatory contractor at a time when both Dennis Jones and Orvel Jones had tendered valid resignations from Respondent.

On the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the parties, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

At all times material herein, Chamac Inc. (the Employer) has been a California corporation engaged in business as a general building contractor in Southern California. In the normal course and conduct of its business operations, during the 12-month period preceding the issuance of the complaint herein, the Employer performed services valued in excess of $50,000 directly to customers located outside the State of California and, during that same period, purchased and received goods valued in excess of $50,000 directly from suppliers located within the State of California, each of which suppliers, in turn, purchased and received those same goods directly from suppliers located outside the State of California.

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that the Employer is now, and at all times material herein has been, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that Respondent is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

The facts herein are undisputed. Dennis and Orvel Jones were employed by Chamac at the time that Chamac's most recent agreement with Respondent expired in mid-June 1983.[1] They continued to work for Chamac and, after consulting with an attorney, submitted individual written resignations from the Union. The resignations, which were delivered to the Union office on June 21 by Bruce St. John, state:

> I hereby resign from your union effective 6-21-, 1983, or the earliest legally-permissible date. However, I will continue to pay all regular dues and fees.

[1] Unless otherwise indicated, all dates herein will be in 1983.

St. John testified, without contradiction, that he gave the completed resignation forms of both Dennis and Orvel Jones to the man behind the counter at the union office, whereupon the man behind the counter showed him a paper which St. John read and which seemed to indicate that the resignations submitted by the Joneses were not valid. St. John asked for a copy of the paper, but was told he could not have one. He then told Dennis Jones, who was waiting outside, that the man behind the counter had shown him a typewritten letter which seemed to indicate that the resignations were invalid. St. John further reported that this person would not give him a copy of the letter, but said that Dennis and Orvel Jones would receive copies of it in the mail.

Later that day, Dennis Jones returned to the union office and spoke to the office clerk, Larry French. Jones said he was there in reference to the forms he had delivered to Respondent. French said, "Yes, those are invalid. They are no good." Jones asked why, and French handed him a copy of a letter. According to Jones, the letter said they could not resign from the Union unless they were members in good standing for 5 years. Jones told French that both he and his father, Orvel Jones, had been in the Union for over 5 years. French said that was not the part which pertained to them. Another portion of the letter said a member had not properly resigned until the secretary-treasurer mailed a certain form to the International and they received the form. Jones said it was their understanding that the resignations were valid and he asked French if he could keep the letter. French said no, and Jones left. Jones denies, without contradiction, that he ever received a copy of the letter he was shown by French.

On October 17, Woodrow Bailey, an officer of Respondent, came onto the Chamac jobsite where Dennis and Orvel Jones were working. According to Dennis Jones, Bailey said, "You know, I'm going to have to ask you guys to leave." Dennis Jones said, "Yes, I understand that and we can't leave. We are working for Chamac and we want to do their work." Bailey said, "Okay, as long as you understand."

On November 29, Respondent sent identical letters to Dennis and Orvel Jones, the body of which reads:

> Please be advised that on Wednesday, December 21, 1983, at 7:30 p.m., at 3909 Centre Street, San Diego, California 92103, charges preferred against you by Woodrow W. Bailey will be heard by the Executive Board of Cement Masons Local #744.
>
> Any evidence, witnesses who are members of O.P. & C.M.I.A., etc., should be presented at this time.
>
> If you should have any further questions regarding the above, please feel free to contact the undersigned.

Enclosed with each of the letters was the following excerpt from Respondent's bylaws:

> VIOLATION OF LOCAL UNION BYLAWS
>
> ART. 3. SEC. 1 When members are called off the job by the Business Agents of this Union, they shall immediately quit work without discussion and leave the job without making any disturbance.

The hearing was held as scheduled on December 21. Bailey explained the basis of the charge, that he had asked Orvel and Dennis Jones to leave the jobsite and they had refused. When the Joneses pleaded "Not guilty," one of the board members asked how could they plead not guilty if the facts were correct. Dennis Jones said it was his understanding that they did in fact resign from the Union, that they had submitted their resignations with the intention to continue to pay dues, which they had been paying, and it was his understanding that they could work a nonunion job and not be subject to being fined.

Nevertheless, fines were imposed against them and each of them was so notified by letter dated January 13, 1984, the body of which reads:

> Please be advised that the fine of $250.00 imposed on you by the Executive board of Cement Masons Local #744, has been reduced to $200.00 by the International Association. In addition to the $200.00 fine, you must also submit $40.00, which is the percentage due the International, for a total of $240.00.
>
> You are advised that you have the right to appeal or protest this fine, but you must enter such protest within 30 days that follow the registration of such fine, or until February 10, 1984. If you desire to protest, the fine must be paid to the International in full by Money Order or Certified Check, before the General Executive Board will consider any protest.
>
> You are further advised that this fine will be held in abeyance for sixty days, or until March 10, 1984, and if not paid or arrangements made to pay by that date, you will be dropped from the rolls.

The complaint alleges that by the imposition of these fines following Dennis and Orvel Jones' resignations from the Union, Respondent has violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. The Union argues that the resignations were not valid and therefore the fines were lawful. It is well established that a labor organization violates Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act when it fines or attempts to discipline an employee for conduct in which the employee engages following the employee's valid resignation from the labor organization. It is not necessary to show that the union has actually instituted a court proceeding seeking to enforce the fine. NLRB v. Textile Workers Local 1029, Granite State Joint Board, 409 U.S. 213, 217 (1972); Machinists Local 1994 (O.K. Tool Co.), 215 NLRB 651 (1974); Auto Workers Local 647 (General Electric), 197 NLRB 608 (1972); Chemical Workers Local 6-578 (Gordy's, Inc.), 238 NLRB 1227 (1978); Electrical Workers IBEW Local 2131 (Rucker Electronics), 217 NLRB 46 (1975). Further, the Board has recently held that a union may not lawfully restrict the right of its members to resign from membership. Machinists Local 1414 (Neufeld Porsche-Audi), 270 NLRB 1330 (1984).

Respondent argues, in essence, that it did not seek to restrict the right of Dennis and Orvel Jones to resign, but rather that its constitution and bylaws contain a valid rule which sets forth the method by which a member may effect his resignation from Respondent, that Orvel and Dennis Jones did not comply with this rule and therefore their resignations were not valid and, accordingly, the fines were permissible under the Act.

The provision on which Respondent relies reads as follows in both the International constitution and Respondent's bylaws:

> Section 47(d). Any member who has been on the rolls of the International Association for the period of five (5) continuous years prior to requesting right to resign, may submit resignation if paid up in all dues and assessments at the time of resigning and his Local Union may accept such resignation but must so notify the International Association on appropiate forms to be made available by the General Secretary-Treasurer.

Clearly, the restrictions as to length of membership and the payment of dues and assessments are unlawful. However, no attempts to enforce these restrictions are involved here, and essentially Respondent is arguing that a requirement that resignations be submitted to the International is permissible. It is not clear from Neufeld whether a union may enforce a reasonable rule as to the method or form of a resignation. However, even assuming arguendo that such a rule is permissible, Section 47(d) does not appear on its face to prescribe a method of effecting a resignation. Rather the rule appears to prescribe only for notification from the Local Union to the International that the Local Union has accepted the resignation.

Here, Dennis and Orvel Jones tendered their unequivocal resignations on June 21. At that point, they had done all they were required to do under Respondent's rules. Yet Respondent is contending that the resignations were not perfected because as of October 17, the day they refused to leave the jobsite on the request of a union officer, Respondent and/or its parent body had not completed the ministerial acts required by Rule 47(d). Thus even if Section 47(d) is interpreted as urged by Respondent and if a rule is permissible which provides that resignations are effective only upon submission to the International Union, the rule was not reasonably enforced as required by Scofield v. NLRB.[2] Accordingly, I find that by imposing fines on Dennis Jones and Orvel Jones, former members who had duly resigned from the Union, for refusing to leave a jobsite, where they were working for a nonsignatory contractor, when instructed to do so by Respondent's business agent, Respondent has violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Chamac is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.
2. Respondent is a labor organization within the meaning ofSection 2(5) of the Act.
3. By imposing court-collectible fines on Dennis Jones and Orvel Jones, former members who had duly resigned from Respondent, because of their postresignation conduct in refusing to leave a jobsite when requested to do so by Respondent's business agent, Respondent has committed unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.
4. The above-described unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in, and is engaging in, certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that Respondent cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes of the Act.

Having found that Respondent has unlawfully imposed fines against Dennis Jones and Orvel Jones, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to rescind the unlawful fine levied against them because they refused to leave a jobsite when requested to do so by Respondent's business agent, refund any money paid to Respondent as a result of such fines, plus interest computed in the manner prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977),[3] and expunge from its records any reference to the fines and all disciplinary actions which led thereto.

[Recommended Order omitted from publication.]

[2] In Scofield v. NLRB, 394 U.S. 423 (1969), the Supreme Court articulated a three-part test for determining when a union disciplinary rule is reasonable. A union is free to enforce a properly adopted rule that (1) reflects a legitimate union interest, (2) impairs no policy that Congress has embedded in the labor laws, and (3) is reasonably enforced against union members.

[3] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

Local 825, A, B, C, D and R, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL–CIO and George Harms Construction Co., Inc. and its wholly-owned subsidiary G. R. Roberts Construction Co., Inc. and United Steelworkers of America, Local 15024, AFL–CIO, CLC. Case 4–CD–627

14 December 1984

DECISION AND DETERMINATION OF DISPUTE

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

The charge in this 10(k) proceeding was filed 11 April 1984 by the Employer, alleging that the Respondent, Local 825, A, B, C, D, and R, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL–CIO (Operating Engineers), violated Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the National Labor Relations Act by engaging in proscribed activity with an object of forcing the Employer to assign certain work to employees it represents rather than to employees represented by United Steelworkers of America, Local 15024, AFL–CIO, CLC (Steelworkers). The hearing was held 9 August 1984 before Hearing Officer David Berger.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board affirms the hearing officer's rulings, finding them free from prejudicial error. On the entire record, the Board makes the following findings.

I. JURISDICTION

The Company, George Harms Construction Company, Inc. and its wholly-owned subsidiary, G. R. Roberts Construction Company, Inc., a New Jersey corporation, is engaged in heavy and highway construction, from its P.O. Box 817, Farmingdale, New Jersey 07727 location. During the 12-month period prior to the hearing, the Employer's gross volume of business was in excess of $500,000 and it purchased and received supplies valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points located outside the State of New Jersey. The parties stipulate, and we find, that the Employer is engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and that the Operating Engineers and Steelworkers are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE DISPUTE

A. Background and Facts of Dispute

In 1983 the Employer was low bidder on a contract to replace the Bridgeboro Bridge on Route 130 which connects Delran Township with Delanco and Willingboro Townships. The contract is with the New Jersey Department of Transportation and the project is funded with both Federal and state funds.

Work began on the project in November 1983 and the target date for completion is December 1986. In addition to building a new bridge, the Employer is involved in road construction at either end of the bridge, including filling, grading, paving, and curb work. The Employer hired labor to do the work on its project through two wholly owned subsidiaries, G. R. Roberts Construction Company, Inc. (a party to this proceeding), and George Harms Excavating Corporation. The Employer employed employees represented by the Steelworkers to perform various tasks, including the operation of heavy and power-driven equipment. There were approximately 60 pieces of such equipment on the jobsite, including cranes, bulldozers, graders, bucket loaders, compaction equipment loaders, and a concrete plant.

According to testimony of the Employer's president George Harms in late September 1983 he met with Pat Campbell and Kenneth White, business manager and business agent, respectively, for the Operating Engineers. Campbell told Harms that he wanted to negotiate a contract for the Operating Engineers to operate heavy and power-driven equipment on the instant project. Harms replied that he could not negotiate such a contract with the Operating Engineers because he (i.e., the Employer) already had a contract with the Steelworkers covering the work in dispute. According to Harms, Campbell asserted that the Employer's contract with the Steelworkers was "no longer any good," because large bridge projects such as the instant one were "his [i.e., Campbell's] ballgame and we [i.e., Employer] had to employ his people to run the equipment." Harms offered to employ a couple of operating engineers. Campbell declared that to be "unacceptable." Instead, Campbell suggested that he would take the Employer's steelworkers into the Operating Engineers, and then the Employer could negotiate a contract with the Operating Engineers. Harms declined, and the meeting ended.

Work began on the project shortly thereafter, in November 1983, with the Employer's employees represented by the Steelworkers performing the work in dispute.

During the first week of January 1984[1] Campbell and White came to the jobsite. Campbell again suggested that Harms negotiate a contract with the Operating Engineers. Harms again offered to hire a couple of employees represented by the Operating Engineers, but Campbell indicated that that was not an adequate solution. Campbell advised Harms to do what Harms thought he should do and that Campbell in turn would "do what he had to do."

[1] Unless otherwise indicated, all dates are in 1984.

The following week, White came to the jobsite with a photographer who took pictures of employees' personal vehicles as well as pictures of construction equipment at the site.

There was no further contact between the Employer and the Operating Engineers until April. According to Harms, rumors were circulating on 5 April that there was to be a "mass demonstration" on Saturday, 7 April, at the jobsite. On 7 April there was a demonstration of 400 to 500 people picketing the site. The picket signs read:

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC EMPLOYEES OF
GEO. HARMS CONST. CO. INC.
OPERATING POWER DRIVEN CONSTRUCTION EQUIPMENT AT THIS JOB SITE ARE RECEIVING LESS THAN LOCAL 825's AREA
STANDARD WAGES AND CONDITIONS
WE HAVE NO DISPUTE WITH ANY OTHER
EMPLOYER AT THIS SITE
LOCAL 825, A-B-C-D&R
INTERNATIONAL UNION OF OPERATING ENGINEERS
AFL-CIO

The Employer immediately obtained a court order limiting the number of pickets to 30. From 7 April onward, there was daily picketing of the jobsite. As a result of the picketing a number of the Employer's suppliers refused to make deliveries, delaying work on the project.

On 11 April the Employer filed an unfair labor practice charge against the Operating Engineers, alleging that the picketing was in violation of Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act. On 23 April the Regional Director for Region 4 sought a temporary injunction against the picketing under Section 10(l) of the Act in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. On 3 May, in a letter to the Regional Director, the Operating Engineers "specifically disclaim[ed] any and all interest in" the work in dispute. Subsequently, the Operating Engineers and the Regional Director entered into a consent decree of the Federal district court, under the terms of which the Operating Engineers were enjoined from picketing the jobsite for a period of 14 days, from 5 through 19 May.

On 21 May the Operating Engineers resumed picketing at the jobsite with the same signs that had been used prior to the hiatus. On 6 July the Regional Director filed a motion for further injunctive relief under Section 10(l) of the Act. On 16 July the court granted the Regional Director's motion, and issued an order enjoining the Operating Engineers from engaging in picketing the jobsite for a period of 30 days, from 16 July through 16 August.[2]

On 23 July in another letter to the Regional Director, the Operating Engineers called the Regional Director's attention to its earlier, 3 May, specific disclaimer of interest in the work in dispute, asserted that there was therefore no controversy over the assignment of the work in dispute, and requested that the hearing in the instant case be "dismissed." The Operating Engineers' request was not granted.

B. Work in Dispute

The disputed work involves the operation of heavy and power-driven equipment for George Harms Construction Company, Inc. and its wholly-owned subsidiary G. R. Roberts Construction Company, Inc., at the Bridgeboro Bridge construction site on Route 130 in Willingboro, Delran, and Delanco Townships, New Jersey.

C. Contentions of the Parties

None of the parties to this proceeding filed briefs with the Board. However, statements of the parties' positions were made at the hearing.

The Employer contends that a violation of Section 8(b)(4)(D) has been committed, that there is a dispute over the above-described work, and that the Operating Engineers' disclaimer is a hollow disclaimer. The Employer contends further that the work should be assigned to the employees represented by the Steelworkers, and that its collective-bargaining agreement with the Steelworkers, company preference and past practice, and economy and efficiency of operation all favor that result.

As seen, prior to the hearing the Operating Engineers had specifically disclaimed any interest in the work in dispute. At the start of the 9 August hearing, the attorney for the Operating Engineers stated that "We specifically, and unequivocally disclaim any interest" in the work in dispute. The Operating Engineers steadfastly adhered to that disclaimer during the hearing. The Operating Engineers argued that its picketing was at all times permissible "area standards" picketing, and that it at no time had an unlawful object of forcing the Employer to assign the work in dispute to employees represented by the Operating Engineers rather than to the Employer's employees represented by the Steelworkers. In the alternative, the Operating Engineers argued that the initial 14-day hiatus in picketing, from 5 through 19 May, and the 16 July through 16 August hiatus in picketing in effect at the time of the 9 August hearing, brought on by the court injunction, "wiped the slate clean" of any arguably unlawful aspects of its picketing before and after the first hiatus; that in the absence of any evidence of potentially unlawful conduct on its part subsequent to the start of the 30-day hiatus in picketing on 16 July, there was no reason for conducting the hearing and it should be adjourned.

[2] The hearing in this case closed on 9 August, at which time the 30-day injunction was still in effect.

The Operating Engineers' request for adjournment of the hearing was not granted. Upon completion of preliminary matters and statements of position, the attorney for the Operating Engineers, consistent with his position as summarized above, voiced a standing objection in advance to the introduction of any evidence about events prior to 16 July. Following the hearing officer's overruling of that objection, the attorney for the Operating Engineers left the hearing room and remained away for the duration of the hearing.

With regard to the assignment of the work in dispute, the Steelworkers asserted at the hearing that they agreed completely with the position taken by the Employer.

D. Applicability of the Statute

Before the Board may proceed with a determination of a dispute pursuant to Section 10(k) of the Act, it must be satisfied that: (1) there is reasonable cause to believe that Section 8(b)(4)(D) has been violated, and (2) there is no agreed-upon method for the voluntary resolution of the dispute.

With respect to (1) above, the record establishes that in September 1983 and again in January 1984, before the start of its alleged area standards picketing in April 1984, the Operating Engineers demanded that the disputed work be assigned to employees it represented, rather than to employees represented by the Steelworkers. On 7 April the Operating Engineers began picketing the jobsite and several suppliers refrained from making deliveries. As noted above the Operating Engineers later stopped picketing for 14 days pursuant to a consent decree and sent a letter to the Regional Director disclaiming the disputed work. After the 14-day hiatus they began picketing again carrying the same signs as they had carried prior to the hiatus.

The Board in a 10(k) proceeding is only required to determine that reasonable cause exists to believe that Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act has been violated. Here, the Operating Engineers made unequivocal demands for the work in dispute in September 1983 and again in January 1984. Although the Operating Engineers subsequently disclaimed the work in dispute at the time of its first hiatus in picketing pursuant to the May consent decree, and again disclaimed the work in dispute at the time of its second hiatus in picketing pursuant to the July court injunction, these disclaimers do not per se "wipe the slate clean" of the evidence of an unlawful object shown by the earlier demands for the work in dispute. Moreover, the validity of the Operating Engineers' asserted area standards picketing is undermined by the fact that it made no attempt whatsoever to determine the accuracy of its claim that the Employer was paying less than area standard wages. Indeed, had the Operating Engineers simply inquired, it would have found out that, in view of the combined Federal and state funding of the instant project, the Employer was required by both Federal and state statute to pay its employees on the project the prevailing area standard wages and benefits—which, as it turns out, are no less than the wages and benefits that the Operating Engineers itself would receive for doing the work in dispute.[3] There is no evidence that the Employer failed at any time to pay the required area standard wages—a fact which the Operating Engineers would have learned had it asked prior to starting, or at any time during, its alleged area standards picketing.

In consideration of the above circumstances, we find reasonable cause to believe that the Operating Engineers' alleged area standards picketing was pretextual in nature, designed to mask an unlawful object of obtaining the work in dispute for its members, as evidenced by the demands for that work made by the Operating Engineers prior to the onset of its alleged area standards picketing. In this regard, we find that the Operating Engineers' initial 3 May disclaimer of the work in dispute was tainted by what we have reason to believe was subsequent pretextual area standards picketing following the first hiatus, and that the validity of the Operating Engineers subsequent disclaimers on 23 July and again at the hearing are materially undermined by the apparent invalidity of the initial disclaimer.

[3] The Employer's president George Harms testified that the New Jersey prevailing wage law as well as the Federal Davis-Bacon Act applied to the wages it paid on the instant project. According to Harms, the prevailing wages and benefits paid pursuant to the state statute were the local union wage rates, i.e., in this case, the Operating Engineers' wage and benefit rates. Also according to Harms, the New Jersey prevailing wage rate on this project was higher than the wage rate that would have been required under the Davis-Bacon Act.

In sum, we find there is reasonable cause to believe that Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act has been violated and that the Operating Engineers continues to claim the work in dispute.

With respect to an agreed-on method for the voluntary resolution of the dispute, there is no evidence in the record and no party otherwise contends that such a method binding on all parties exists for the voluntary resolution of this dispute. We therefore find that the dispute is properly before the Board for determination.

E. Merits of the Dispute

Section 10(k) requires the Board to make an affirmative award of disputed work after considering various factors. NLRB v. Electric Workers IBEW Local 1212 (Columbia Broadcasting), 364 U.S. 573 (1961). The Board has held that its determination in a jurisdictional dispute is an act of judgment based on common sense and experience, reached by balancing the factors involved in a particular case. Machinists Lodge 1743 (J. A. Jones Construction), 135 NLRB 1402 (1962).

The following factors are relevant in making the determination of this dispute.

1. Certification and collective-bargaining agreement

There is no evidence that either of the labor organizations concerned herein has been certified by the Board as the collective-bargaining representative for a unit of the Employer's employees.

G. R. Roberts Construction Company, Inc., the wholly-owned subsidiary of the Employer responsible for performance of the work in dispute, has had a collective-bargaining agreement with the Steelworkers for about 12 years. The most recent agreement covers the period from 1 January 1982 to 31 December 1984. The agreement covers all persons employed by G. R. Roberts in the performance of construction work including employees who operate heavy and power-driven equipment.

The Employer has no collective-bargaining agreement with the Operating Engineers. Accordingly, while there are no certifications which would favor award of the work to employees represented by either labor organization, the collective-bargaining agreement between the Employer and the Steelworkers favors an award of the disputed work to employees represented by the Steelworkers.

2. Company preference and past practice

The Employer's president Harms testified that during the past 4 years the Employer has completed three similar bridges. All three involved the same kind of work as the Bridgeboro Bridge including the operation of heavy and power-driven equipment. On these and other construction projects over many years, the Employer has employed employees represented by the Steelworkers to operate the heavy and power-driven equipment. Harms testified that the Employer has been fully satisfied with the work performed by employees represented by the Steelworkers, that they are efficient, multiskilled, and "get the work done" and the Employer prefers they be assigned the work in dispute. Accordingly, we find that company preference and past practice favor award of the work to employees represented by the Steelworkers.

3. Area and industry practice

The record does not establish the existence of a particular area or industry practice of assigning the work in dispute to employees represented by either the Steelworkers or Operating Eningeers. According to Harms, employees represented by the Operating Engineers as well as employees represented by the Steelworkers operate heavy and power-driven equipment in the area. Accordingly, this factor does not contribute to the determination of the present dispute.

4. Relative skills

Harms testified that its employees represented by the Steelworkers have operated heavy and power-driven equipment in a satisfactory manner, and that their skills and abilities are excellent. However, we also note that, according to Harms, employees represented by the Operating Engineers also operate heavy and power- driven equipment in the local area. Accordingly, it is reasonable to infer that employees represented by the Operating Engineers also possess the requisite skills to perform the work in dispute in a satisfactory manner. Accordingly, we find that the factor of relative skills does not favor the award of the work in dispute to either Union.

5. Economy and efficiency of operations

The Employer asserts that working with employees represented by the Steelworkers is more efficient and economical. However, the Employer presented no basis for this belief. Accordingly, the Employer's view is considered in relation to Employer preference. As to efficiency and economy, there is nothing in the record that indicates this factor favors award of the work in dispute to employees represented by either Union.

Conclusions

After considering all the relevant factors, we conclude that employees represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 15024, AFL–CIO, CLC are entitled to perform the work in dispute. We reach this conclusion relying on the collective-bargaining agreement and the Employer's preference and past practice. In making this determination, we are awarding the work to employees represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 15024, AFL–CIO, CLC not to that Union or its members. The determination is limited to the controversy that gave rise to this proceeding.

DETERMINATION OF DISPUTE

The National Labor Relations Board makes the following Determination of Dispute.

1. Employees of the George Harms Construction Company, Inc. and its wholly-owned subsidiary G. R. Roberts Construction Company, Inc. represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 15024, AFL–CIO, CLC are entitled to perform the operation of heavy and power-driven equipment for George Harms Construction Company, Inc. and its wholly-owned subsidiary G. R. Roberts Construction Company, Inc. at the Bridgeboro Bridge construction site on Route 130 in Willingboro, Delran, and Delanco Townships, New Jersey.

2. Local 825, A, B, C, D, and R, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL–CIO is not entitled by means proscribed by Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act to force George Harms Construction Company, Inc. and its wholly-owned subsidiary G. R. Roberts Construction Company, Inc. to assign the disputed work to employees represented by it.

3. Within 10 days from this date, Local 825, A, B, C, D and R, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL–CIO shall notify the Regional Director for Region 4 in writing whether it will refrain from forcing the Employer, by means proscribed by Section 8(b)(4)(D), to assign the disputed work in a manner inconsistent with this determination.

Kut-Kwick Corporation and Mark B. McCullum. Case 10–CA–19484(E)

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

On 4 June 1984 Administrative Law Judge Hutton S. Brandon issued the attached supplemental decision on application for attorney's fees and expenses under the Equal Access to Justice Act (EAJA). The Applicant, Kut-Kwick Corporation, filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions[1] and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Applicant, Kut-Kwick Corporation, Brunswick, Georgia, for an award under the Equal Access to Justice Act is dismissed.

[1] The Applicant excepts to the judge's failure to specifically rule on its "Request for Non-Production of Certain Information." On 13 March 1984 the General Counsel filed a motion to dismiss based in part on the Applicant's failure to furnish the net worth of the individual majority shareholder of its parent corporation. On 23 March 1984 the Applicant, in response to the motion, contended that the contested information need not be produced as it was irrelevant to its application and in contravention of the Board's Rules and Regulations.

On 28 March 1984 the judge denied the General Counsel's motion to dismiss but specifically directed the Applicant to provide the contested information. Rather than provide the information, however, the Applicant filed with the judge a "Request for Non-Production of Certain Information," reiterating its contention that it should not be required to produce the information. The judge dismissed the application on the basis of the filing deficiency without ruling on the Applicant's motion.

We find that the judge committed no prejudicial error in dismissing the application before ruling on the Applicant's motion. The judge on 28 March 1984 unequivocally directed the Applicant to submit the contested information after considering the Applicant's contention that it was not required to do so. The judge was not required to rule on this issue a second time before issuing his decision. It is the Applicant's burden to comply with the EAJA filing requirements, and its attempt to unduly delay this proceeding contravenes the Board policy of disposing of fee proceedings with dispatch and minimum cost.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

(Equal Access to Justice Act)

HUTTON S. BRANDON, Administrative Law Judge. This is a supplemental proceeding under the Equal Access to Justice Act (EAJA) (Pub. L. 96–481; 94 Stat. 2325; 5 U.S.C. § 504), and Section 102.143 et seq. of the Board's Rules and Regulations.

Kut-Kwick Corporation, herein called Applicant, filed on February 13, 1984,[1] an application for an award of fees and expenses under EAJA seeking a total of $12,487.41 for cost in litigating a complaint issued in the underlying case on September 16, 1983. I issued a decision on January 12 (JD–(Atl)–1–84) in which I recommended that the Board issue an order dismissing the complaint. No exceptions were filed to the decision and the Board, on February 15, issued an order adopting the decision. By order dated February 23, the Board referred the application to me for appropriate action.[2]

The General Counsel, on March 13, pursuant to Section 102.15(a) of the Board's Rules, filed a motion to dismiss the application on the grounds that the application: (1) failed to set forth sufficient information to establish that Applicant meets all requirements of eligibility because it failed to specify the absence of affiliates other than those named and otherwise failed to establish the net worth of all affiliates; (2) failed to specify the category and work locations of employees as required by Sections 102.147(a) and 102.143(g); (3) failed to fully document the fees and expenses for which an award was sought; (4) improperly sought fees and expenses incurred prior to issuance of the complaint in the case; and (5) improperly included fees and expenses incurred in the filing of the application. The General Counsel asserted as further grounds for dismissal that the General Counsel's position in the underlying case was "substantially justified."

On March 23, Applicant filed a reply to the General Counsel's motion supplying in part information relative to the alleged deficiencies claimed by the General Counsel and expressing a willingness to provide even further information if directed by me. On the same date, Applicant also filed a motion to supplement its application for fees adding $1995 for further expenses.

By Order dated March 28, I granted the General Counsel's motion to dismiss to the extent of dismissing Applicant's claim for precomplaint legal fees. I denied the General Counsel's motion to dismiss in all other repects. By the same order, I granted Applicant's unopposed nonconfidential motion to withhold information from public disclosure and Applicant's motion to supplement its application. The same order directed Applicant to supply within 14 days of the order further information with respect to its net worth to specifically include the net worth of the majority stockowner of Applicant's parent company, Torco, Inc. (Torco). Finally, the order

[1] All dates are in 1984 unless otherwise stated.

[2] The application was filed subsequent to the expiration of the period for filing exceptions under the Board's Rules, but 2 days prior to the date of the Board's Order adopted, in the absence of exceptions, the recommended Order in the initial decision. In her motion to dismiss, the General Counsel noted the filing and order dates and stated she assumed the Board considered the filing as timely. However, in her answer, the General Counsel attacks the application as not filed in accordance with the Board's Rules at 20 CFR 102 "issued . . . pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 504(c)(i)." It is not clear from the memorandum accompanying her answer whether the General Counsel now contends the application was prematurely filed. In any event, the Board having accepted the original filing prior to its entry of a final order, it must have considered it timely filed. At that point in time the entry of the order was simply a ministerial act. Accordingly, and in the absence of any showing of prejudice by the General Counsel, I conclude the application herein was not untimely filed.

sua sponte extended the time for the General Counsel to file an answer in the matter to 30 days following service by Applicant on the General Counsel of the information required from the Applicant under the order.

On April 13, pursuant to the March 28 order, Applicant submitted additional information, except that Applicant took the position that the personal net worth of the majority stockholder of Applicant's parent company was "unrelated to the two companies." Further, Applicant related that such information regarding the net worth of the majority stockholder was not available to it.

On May 11, the General Counsel filed her answer contending, inter alia, that Applicant was ineligible inasmuch as Applicant had not demonstrated that its net worth, including the personal net worth of the majority stockowner of Applicant's parent corporation, fell within the standards set by the EAJA. I concur in the General Counsel's position as set forth below and find it unnecessary to treat the other issues raised in the General Counsel's answer.[3]

On May 11, the General Counsel filed her answer contending, inter alia, that Applicant was ineligible inasmuch as Applicant had not demonstrated that its net worth, including the personal net worth of the majority stockowner of Applicant's parent corporation, fell within the standards set by the EAJA. I concur in the General Counsel's position as set forth below and find it unnecessary to treat the other issues raised in the General Counsel's answer.[3]

Section 102.143(g) provides:

> The net worth and number of employees of the applicant and all of its affiliates shall be aggregated to determine eligibility. Any individual, corporation, or other entity that directly or indirectly controls or owns a majority of the voting shares or other interest of the applicant . . . will be considered an affiliate for purposes of this part, unless such treatment would be unjust and contrary to the purposes of the Equal Access to Justice Act (94 Stat. 2325) in light of the actual relationship between the affiliated entities. In addition, financial relationships of the applicant and other than those described in this paragraph may constitute special circumstances that would make an award unjust.

This rule is identical to the model rule promulgated by the Administrative Conference of the United States which explains the rule as follows:

> The final model rule, accordingly, requires aggregation of net worth . . . when an individual or entity holds a majority interest in an applicant and when an applicant holds a majority interest in another entity, unless the adjudicative officer determines that such treatment would be unjust in light of actual relationship between the affiliated entities. When an applicant owns less than 50% of an entity, we believe that the employees should not be aggregated and that inclusion of the interest itself (rather than the second entity's entire net worth) in the assets of the applicant will ordinarily be adequate to reflect the applicant's net worth. 46 FR 39200 et seq.

The rule, as explained, was applied in Glenmar Cinestate, Inc., JD–171–83, adopted in the absence of exceptions in an unpublished order of the Board dated May 24, 1983. There, Administrative Law Judge Gershuny in finding a majority stockholder in a parent corporation of an applicant to be an "affiliate" for purposes of the rule, stated (slip op., p. 3):

> The rules thus establishes two criteria relevant to the present case: first, it looks to control of majority ownership of an applicant's voting stock, rather than control of the applicant itself and, second, it looks not only to direct control of that majority interest, but to indirect control as well. As to the first element, the test is a simple one—only those owning or controlling more than 50% of the voting stock are to be considered an affiliate. As to the second element, the indirect control of that majority ownership, the test may not be as simple as the inquiry may extend to majority ownership of an entity which has a majority—and thus a controlling—interest in the applicant.

Judge Gershuny went on to find:

> On this record, application of the rule is an uncomplicated one. Farragut [corporate owner of applicant], with its 100% stock ownership, is an affiliate of applicant and Cook, [an individual], with his 51% stock ownership in Farragut, controls indirectly Farragut's ownership of Applicant's stock. Cook thus falls not only within the terms of the regulations, but within the spirit of the Act as well. As to the latter, it must be remembered that the purpose of the Act is the aid of truly small businesses, rather than those that are part of larger groups or affiliated firms. One has only to substitute the name of a multinational corporate giant for that of Cook to see the importance of including as affiliates those who indirectly (through majority ownership of a parent) control a majority interest (or greater) of the party to the administrative proceeding.

The application of Section 102.143(g) to the instant case is as clear and uncomplicatd as it was in Glenmar Cinestate, Inc. Applicant is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Torco so that Torco is clearly an affiliate. The individual owner of Torco with his 100-percent stock ownership in Torco controls indirectly Torco's ownership of Applicant. Applicant has not demonstrated how treatment of the individual owner as an affiliate is unjust or contrary to the purposes of the Act. Accordingly, I am compelled to conclude that the individual owner of Torco is an affiliate under the rule. It follows that Applicant has failed to establish its eligibility under the EAJA since its net worth statement does not include the personal net worth of its affiliate, the individual owner of Torco. Because Applicant has declined to provide information regarding the personal net worth of the individual, the application, I conclude, must be denied.

[3] Such other issues argued by the General Counsel include her claim that issuance of the underlying complaint was "substantially justified," the claim that Applicant's net worth statement is inadequate even as enlarged by Applicant's responses to my March 28 order to establish eligibility, and the claim that Applicant's fees and expenses are unreasonable and not sufficiently detailed.

[3] Such other issues argued by the General Counsel include her claim that issuance of the underlying complaint was "substantially justified," the claim that Applicant's net worth statement is inadequate even as enlarged by Applicant's responses to my March 28 order to establish eligibility, and the claim that Applicant's fees and expenses are unreasonable and not sufficiently detailed.

ORDER[4]

It is ordered and directed that the application for fees and expenses be denied.

[4] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

Harvard Folding Box Co., Inc. and Boston Local No. 600, Graphic Arts International Union, AFL–CIO, CLC. Cases 1–CA–20070 and 1–CA–20350

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

On 29 July 1983 Administrative Law Judge Mary Ellen R. Benard issued the attached decision. The General Counsel and the Respondent filed exceptions and supporting briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions[1] and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[2]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Harvard Folding Box Co., Inc., Lynn, Massachusetts, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following paragraphs for paragraph 2(a) and (b) and reletter the subsequent paragraphs.

"(a) Make unit employees whole for any losses they may have suffered as a result of the Respondent's unlawful unilateral change in its vacation pay policy, including interest thereon."

"(b) Make unit employees whole, with interest, for any losses they may have suffered as a result of the Respondent's unlawful unilateral institution of employee contributions for health insurance, including any excess health insurance costs and/or medical expenses."

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

MEMBER HUNTER, dissenting in part.

I cannot join my colleagues in adopting the judge's finding that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening to lay off employees as a result of a pending Board proceeding.

The judge, crediting the Respondent's president Ross, found that Ross stated at an employee meeting that an administrative law judge's decision in another case[1] required the reinstatement of 20 employees who had been discharged and that if the Respondent lost its appeal and had to reinstate those employees, "other people might have to leave." The judge further found, however, relying on a letter sent by the General Counsel to the Respondent listing the names of 12 unlawfully discharged employees, that the figure Ross used was inaccurate because reinstatement would be required for at most 12 employees. The judge therefore found that by exaggerating the possible adverse consequences to current employees of the pending Board proceeding, Ross' statement "reasonably tended to cause the employees to believe that their

[1] We do not adopt the judge's discussion of our decision in Associated Grocers, 253 NLRB 31 (1980), concerning its application of Sec. 10(b) of the Act. In Associated Grocers, notice of the alleged unilateral action was contained in a letter sent by the employer to hundreds of employees. 253 NLRB at 43. Under the circumstances, the administrative law judge was reluctant to conclude that the union was not on notice, either actual or constructive, of the change. The administrative law judge's decision in that case turns on its particular facts, and does not cast doubt on the well-established principles that the 10(b) period does not start to run until the charging party has notice of the events underlying the charge and that the proponent of the 10(b) defense has the burden of establishing notice. Strick Corp., 241 NLRB 210 (1979); AMCAR Division, 234 NLRB 1063 (1978).

Member Dennis finds that the unilateral change in vacation pay policy was within the 10(b) period and therefore unlawful because the Union was unaware of the change (or proposed change) before June 1982. Member Dennis finds it unnecessary to consider whether or not the announcement of the proposed change, had the Union been aware of it, would have started the 10(b) period.

The Respondent's president Ross testified on direct examination that the employees voted to investigate other insurance carriers, rather than the contrary as stated by the judge (pp. 16–17). We correct this nonmaterial and inadvertent error.

We agree with the judge that the Respondent went beyond the protection afforded predictions based on objective considerations when the Respondent's president Ross stated that Administrative Law Judge Maloney's decision required reinstatement of 20 employees and that if the Respondent had to reinstate those employees other people would have to leave. There was, as the judge found, no dispute that the Respondent would have been required to offer reinstatement to at most 12 individuals in order to comply with Administrative Law Judge Maloney's decision. Thus, Ross had no basis for his statement that Administrative Law Judge Maloney's decision required reinstatement of 20 employees. The reliance by our dissenting colleague on the General Counsel's statement that the list was not necessarily final is misplaced. That statement was obviously made so that the General Counsel would not be foreclosed should he later become aware of additional employees who were entitled to reinstatement. However, the Respondent did not present any evidence that the number exceeded 12. Further, contrary to the implication of the dissent, there were no suspended employees who would be entitled to reinstatement. Each of the suspensions was for 1 week or less and the affected employees had been returned to work. Thus Ross' comment reasonably tended to cause the employees to believe that 20 jobs were in jeopardy as a result of Board proceedings when in fact, at the most, 12 jobs were at issue. Accordingly, we adopt the judge's finding that Ross' comment violated Sec. 8(a)(1).

[2] We find merit in the General Counsel's exception that the judge failed to order an adequate make-whole remedy for the Respondent's unilateral changes in health insurance payments. The record shows that certain employees dropped out of the health plan rather than pay the rate increases instituted in 1982. Accordingly, we shall order the Respondent to make whole employees for any excess health insurance costs and/or medical expenses incurred as a result of the unilateral changes found unlawful herein. Any determinations necessitated by this remedy shall be left to appropriate compliance proceedings.

[1] Harvard Folding Box Co., Case 1–CA–17917, which was pending before the Board at the same time as the instant case.

jobs were in jeopardy . . . when such was not the case."

Contrary to the judge, I would find that Ross' statement was a reasonable prediction based on available objective facts and as such was protected by Section 8(c) of the Act. NLRB v. Gissel Packing Co., 395 U.S. 575, 618 (1969). The General Counsel's list mentioned above contained the names of 12 employees who had been discharged, as well as 16 employees who had been suspended, under the new disciplinary system which was found to be unlawful. The letter further stated, "This list is not necessarily a final listing of all suspensions and discharges." Thus, it is not at all obvious or certain that the figure of 12 reinstatements was the only accurate figure nor that Ross' mention of 20 reinstatements was necessarily an exaggeration. Moreover, as the judge generally recognized, it was not unlawful in itself for the Respondent to have predicted that if employees were reinstated in compliance with a Board order, the Respondent might be forced to lay off current employees in order to make room for the reinstatements. In these circumstances, I find that the Respondent made a reasonable prediction, based on the available facts, as to the probable consequences of events—e.g., a forthcoming Board decision—which were beyond its control. Accordingly, I would dismiss this 8(a)(1) allegation of the complaint.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

To organize

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To act together for other mutual aid or protection

To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively with Boston Local No. 600, Graphic Arts International Union, AFL–CIO, CLC as the exclusive representative of our employees in the following unit, with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment:

All production and maintenance employees, including truck drivers, employed at our Lynn, Massachusetts plant, excluding office clerical employees, sales employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in Section 2(11) of the Act.

WE WILL NOT require employees to contribute to health insurance premiums or increase the amounts employees contribute to such premiums, or institute changes in vacation pay policies or health insurance plans or any other terms or conditions of employment of employees in the above-described unit without first notifying the Union and affording it an opportunity to bargain about such changes.

WE WILL NOT exaggerate to employees the number of persons who might be reinstated pursuant to order of the National Labor Relations Board and indicate that as a result some current employees may be laid off.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL make employees whole, with interest, for any losses they may have suffered as a result of our change in the vacation pay policy.

WE WILL make employees whole, with interest, for any losses they may have suffered as a result of our unlawful unilateral institution of employee contributions for health insurance, including any excess health insurance costs and/or medical expenses.

WE WILL, on request, bargain with the Union with respect to the wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment of the employees in the unit set forth above.

HARVARD FOLDING BOX CO., INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

MARY ELLEN R. BENARD, Administative Law Judge. The original charge in Case 1–CA–20070 was filed on July 21, 1982, and amended on September 3, 1982, by Boston Local No. 600, Graphic Arts International Union, AFL–CIO, CLC (the Union) against Harvard Folding Box Co., Inc. (Respondent). On September 8, 1982, a complaint issued alleging, in substance, that Respondent engaged in certain conduct which violated Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act, that the Union is the certified representative of Respondent's employees in an appropriate bargaining unit, and that about June 1, 1982, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by modifying its vacation pay policies and the unit employees' work schedule without notifying the Union or affording it an opportunity to bargain. On October 18, 1982, the Union filed a charge in Case 1–CA–20350, as amended December 2, 1982, against Respondent, and on December 16 the Acting Regional Director for Region 1 of the National Labor Relations Board issued an order consolidating Cases, amended complaint and notice of hearing. The consolidated complaint includes the allegations of the original complaint in Case 1–CA–20070, and further alleges that Respondent additionally violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by increasing the amount employees contribute toward premiums for their group health insurance.[1] The complaint was further amended at the hearing to allege that about September 1, 1982, Respondent changed its employees' health insurance plan from a "group premium" to a "cost plus premium" plan, that about September 1, 1981, Respondent began to deduct money for health insurance premiums from employees' paychecks, and that the requirement that the employees pay a portion of their health insurance premium violated Section 8(a)(3) as well as Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Respondent has denied the commission of any unfair labor practices.

A hearing was held before me at Boston, Massachusetts, on February 23 and 24, 1983. Following the hearing the General Counsel and Respondent filed briefs, which have been considered.

On the entire record in the case and from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

Respondent is a Massachusetts corporation engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of folding boxes and related products with an office and place of business in Lynn, Massachusetts. Respondent annually, in the course and conduct of its business operations, ships from its Lynn plan goods valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. The answer admits, and I find, that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act, and I further find that it will effectuate the policies of the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

The Union was certified as collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's production and maintenance employees on September 11, 1980. Respondent thereafter refused to bargain with the Union on grounds that the certification was invalid and, consequently, on October 2, 1980, the Union filed a charge in Case 1–CA–17917 alleging that Respondent's refusal to bargain violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act and that Respondent engaged in other conduct which violated Sections 8(a)(1), (3), (4), and (5) of the Act. The Regional Director issued a complaint in that case and, subsequently, the General Counsel filed a motion for summary judgment limited to the allegations that Respondent had refused to recognize and bargain with the Union. On December 11, 1981, the Board issued its decision in Harvard Folding Box Co.,[2] granting the motion for summary judgment and ordering Respondent to recognize and bargain with the Union. It appears that Respondent did not seek court review of the Board's decision, and Respondent and the Union commenced bargaining in early 1983.

A hearing was held before Administrative Law Judge Walter H. Maloney Jr. in December 1981 on the remaining allegations of the complaint, which alleged that Respondent had made various unilateral changes in unit employees' terms and conditions of employment, as well as committing violations of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the Act, before Administrative Law Judge Walter H. Maloney Jr., in December 1981. Judge Maloney issued his decision on March 4, 1982, finding that Respondent had (1) violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by discharging employees George Madden and Robert Lewis and, additionally, violated Section 8(a)(4) of the Act by discharging Lewis; (2) violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by unilaterally granting an increase in wages, changing the terms of its attendance bonus and instituting a performance bonus, and announcing and instituting new procedures to discipline employees for tardiness and absenteeism and a new system of progressive discipline and for processing grievances, all without notifying the Union and offering it an opportunity to bargain; and (3) engaged in various other conduct which independently violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Respondent and the General Counsel filed exceptions to Judge Maloney's decision which are pending before the Board.

B. The Alleged Violations of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act

1. The alleged threat to lay off employees

Employee Keith King testified that in late May or early June 1982 he attended a meeting of all employees on his shift with various management officials, including President Melvin Ross, General Manager Mike Swartz, Production Manager James McGee, and Foreman Bill Lemmo. According to King, Ross told the employees that he had lost in court, apparently referring to the decision of Administrative Law Judge Maloney which had issued 2 to 3 months earlier,[3] and further said that he had to send letters to 40 or 41 people who had been laid off or fired telling them that they had a job if they wanted it, and that he would "have to make room for these people."

[1] The consolidated complaint alleges that the Union has been the representative of bargaining unit employees since May 1, 1980. On January 18, 1983, the complaint was further amended to allege that the Union had been the representative of these employees at all times material herein and at least from September 11, 1980, which Respondent admitted in a second amended answer dated February 7, 1983.

[2] 259 NLRB 686.

[3] In that decision, Administrative Law Judge Maloney found, inter alia, that in order to remedy Respondent's unilateral imposition of a new disciplinary system and rules, Respondent should be required to offer reinstatement to any employees who had been discharged pursuant to that system.

McGee, Swartz, and Respondent's controller, Thomas Quinn, all testified, in substance, that at that meeting Ross told the employees that a decision had issued and that Respondent was required to offer reinstatement to Madden and Lewis, and that a settlement had been reached with Madden and he would not be coming back to work, but that Respondent was offering reinstatement to Lewis. These witnesses further testified that Ross said that Respondent had been instructed to offer jobs to a number of people who were no longer working for it and that if Respondent made such offers and all those individuals accepted them, Respondent would have to make room for those employees, which might necessitate layoffs.

According to Swartz and Quinn, Ross did not specify how many individuals might be rehired.[4] However, Ross testified that at that meeting he said that Respondent was complying with the judge's decision with respect to Lewis and Madden, that the decision also required that some 20 people who had been discharged had the right to apply for reinstatement, that he did not agree with that ruling, and that the matter was still being litigated. According to Ross, he told the employees that if these individuals were reinstated there would have to be some place for them to go to work, which meant that other people might have to leave. Ross further testified that he referred specifically to the number 20 when discussing how many people might be reinstated because that was the number of employees that Respondent had told the Board had been discharged.

It is undisputed that after Administrative Law Judge Maloney's decision in Case 8–CA–17917 issued counsel for the General Counsel sent Respondent a list of employees who had been suspended or discharged pursuant to the rules and procedures which Administrative Law Judge Maloney found to be unlawful. That list included the names of 12 employees who had been discharged and 16 employees who had been suspended.[5]

There is no dispute that the list accurately reflects those employees who were suspended and/or discharged. Accordingly, the General Counsel contends that Ross exaggerated the number of employees who might have to be reinstated and consequently the number of current employees who might be laid off, and thereby unlawfully threatened employees with layoff. In support of this contention, the General Counsel relies on King's testimony that Ross referred to laying off some 40 employees, and argues that there was no legitimate reason for Ross to exaggerate the number of employees who might have to be reinstated. Respondent, on the other hand, contends that Ross merely predicted the obvious consequences of events over which he had no control, i.e., the requirement that he reinstate employees if Respondent lost its appeal before the Board, and thus his statement cannot be found unlawful.

As the Supreme Court has stated,

> . . . an employer is free to communicate to his employees any of his general views about unionism or any of his specific views about a particular union, so long as the communications do not contain a "threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit." He may even make a prediction as to the precise effects he believes unionization will have on his company. In such a case, however, the prediction must be carefully phrased on the basis of objective facts to convey an empoyer's belief as to demonstrably probable consequences beyond his control or to convey a management decision already derived at to close the plant in case of unionization. . . . If there is any implication that an employer may or may not take action solely on his own initiative for reasons unrelated to economic necessities and known only to him, the statement is no longer a reasonable prediction based on available facts but a threat of retaliation based on misrepresentation and coercion, and as such without the protection of the First Amendment.[6]

I credit Ross as to what he said at the meeting, for he seemed to testify more candidly on this issue than either the other witnesses for Respondent or King. I therefore find that Ross told the employees that he would be required to reinstate 20 former employees if Respondent lost the case. However, it is clear that even the figure Ross gave as the number of employees who might be reinstated was inaccurate, for there is no dispute that Respondent would have been required to offer reinstatement to at most 12 individuals in order to comply with Judge Maloney's decision. Had Ross correctly stated the number of employees to be reinstated if Respondent complied with the judge's decision, his comment that other employees might be laid off to make room for them could perhaps be considered as a prediction based on objective considerations beyond Respondent's control. Instead, Ross did not accurately state how many employees Respondent might eventually be required to reinstate, and he thus exaggerated to the current employees the possible adverse consequences of the pending Board proceeding. In these circumstances, I find that Respondent went beyond the protection afforded to predictions based on objective circumstances and I therefore agree with the General Counsel that Ross' comment reasonably tended to cause the employees to believe that their jobs were in jeopardy as a result of Board proceedings when such was not the case. Accordingly, I find that Respondent thereby violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

2. The alleged threat to close the plant

King testified that sometime subsequent to the meeting discussed above, he attended an employee meeting at which Ross stated that he had lost in court, that the employees would not want to pay union dues, and that he would "just as soon close the place down because of the Union." Ross denied ever having made such a comment and the other Respondent officials who testified stated that no such comment was made at any employee meetings that they attended.

[4] McGee was not asked whether Ross stated how many people Respondent would be required to reinstate.

[5] Some of the employees are counted twice because they were suspended and subsequently discharged.

[6] NLRB v. Gissel Packing Co., 395 U.S. 575, 618 (1969).

Although, as discussed below, I do not credit Ross on all issues about which he testified, I do credit his denial that he threatened to close the plant because of the Union, for his testimony about these meetings seemed candid and straightforward. Further, it is noteworthy that, although King testified that some 100 people were at the meeting, no employee except King was called to testify about what occurred there. Accordingly, I find that the General Counsel has not established by a preponderance of the credible evidence that Ross threatened to close the plant, and I shall therefore recommend that this allegation of the complaint be dismissed.

C. The Alleged Unilateral Changes in Terms and Conditions of Employment

1. Vacation pay

The parties stipulated that as of June 1981 Respondent's practice was to pay employees in June for the vacation time they had earned during the previous 12 months, and that the employees were not paid when they actually took their vacations sometime during the next 12 months. The parties further stipulated that commencing in 1982, Respondent changed this arrangement and that in 1982 employees received their vacation pay at the time they took their vacation rather than at the end of June. As an illustration of how the vacation pay policy was implemented before and after the change, Quinn credibly testified that under Respondent's prior policy, if an employee was entitled to 5 weeks of vacation sometime in the next 12 months he received 5 weeks' pay at the end of June. Under the new arrangement, if an employee took 2 weeks of vacation in July and 3 weeks in December he would receive the 2 weeks' pay in July and 3 weeks' pay in December in addition to being paid for whatever time in those months he worked.

There is no question that the employees were advised of the new policy well before it went into effect in June 1982: Quinn and Ross both credibly testified that Ross announced the change as to when vacation pay would be received at an employee meeting in June 1981, telling the employees that in the future they would be paid for their vacations when they took them and that because they were paid in June for vacations taken later some of them did not have any money when it came time for their vacations. The employees were reminded of the new policy sometime during the fall of 1981, when Respondent distributed a document entitled "Vacation Policy Guidelines" which explicitly stated "vacation pay will be paid when you take vacation. Vacation pay will not be paid as a lump sum in July." Also, Ross and Quinn further testified that when Ross distributed employees' performance bonuses at a meeting in December he noted that the plant would be closed over the Christmas and New Year's holidays and that the employees should use their performance bonuses to carry them through the period when there would be no salary because they had already received their vacation pay for the year in June. Ross reminded the employees again that under the new plan they would be able to use their vacation pay at any time, including the Christmas shutdown.

However, it is undisputed that Respondent did not notify or offer to bargain with the Union prior to announcing or implementing this change, and George Carlsen, the Union's executive vice president credibly testified that he first became aware of the change when Robert Lewis told him about it in June 1982, after his reinstatement.

The allegation that elimination of the lump sum vacation payment violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act was first made in an amended charge filed September 3, 1982. Thus, the charge was filed less than 6 months from the time the change was implemented but more than 6 months after it was announced.

a. The 10(b) issues

Section 10(b) of the Act provides "[t]hat no complaint shall issue based upon any unfair labor practice occurring more than 6 months prior to the filing of the charge with the Board." Respondent contends that the 6-month limitation period began to run in June 1981 when it announced to employees the change as to when vacation payments would be made and, thus, the allegation that the change was unlawful is barred by Section 10(b) of the Act. The General Counsel, on the other hand, contends that implementation, rather than announcement, of a unilateral change triggers the limitations period and that, in any event, the Union was unaware of the decision to change the vacation payment policy until implementation of that policy in June 1982 and, thus, Section 10(b) does not bar litigation of this allegation.

As the Supreme Court stated in Machinists Local 1424 v. NLRB, 362 U.S. 411 (1960):

> . . . due regard for the purposes of Section 10(b) requires that two different kinds of situations be distinguished. The first is one where occurrences within the 6-month limitations period in and of themselves may constitute, as a substantive matter unfair labor practices. There, earlier events may be utilized to shed light on the true character of matters ocurring within the limitations period; and for that purpose Section 10(b) ordinarily does not bar such evidentiary use of anterior events. The second situation is that where conduct occurring within the limitations period can be charged to be an unfair labor practice only through reliance on an earlier unfair labor practice, there the use of the earlier unfair labor practice is not merely "evidentiary," since it does not simply lay bare a putative current unfair labor practice. Rather, it serves to cloak with illegality that which was otherwise lawful. And where a complaint based upon that earlier event is time barred, to permit the event itself to be so used in effect results in reviving a legally defunct unfair labor practice.[7]

In the instant case, the unfair labor practice alleged is Respondent's implementation, which did not occur until June 1982, of its decision to cease its practice of making vacation payments for the entire year in June.[8] In Elmac Corp., 225 NLRB 1188 (1976), respondent put into effect a new vacation pay policy on May 9 which stated that employees must be on the active payroll as of June 30 in order to receive vacation pay for the previous year. In consequence, those employees who had gone on strike in April and were still on strike at the end of June did not receive their vacation pay. The charge was not filed until December 18 of the same year. The judge, affirmed by the Board, found that the 6-month limitation period began when the employees were entitled to receive their vacation pay (i.e., sometime after the end of June) but did not get it. This view is also in accord with Swift Service Stores, 169 NLRB 359, 360 (1968), in which respondent had paid a bonus for some 16 years to its employees on the basis of points which they earned, but the bonus plan contained a disqualification clause for those employees who engaged in a work stoppage. In April 1965 the employees engaged in a one day strike, and in consequence, respondent removed the bonus scores from the bulletin board and did not pay the bonus at Christmas as it had in the past. The charge was filed the next month. The Board found that the 10(b) limitation did not apply because although the announcement in April that the employees would not be able to earn bonus points may have been unlawful, the failure to pay the bonus in December was also unlawful by itself and, thus, there was no need to depend on events occurring outside the 10(b) period in order to find the violation.

I recognize, of course, that the Board has not invariably found that the announcement of an intended unilateral change is insufficient to begin the 10(b) period running. For example, in Catholic Medical Center, 236 NLRB 497, 500–501 (1978), cited by Respondent, respondent announced in March 1976 that it would not grant convention benefits to unit employees the next year, and the charge was filed within 6 months of the implementation of that announcement but not within 6 months of the announcement itself. The administrative law judge, affirmed by the Board, dismissed the allegation that the unilateral withholding of convention benefits from unit employees was unlawful, on grounds that the announcement started the 10(b) period running. Respondent also relies on Charles Mfg. Co., 245 NLRB 39 fn. 1 (1979). In Charles, the Board held that respondent did not violate Sec. 8(a)(5) of the Act by implementing wage increases in October 1977 when it had announced the amount and the effective date of the increases to employees a year earlier, before the union campaign. However, the reason stated by the Board for dismissing the allegation was that the announcement had been made prior to the advent of the union's organizing campaign, and there was no discussion of whether Sec. 10(b) applied. In the instant case, of course, the Union had been certified well before the unilateral actions at issue. In any event, although Catholic Medical Center would seem to stand for the proposition that the announcement of a unilateral change, rather than its implementation, might trigger the 10(b) period, I note that subsequent to Catholic Medical Center the Board issued Bay Medical Center, 252 NLRB 1138, 1144 (1980). In that case, the Board found that respondent's announcement in 1976 that it contemplated changing the hours in a new facility which did not open until November 1977 did not begin the 6-month period because the announcement was too remote in time from implementation of the change and respondent could have decided to bargain about the matter in the meantime.

As another administrative law judge, affirmed by the Board, emphasized in a case involving similar issues under Section 10(b), "a respondent could insulate itself from liability merely by carrying out the unfair labor practice (i.e., the act itself) 6 months and 1 day after the discriminatory decision is made. I visualize this argument as freeing from liability a respondent who wishes to set off a bomb by using a fuse which takes more than 6 months to burn. Neither Bryan Mfg. Co. nor any other case of which I am aware would permit such a result."[9]

I find Elmac, Swift Service Stores, and the administrative law judge's analysis in California School of Professional Psychology, all supra, persuasive on the issue here, and, consequently, find that the 10(b) period did not begin to run until June 1982 when Respondent put into effect the change which it had announced a year earlier.

I further find that, even if the announcement of a planned unilateral change would ordinarily be sufficient to initiate the 10(b) period, the announcement in June 1981 of the change in vacation pay policy did not cause the time limitations period to begin because the Union was unaware of the change until June 1982. As the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has stated, "the Board has consistently held, with the endorsement of at least two circuits, that the 6-month limitation does not begin to run until the . . . unlawful activity, which is the basis of the unfair labor practice charge, has become known to the Charging Party."[10] I find such a holding to be especially appropriate here, where Respondent attempts to use the same conduct which is the basis for the unfair labor practice charge, i.e., its failure to notify the Union and/or bargain with it prior to im-

[7] 362 U.S. at 416–417.

[8] The question of whether Respondent violated the Act by announcing in June 1981 a new policy to take effect in June 1982 is not before me. See Renton Village Cinema, 228 NLRB 377 (1977), in which the Board found that the announcement of a wage increase required by state law violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act, even though the pay increase itself was lawful.

[9] California School of Professional Psychology, 227 NLRB 1657, 1666 (1977). Although the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit disagreed with this analysis and denied enforcement of the Board's order in this case, 583 F.2d 1099 (1978), I am bound by the Board's decision.

[10] NLRB v. Allied Products Corp., 548 F.2d 644, 650 (6th Cir. 1977), quoted and followed in K & E Bus Lines, 255 NLRB 1022, 1029 (1981) (involving a discharge); and in Plumbers Local 40 (Mechanical Contractor), 242 NLRB 1157, 1161 (1979) (involving deletion of charging party's name from a referral list outside the 10(b) period, but of which he was not aware until a month before he filed the unfair labor practice charge).

plementing a unilateral change in unit employees' terms and conditions of employment, as the basis for precluding litigation of the issue. In other words, Respondent defends against the allegation that it unlawfully failed to notify the Union before implementing this change on grounds that the Union did not file the charge in a timely fashion, but the Union did not know about Respondent's action because Respondent did not tell the Union about it.

The view that notice to the charging party is required to start the 10(b) period is supported by a number of Board decisions. For example, in Avila Group, Inc., 218 NLRB 633, 639 (1975), respondent's decision to close a warehouse was made more than 6 months before the charge was filed, but the Board found that the limitations period did not start to run until the earliest date the union could have become aware of it, noting that "Respondent's silence, even if it were not active deceit, was sufficient to toll the limitations period." Similarly, in Strick Corp., 241 NLRB 210 fn. 1 (1979), the Board held that the notice which causes the 10(b) period to run, "whether actual or constructive, must be clear and unequivocal, and . . . the burden of showing such notice is on the party raising the affirmative defense of Section 10(b)," citing ACF Industries, 234 NLRB 1063 (1978). In the latter case, involving respondent's subcontracting of work, the Board held that, even if the employees knew that nonemployees were doing unit work, the inference was nonetheless not warranted that the union had notice of the unlawful subcontracting.

Nonetheless, I note that the cases are not entirely clear on this question. Thus, in Associated Grocers, 253 NLRB 31 fn. 3, 55 (1980), the Board held that litigation of respondent's change in the probationary period from 60 to 90 days during the course of a strike was barred by Section 10(b) because there was no evidence that the union was unaware of the change. This case seems to contradict the language in Strick Corporation, supra, that the notice must be clear and unequivocal and that the burden of showing notice is on the party raising the affirmative defense. However, subsequent to the Board's decision in Associated Grocers, it issued American Olean Tile Co., 265 NLRB 1625 (1982), finding that the 10(b) period did not begin to run until the charging party union was put on notice of the facts constituting the unfair labor practice and noting that there was no evidence that the charging party was aware of respondent's oral announcement of the policy at issue prior to its effectuation. I conclude that the most applicable precedent supports the finding, which I make, that the allegation that Respondent unlawfully unilaterally changed its vacation pay policy is not barred by Section 10(b) of the Act.

b. The merits

There is no dispute that Respondent was under an obligation to bargain about its vacation pay policy. Nonetheless, at the hearing, Respondent contended that no violation should be found on this issue because the change in this policy was, in any event, de minimis. I disagree. First, it is undisputed that prior to June 1982 the employees received their vacation pay in a lump sum in June and that that money was then available to them for whatever purposes they chose. As of June 1982, however, the employees received their vacation pay only when they took their vacation and did not have it available to them earlier. Second, Ross credibly testified that under the old policy those employees who spent their vacation pay before they took a vacation and consequently could not afford to be without a paycheck worked through their vacation time and got paid for it, but that after 1981 employees were paid for a vacation only when they actually took it. Ross further testified that he believed that Respondent insisted on employees taking vacations. In these circumstances, it is clear that the unilateral change had a substantial impact on unit employees, both as to when vacation money would be made available to them, and because it eliminated the option employees previously had of choosing whether to take a vacation or not.[11] I therefore find that by making this change without notice to the Union or affording it an opportunity to bargain, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

2. The unilateral reduction in working hours

The parties stipulated that prior to August 9, 1981, Respondent's normal workday for employees who worked Monday through Friday was 10 hours per day and that as of the week ending August 9, 1981, Respondent changed that workday to 9 hours per day. It is undisputed that Respondent did not notify the Union of its intention to change working hours or afford the Union an opportunity to bargain about the matter at the time the change occurred. Respondent concedes that a change in the number of hours in the workday is a mandatory subject of bargaining. Nonetheless, Respondent contends that no finding can be made that the change was unlawful because the charge pertaining to this matter was not filed until September 3, 1982, and, therefore, litigation of this allegation is barred by Section 10(b) of the Act.

As discussed above, I have concluded that where an employer's unilateral changes in the terms and conditions of employment of employees represented by a collective-bargaining agent are alleged to constitute unfair labor practices, the limitations period does not commence until that agent is notified of the employer's allegedly unlawful conduct. The General Counsel contends that the Union did not have notice of the change in the number of hours in the workday until less than 6 months before the charge was filed and that, therefore, the 10(b) proscription is inapplicable. However, at the hearing in Case 1-CA-17917 on December 14, 1981, Lewis testified that prior to his discharge he worked a 50-hour week[12] and later had the following exchange during his cross-examination by then counsel for Respondent, David Grunebaum, about how many days per week the plant operated and with how many shifts:

> Q. Now, in the summer of 1980 you knew that Harvard was operating 7 days a week?
> A. No.

[11] The change from permitting employees to forgo vacations to insisting that they take time off from work is not alleged as an unfair labor practice nor litigated as such and I make no finding regarding it.

[12] Tr. in Case 1-CA-17917, pp. 37, 38.

Q. You didn't know that?

A. No.

Q. And that it had at least two shifts going at all times during the summer of 1980 in certain departments?

A. No.

Q. And in some cases three shifts—you didn't know that?

A. No.

JUDGE MALONEY: Is this a fact? Or are you saying you just don't know?

THE WITNESS: I never knew this, not seven days a week. More like 40, 45 hours a week. Not 7 days.

Q. (By Mr. Grunebaum) Well, you worked 50 hours week?

A. Yeah. I know it.

Q. And you only worked 5 days?

A. Yeah, but it's down to 45 now.

Q. We're talking about in the summer of 1980?

A. Oh, summer of 1980. I don't remember ever seeing 7 days a week there.[13]

It is undisputed that George Carlsen, the Union's executive vice president, was in the hearing room during the exchange just quoted. In these circumstances, and even though I recognize that Lewis' comment about the workweek being reduced to 45 hours was made in the context of testimony about another matter; nonetheless, it was said and Carlsen presumably heard it. Accordingly, I find that the Union was put on notice of the unilateral change in hours on December 14, 1981, more than 6 months before the charge alleging the change to be unlawful was filed, and that, therefore, litigation of this allegation is barred by Section 10(b) of the Act. I shall therefore recommend that this allegation of the complaint be dismissed.[14]

3. The 1981 deductions from employees' wages to pay a portion of their insurance premiums

The parties stipulated that prior to August 1981 Respondent paid the entire premium for group health insurance it carried for employees. It is undisputed that in August 1981 Blue Cross/Blue Shield, the carrier for that insurance plan, increased the premiums for the plan, and the parties stipulated that as of the payroll period ending August 20, 1981, Respondent began to deduct from unit employees' paychecks the difference between what it had been paying for premiums and the new premium. Specifically, the parties stipulated that as of that payroll period the sum of either $2.97 a week for family coverage or 65 cents per week for single coverage was withheld from the employees' paychecks. It is also undisputed that Respondent took this action without notifying the Union or affording it an opportunity to bargain.

Respondent does not dispute that the proportion of insurance premiums to be paid by employees is a mandatory subject of bargaining, but contends that (1) the allegation that this unilateral change was unlawful is time-barred because the charge which included it was not filed until October 18, 1982, and (2) Respondent announced to employees in June 1979 that they would be required to pay all increases in insurance premiums in the future and, thus, the deductions from employees' paychecks to pay for such increases in 1981 did not constitute a unilateral change.

a. The 10(b) issue

With respect to Respondent's defense based on Section 10(b), Carlsen testified that in late August or early September 1982 Lewis who, as noted above, had been reinstated in June of that year, told him that Respondent was deducting health insurance premiums from the employees' paychecks. According to Carlsen, prior to this conversation with Lewis the Union was not aware that Respondent was making such deductions.

Carlsen further testified that he saw the employee handbook distributed by Respondent prior to the hearing in December 1981.[15] That handbook, which was distributed in July 1981 and has not been amended, states specifically that Respondent pays 100 percent of Blue Cross/Blue Shield premiums for employees and, for married employees, their families, starting with an employee's ninth month on the job. Accordingly, I find that the Union was not on notice until August or September 1982 that Respondent had begun making deductions from the employees' paychecks for insurance premiums and, for the reasons stated above with respect to the allegations concerning Respondent's change in its vacation pay policy, I therefore find no merit to Respondent's Section 10(b) defense.

b. The contention that the deductions implemented a preexisting policy

As noted, Respondent contends that it announced in 1979 that it would pass on all premium increases to employees and that, consistent with that announcement, it passed on to employees the first such increase in September 1981.[16] Therefore, according to Respondent, it has adhered to its established practice of passing on premium increases and has not made any unilateral change in this respect which is cognizable under Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.

In support of this contention, James Robbins, a consultant to Respondent on insurance and employee benefits, testified that some time in June 1979 he met with Ross and told him that he had surveyed the policies of-[13] Transcript in Case 1-CA-17917, pp. 140, 141 Emphasis added.

[14] The change in hours is also reflected in timecards which were subpoenaed by the General Counsel and produced at the December 1981 hearing, but Carlsen credibly testified that he did not assist the General Counsel in that case in examining the material. I find that the mere fact that the timecards were present in the hearing room was not sufficient to put the Union on notice of the change in hours. I further note that Lewis testified before me that at the time he testified in the previous hearing he probably thought that the plant was temporarily working a 9-hour shift and that he did not know that the change was permanent. However, the issue is not why Lewis testified as he did in the 1981 hearing, but what he said, and the consequence of that testimony insofar as whether it put the Union on notice of the change. As discussed above, I find that it did.

[15] I credit Carlsen on these matters. He seemed to testify forthrightly and his testimony on this issue is uncontroverted.

[16] Respondent also asserts that the employees agreed to this policy in 1979, a contention discussed below.

fered by some seven insurance companies and that, because two of those offered policies he considered very attractive, he thought that there was a strong argument in favor of switching from Blue Cross to another insurance carrier. Ross replied, however, that Respondent would stay with Blue Cross because it had been a fixture of its benefit package and the employees liked it.[17]

Robbins, corroborated by Swartz, further testified that Ross then called a meeting of the employees and asked them whether they would prefer to retain Blue Cross/Blue Shield as the insurance carrier, and apparently a substantial majority of the employees indicated that they would. Ross then announced, according to Robbins and Swartz, that he would pay any increases for 1979 but that he wanted it understood that any future increases would be absorbed by the employees.[18]

On direct examination Ross similarly testified that at that meeting he asked the employees how they felt about investigating other insurance carriers to avoid any increase in the premium and that the employees voted "unanimously" not to investigate any other programs but to stay with Blue Cross, and that he then told the employees that all future increases in the premiums would be passed along to them. However, on cross-examination Ross testified that the employees not only voted to retain Blue Cross but "agreed unanimously" that they would pay future increases in the premiums.

Lewis, the only employee witness who had worked at the plant in 1979, credibly testified that prior to his discharge he was not present at any meetings where employees voted on whether they would rather change insurance carriers or pay part of the premium and that, although at some meetings Ross announced that he might have to deduct a portion of the premiums from the employees' pay, he never in fact did so.[19]

I credit the testimony of Swartz, McGee, and Robbins as to what occurred at the June 1979 meeting. Accordingly, I find that at that time, which was before the advent of the Union's organizing campaign, Ross announced to the unit employees that they would be required to pay future increases in insurance premiums.

It is undisputed that, notwithstanding Blue Cross' statement to Respondent in 1979 that the insurance premiums would increase that year, there was in fact no increase in the 1979 premium from what it had been in 1978 and that there was no actual increase in Blue Cross premiums for either individuals or families until 1981.[20]

Respondent argues that it had announced the policy of passing along 100 percent of the increases to the employees and was bound to follow that policy. Nonetheless, the policy was merely announced before the advent of the Union, and not implemented until more than 2 years later. Even more significantly, the handbook, which was not distributed to employees until more than 2 years after the 1979 announcement, made no reference to any policy of ever passing on increases in health insurance premiums to employees. Thus, the inference is warranted that the policy of passing on such increases, which had never (as far as this record shows) been distributed in written form to employees, could be considered as withdrawn. Further, since at the time of the June 1979 announcement it was not clear when, if ever, the policy of passing on to employees increases in their insurance premiums would be implemented, I find that this announcement did not constitute establishment of a practice which would serve to justify Respondent in refusing to bargain 2 years later about whether it would deduct portions of insurance premiums from its employees' paychecks.[21] I therefore conclude that, by unilaterally requiring employees to pay a portion of their group health insurance premiums, without affording to the Union notice of this action or an opportunity to bargain before implementing it, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

---

[17] According to Robbins, Ross did not consult with the employees before making this statement.

[18] Plant superintendent McGee testified that he was also present at that meeting and that at that time Ross said that any increase from that day on would be passed on to the employees. Quinn testified that the employees "pleaded" at that meeting to retain Blue Cross. However, Quinn was not even employed by Respondent at that time, much less present at the meeting.

[19] I recognize that Lewis conceded on cross-examination that there was a 1979 meeting at which Ross announced that in order for the employees to retain Blue Cross/Blue Shield as their health insurance carrier the employees would have to pay the increases in premiums. However, Lewis' specific denial that the employees ever voted to pay the increases is not inconsistent with this testimony.

[20] Thus, the monthly premiums for individuals were $47.75 in 1978, $43.77 in 1979, $41.39 in 1980, and $44.00 in 1981. The monthly premiums for family coverage were $117.30 in 1978, $111.53 in 1979, $108.79 in 1980, and $120.70 in 1981.

[21] Respondent cites, inter alia, A-V Corp., 209 NLRB 451 (1974), in support of its position. In that case, prior to entering into its first collective-bargaining agreement with a union, respondent contributed approximately half of the premiums for its employees' group insurance program. The first union contract provided that the cost to employees of insurance coverage should be reduced by one half and not be increased and this provision was carried into the next contract. When insurance premiums increased a month after that contract's effective date, respondent passed along one quarter of the increase so that again the employees paid approximately 25 percent of the total. When the insurance policy was renewed a year later with an increased premium, respondent again passed along the same percentage of the increase. In the following 2 years there were no increases in premiums, but a year later the proposed increases were substantial and respondent therefore changed carriers and obtained an identical program with premiums that were higher than those it had paid under the old policy but lower than would have been entailed by a renewal of the former policy. Respondent advised the employees of the change in carriers and that there would be no increase in the cost of premiums to them because it would absorb the additional premium cost. In consequence, the employees' share of the premium was reduced from approximately 25 to 21 percent of the total. When this policy was renewed the next year, respondent allocated 21 percent of the increase to the employees, and at this point the union protested for the first time. The Board found that respondent's consistent practice had been to allocate a portion of an insurance premium increases to employees on a pro rata basis, that respondent's one departure from this practice in February 1971 did not establish a new condition of employment, and that the union had acquiesced in the practice for a number of years. Consequently, the Board found that the 1-year deviation from this practice was not intended to be the new practice and that respondent's reversion to its former practice of passing on to employees the same share of the increase in insurance premiums represented a continuation of its past practice and not an unlawful unilateral change. In the instant case, however, Respondent's decision in 1981 to begin deducting insurance premium increases from the employees' paychecks was not a continuation of a preexisting practice, but merely the first implementation of a policy announced more than 2 years earlier which was not even referred to in the employee handbook published in the interim. In these circumstances, I conclude that A-V Corp., supra, is inapposite.

4. The increased deductions for health insurance premiums in 1982

At the hearing the parties stipulated that, as of the payroll period ending September 2, 1982, Respondent began to deduct $5.13 from the weekly paycheck of each unit employee who had elected single health insurance coverage and $12.69 from the paycheck of each employee who had elected family coverage. It is also undisputed that Respondent neither notified the Union about this increased deduction nor offered to bargain with the Union about it.

The complaint alleges that, by unilaterally deducting an increased amount from the employees' paychecks, Respondent further violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Respondent contends that, in light of its announced policy in June 1979 of passing along premium increases to the employees and its implementation of that policy in September 1981, the increased deductions in 1982 were not a change but merely a further implementation of that policy.

Having found that Respondent's initial deductions of sums from employees' paychecks toward health insurance premiums in 1981 was taken in derogation of its bargaining obligation to the Union, I further find, for the same reasons as those discussed above, that Respondent's increase in the amount to be deducted from the employees' checks was also a unilateral change in the employees' terms and conditions of employment. I therefore find that by this conduct Respondent further violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

5. The change in the type of funding for the insurance plan

Prior to 1982 Respondent's group health insurance plan with Blue Cross/Blue Shield was what is referred to in the record as a "premium group plan." As William Rooney, a marketing representative employed by Blue Cross, credibly explained at the hearing, under such a plan a group pays Blue Cross a predetermined amount or premium every month for the 12 months of the contract, and each year Blue Cross reviews the contract and adjusts the premium up or down depending on several criteria, including, in a group such as Respondent's, the group's own experience. Rooney further credibly testified that in its annual review Blue Cross analyzes the last 2 years of its experience with the group and extrapolates that trend to determine what it would have to pay for the same claims if they arose in the next 12 months. Blue Cross then compares the group's experience to that of other small groups and applies a formula in order to establish the single and family premium rate for the group.[22] The premium plan also includes a refund if the group's claims and administrative costs come to less than a certain percentage of the total premium. When Blue Cross determines that a refund is in order, the refund is nonetheless not paid until 12 months after the close of the contract in order to allow excess claims to be processed.

In 1982 Respondent, while retaining Blue Cross as the insurance carrier, switched from the premium plan to what is called a "cost-plus" program. It is undisputed that Respondent made this change without notifying the Union or affording it an opportunity to bargain about the matter.

As Rooney credibly explained it, under this plan a group pays its actual claims every month plus an administrative cost to Blue Cross of 6.5 percent of the amount of the claims. In addition, Respondent also purchased reinsurance. Under the specific stop-loss policy, Respondent has a maximum liability of $15,000 for claims submitted by any one employee in any one year. Similarly, Respondent purchased an aggregate stop-loss policy under which it would not be liable for any claims in excess of 110 percent of the amount projected by Blue Cross as the anticipated losses for the year. The premiums for these policies cost $8 per individual or $20 per family per month.

It is undisputed that a covered individual receives the same benefits and has his claims processed in the same manner regardless of whether the insurance policy is a premium group plan or a cost-plus plan. Rooney explained that under a reinsurance cost plus program there is a cash-flow savings to the group in the first year because of the timelag between when services are provided and when the claim is paid. Consequently, in the first year of such a program the group pays claims on 9 or 10 months instead of the entire year.[23] Rooney further testified that another advantage to the cost plus plan is that a group may consider Blue Cross' projections of its claims experience too high, or the group's members may be of the view that if they know that the group is paying the precise amount of their claims they may be better able to control their medical costs.

Quinn credibly testified that in order to determine how much of the Blue Cross premium should be deducted from the employees' paychecks, he first recalculated the Blue Cross premium, which is stated as an amount per month, as an amount per week because employees are paid weekly. As a result of his discussions with Rooney and Robbins, Quinn projected a total cost of $150,000 for claims, administrative expenses, and the reinsurance premiums. Quinn then multiplied the 69 family subscribers by 3,[24] added that total of 207 to the 23 single subscribers, and then divided the $150,000 projected cost by the total of 230, thereby obtaining the yearly rate. Quinn then divided that number by 12 for the monthly rate for a single subscriber and finally multiplied the monthly rate for a single subscriber by 3 to obtain the family rate of $163.[25] Quinn further testified that he believed that Blue Cross premiums were not deducted from employees' vacation checks; consequently an employee with family coverage who took 5 weeks of vacation would pay less in Blue Cross premiums than an employee with the same coverage who took 2 weeks of vacation.

[22] The premium for the total group for the year is the number of individuals times the premium rate for individuals added to the total number of families times the premium rate per family. Consequently, inasmuch as some members of the group may leave it and others join, the total premium bill for the group will fluctuate during the year.

[23] In order to ensure that claims that are submitted after the contract expires for services provided during the contract term, Blue Cross requires a deposit equal to approximately 2 months of anticipated claims. However, since the lag in claims is frequently 3 to 4 months, there is still a cash-flow savings.

[24] As discussed below, the insurance industry assumes that there are approximately three people in a family for purposes of determining how much larger the premium for family coverage should be than that for single coverage.

The complaint, as amended, alleges that Respondent's unilateral change from a group premium insurance plan to a cost-plus premium plan violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Respondent contends that because the change in the type of funding had no impact on the health insurance benefits received by the employees, the change was not one over which it was obligated to bargain. In support of this contention, Respondent cites, inter alia, Meharry Medical College, 236 NLRB 1396, 1407–08 (1978).

In Meharry Medical College, the collective-bargaining agreement specified the amounts which employees paid toward their insurance premiums. The administrative law judge, affirmed without comment by the Board, found that respondent's change from a "premium" insurance policy to a "cost-plus" policy was not a unilateral change in employees' terms and conditions of employment, on grounds that "[t]here was no evidence that there was any change in benefits or change in carrier. Thus there has been no change relative to insurance benefits that would warrant an 8(a)(5) finding."[26]

In the instant case, unlike Meharry, supra, the General Counsel has adduced evidence that the change to a cost-plus plan had an impact on the employees' terms and conditions of employment. I recognize, of course, that there was no change in the insurance carrier, the benefits employees received, or the procedures they used for submitting claims. However, the change to a cost-plus program did result in a change in the manner in which employees' share of the premium was calculated: In 1981, the first year employees paid any part of the insurance premiums, the premium was calculated by Blue Cross and Respondent passed on to the unit employees the increase over the previous year. However, in 1982 Respondent itself determined the probable total cost of claims, the aggregate stop-loss limit over which Blue Cross would be responsible for paying claims, and the multiplier by which the single rate would be multiplied to determine the family rate,[27] all of which affected the amount of the employees' share of the premium.

The foregoing establishes that the facts in this case are significantly distinguishable from those in Meharry Medical College, supra. In Meharry, the contract specified the amount the employee would contribute for his insurance and the employer paid the remainder. In the instant case, however, Respondent determined the amount that it would pay toward insurance and the employees were required to pay the rest. Consequently, in this case, unlike Meharry, the method used to determine the amount of the premium, having, as it did, an effect on how much the employees were required to pay, was a term and condition of employment.[28]

Accordingly, I find that in the circumstances of this case the question of whether Respondent would change its insurance program to a cost-plus premium plan was a mandatory subject of bargaining. I therefore conclude that, by failing to notify the Union about the proposed change and by failing to afford the Union an opportunity to bargain about the matter, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.[29]

D. The Alleged Violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act

It is undisputed that Respondent has continued to pay the full amount of insurance premiums for its nonunit employees while requiring unit employees to pay part of those premiums. At the hearing the General Counsel amended the complaint to allege that by treating unit and nonunit employees differently in this regard Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) as well as Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.[30] Respondent contends that the allegations regarding the 1981 increases are barred by Section 10(b) of the Act and that, in any event, the record does not show that the passing on of insurance premium increases was discriminatory.

For the reasons discussed above with respect to the alleged Section 8(a)(5) violations, I find no merit to Respondent's defense premised on Section 10(b) of the Act.

---

[25] Although it is not entirely clear, it appears that Quinn then either multiplied the monthly rates by 12 and divided by 52 to obtain the weekly rate, or divided the monthly rate by 4-1/3 to accomplish the same purpose.

[26] 236 NLRB at 1408.

[27] Although Robbins testified that the family rate is normally three times the individual rate, he conceded that that ratio may vary from two and one half to three, which, of course, would have an impact on the premium required for family coverage. Robbins also testified that Blue Cross would only permit a $15,000 individual stop-loss limit but also said that Respondent could have taken a higher aggregate stop loss of 125 percent, which again would reduce the premium to some extent.

[28] It is undisputed that in calculating the amount of the premiums Quinn used the total number of family and single units in the entire group and not merely those in the bargaining unit. The record does not indicate how many single and family units were in the bargaining unit as opposed to the entire group nor what percentage of the total claims Respondent's experience had shown to be applicable to the bargaining unit. It is possible, of course, that the bargaining unit's claims experience differed from that of the group as a whole. Whether, in such circumstances, the premiums attributable to bargaining unit employees should have been calculated on the basis of their experience rather than that of the entire group is another subject about which the Union was entitled to bargain.

[29] In Keystone Consolidated Industries, 237 NLRB 763, 767 (1978), enforcement denied as to other issues 606 F.2d 171 (7th Cir. 1979), also cited by Respondent, the Board found that a unilateral change in the administrator/processor of a dental insurance program did not violate Sec. 8(a)(5) because of a failure to prove that the identity of that administrator had any effect on the employees' terms and conditions of employment. Having found that in the instant case the change to a cost-plus program did have an effect on the employees' terms and conditions of employment, I find Keystone, as well as Meharry Medical College, supra, inapposite.

[30] I note that the original charge in Case 1–CA–20350, filed October 18, 1982, alleged that Respondent's requirement in 1982 that employees pay a portion of the health insurance premiums violated Sec. 8(a)(3) as well as Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, and that "The employer made these changes in retaliation to [sic] the employees voting to be represented by [the Union]." The amended charge in Case 1–CA–20350, filed December 2, 1982, alleges only that the 1982 deductions violated Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, and there is no indication in the record what disposition was made of the 8(a)(3) allegation, which was not included in the consolidated complaint until it was amended at the hearing. In any event, Respondent has not contended that litigation of this allegation is barred by virtue of the failure to include it in the December 1982 complaint or that this allegation was previously dismissed, and I find it appropriate to consider the allegation on its merits.

With respect to the merits of the allegation, it is well established that an employer's grant of benefits to unrepresented employees which are withheld from represented employees does not violate Section 8(a)(3) of the Act absent proof of a discriminatory motive.[31] In arguing that there is proof of such motive, the General Counsel relies on what he views as Respondent's history of discriminating against its employees because of their union activity,[32] and emphasizes that, although insurance premiums rose significantly in 1977 and 1978, Respondent did not tell the employees in those years that future increases would be passed along to them. The General Counsel further points out that Respondent did not pass along such increases to unit employees until after the Union was certified as their representative and that in its 1980 campaign literature Respondent emphasized to employees that, although their health insurance premiums were paid in full by their employer, many employees covered by union contracts were required to pay a portion of the premiums.

Respondent, in its turn, established that its non-unit employees are salaried as opposed to hourly paid and that they have historically had different wages and fringe benefits than those of the unit production and maintenance employees. Respondent further argues that it is unrebutted that the salaried personnel were not present at the June 1979 meeting where, according to Respondent, the unit employees voted to pay increases in Blue Cross/Blue Shield premiums instead of switching to another carrier.

I find that Respondent has not demonstrated that the employees in the bargaining unit voted in 1979 to pay Blue Cross/Blue Shield increases in the future. I have credited Lewis' testimony that there was no such vote and Swartz and McGee testified only that the employees were told at that meeting that if they stayed with Blue Cross they would pay future increases. Further, although on cross-examination Ross testified that he asked the employees if they wanted to stay with Blue Cross and pay any future increases and they agreed unanimously to do so, I do not credit him on this point, both because he did not appear to testify candidly and because his testimony was not substantiated by other management officials who were present at the meeting.[33]

Notwithstanding this finding, however, I find the evidence persuasive that nonunit employees' wages and fringe benefits have always been determined independently of those of unit personnel and that in 1981 unit employees received an across-the-board wage increase while only 2 or 3 of the some 20 nonunit employees received any raise.[34] Accordingly, I conclude that the General Counsel has not established by a preponderance of the evidence that the decision to pass along insurance premium increases to unit employees while Respondent continued to pay the total premium for nonunit employees was discriminatorily motivated. I shall therefore recommend that this allegation of the complaint be dismissed.

On the basis of the above findings of fact and the entire record in this case, I make the following

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Harvard Folding Box Co., Inc. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Boston Local No. 600, Graphic Arts International Union, AFL–CIO, CLC is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. All production and maintenance employees, including truckdrivers, of Respondent employed at its Lynn, Massachusetts, plant, excluding office clerical employees, sales employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in Section 2(11) of the Act, constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

4. The Union has, since at least September 11, 1980, been the representative for purposes of collective bargaining of the employees in the unit described above.

5. By modifying its policy with respect to vacation pay, by requiring unit employees to pay for a portion of their group health insurance premiums, and by changing its health insurance plan from a premium policy to a "cost-plus" policy, all without notification or affording an opportunity to bargain to the Union, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Sections 8(a)(5) and (1) and 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

6. By exaggerating to employees the number of persons who might be reinstated pursuant to a Board order and telling current employees that in consequence there might be a layoff, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Sections 8(a)(1) and 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

7. A preponderance of the credible evidence does not establish that Respondent has otherwise violated the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action, including the posting of the customary notice, designed to effectuate the purposes of the Act.

Having found that Respondent has unlawfully made unilateral changes in the employees' terms and conditions of employment, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to restore the status quo ante by restoring its former vacation payment policy and by ceasing to withhold any amounts from the employees' paychecks to pay

---

[31] Empire Pacific Industries, 257 NLRB 1425, 1426 (1981).

[32] I note, however, that, although Administrative Law Judge Maloney has made findings of such discriminatory conduct, the case is pending before the Board.

[33] With respect to this credibility determination and others, it is worth repeating here the often-quoted maxim that "It is no reason for refusing to accept everything that a witness says, because you do not believe all of it; nothing is more common in all kinds of judicial decisions than to believe some and not all." NLRB v. Universal Camera Corp., 179 F.2d 749, 754 (2d Cir. 1950).

[34] I note that Administrative Law Judge Maloney found that across-the-board increase unlawful in Case 1–CA–17917. However, the General Counsel does not contend that Respondent is consequently precluded from relying on the fact that nonunit personnel did not receive such an increase as part of its justification for treating them differently with respect to the insurance premiums.

for insurance premiums. I shall also recommend that Respondent be ordered to reimburse employees for all amounts withheld from their paychecks to pay for insurance premiums and to pay the employees interest on their vacation pay from the time they would have received it under the policy in effect through June 1981 until they actually took their vacations and received their pay. With respect to the unilateral change in the method of funding health insurance, I note that Respondent's current contract with Blue Cross is about to expire and that, in any event, in light of the cease-and-desist and reimbursement remedies I have recommended, the change in the method of funding insurance will not have an impact on the employees' terms and conditions of employment. I therefore deem it unnecessary to require Respondent to bargain retroactively about the insurance policy in effect until August 1983.

As a further measure to remedy Respondent's violations of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist from implementing unilateral changes in terms and conditions of employment of unit employees without bargaining with the Union which represents them. Finally, I shall recommend that the amounts paid to employees to make them whole for any loss they may have suffered as a result of Respondent's unlawful unilateral action include interest, to be computed in the manner prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[35]

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[36]

ORDER

The Respondent, Harvard Folding Box Co., Inc., Lynn, Massachusetts, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with Boston Local No. 600, Graphic Arts International Union, AFL–CIO, CLC as the exclusive representative of its employees in the following unit, with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment:

> All production and maintenance employees, including truckdrivers, of Respondent employed at its Lynn, Massachusetts plant, excluding office clerical employees, sales employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in Section 2(11) of the Act.

(b) Requiring employees to contribute to health insurance premiums or increasing the amounts employees contribute to such premiums, or instituting changes in vacation pay policies or health insurance plans or any other terms or conditions of employment of employees in the above-described unit without first notifying the Union and affording it an opportunity to bargain about such changes.

(c) Exaggerating to employees the number of persons who might be reinstated pursuant to a Board order and telling employees that in consequence of such reinstatements there might be a layoff.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their right to engage in or refrain from engaging in any or all of the activities specified in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Make unit employees whole for any losses they may have suffered as a result of Respondent's unlawful unilateral action, including interest thereon, computed in the manner set forth in the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(b) On request, bargain with the Union with respect to the wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment of the employees in the unit set forth above.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its Lynn, Massachusetts facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[37] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 1, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint allegations not specifically found herein are dismissed.

[35] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[36] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[37] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

> To organize
>
> To form, join, or assist any union
>
> To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
>
> To act together for other mutual aid or protection
>
> To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively with Boston Local No. 600, Graphic Arts International Union, AFL–CIO, CLC as the exclusive representative of our employees in the following unit, with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment:

> All production and maintenance employees, including truckdrivers, employed at our Lynn, Massachusetts plant, excluding office clerical employees, sales employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in Section 2(11) of the Act.

WE WILL NOT require employees to contribute to health insurance premiums or increase the amounts employees contribute to such premiums, or institute changes in vacation pay policies or health insurance plans or any other terms or conditions of employment of employees in the above-described unit without first notifying the Union and affording it an opportunity to bargain about such changes.

WE WILL NOT exaggerate to employees the number of persons who might be reinstated pursuant to order of the National Labor Relations Board and indicate that as a result some current employees may be laid off.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL make employees whole, with interest, for any losses they may have suffered as a result of our deducting money from employees' paychecks for health insurance premiums and as a result of our change in the vacation pay policy.

WE WILL, upon request, bargain with the Union with respect to the wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment of the employees in the unit set forth above.

HARVARD FOLDING BOX CO., INC.

Kansas Van and Storage Co., Inc. and Truck Drivers and Helpers, Local No. 696 affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen & Helpers of America. Case 17-CA-10086

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND HUNTER

On 14 May 1982 Administrative Law Judge James S. Jenson issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions to the extent consistent herewith and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.

1. The judge found that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) by refusing to bargain about health insurance. We disagree.

The Respondent and the Union have had a collective-bargaining relationship for several years, and the issue of health insurance arose in the context of negotiations for a new contract. The Union's initial contract proposals included an item: "Discuss a Health & Welfare cost program." At the first bargaining session the Union went through its proposals and stated that instead of a first-year wage increase it wanted an insurance program. It said it knew of a better plan than the one employees were carrying at their own expense and thought they could get into that plan for approximately 70 cents an hour. The Union did not name the plan. The Respondent said it would study the Union's proposals. Later the Respondent submitted counterproposals, including economic provisions covering rates for hourly wages, mileage, loading, daily expenses, and pension fund. At the next bargaining session the parties discussed the counterproposals. The Union took the position they were inadequate and asserted that the Respondent had ignored the insurance request. The Union named the insurance plan it had in mind, a state building trades program which would require a special agreement to cover the Respondent which was outside the building trades. The Union said the plan would cost 70 cents per hour the first year, 15 cents additionally the second year, and 10 cents additionally the third year. It suggested that any excess of that amount could be deducted from the employees' wages as agreed to by the employees. The Union did not submit the complete insurance plan or any written materials about the plan. The Respondent replied that its counterproposals covered its economic offer.

The Respondent prepared a second proposal and the parties met for a third time. The Union asserted that the Respondent's whole proposal was less than the employees could live with and did not include an insurance provision. The Respondent stated a willingness to make some changes in the hourly rate and an addition to the pension payments. When the Union complained that the Respondent had not addressed the insurance issue, the Respondent declared that was its economic offer, that was what it was prepared to offer. The following day the employees voted to strike.

We conclude that the facts do not establish that the Respondent refused to bargain about health insurance. We conclude, rather, that health insurance was considered as part of negotiations covering a total contract. The parties met several times, made counterproposals, and reached agreement on some items. The Union never presented a complete insurance plan for consideration or specific details of a plan. The absence of an insurance program in the Respondent's economic proposals does not demonstrate a refusal to bargain about the subject of insurance.

2. We agree with the judge that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) by refusing to meet and bargain with the Union, but we disagree with his finding that the refusal occurred on 18 August 1980, the day the strike began. On that day the union representative telephoned the Respondent's vice president who had conducted contract negotiations and said he wanted to discuss matters that separated them. The vice president referred the Union to the Respondent's attorney. The union representative called the attorney and left a message when he was told that the attorney was not in. We consider the Respondent's conduct on this date to fall far short of a refusal to meet and negotiate. Without question an employer may bargain through an agent and it was reasonable for the Respondent's vice president to decide to bargain through a professional negotiator after he had failed to reach agreement with the Union and the employees had gone on strike. There is no evidence that he made the decision to evade or delay negotiations. Although the selection of an attorney to handle negotiations did not relieve the Respondent of its statutory obligation to bargain, the evidence does not establish that on 18 August it was failing to discharge that obligation through an attorney.

However, the Union was unable to speak with the attorney despite several telephone calls to his office and a second call to the Respondent on 16 October when the vice president again referred the Union to the attorney. On 29 October the union representative explained to the Respondent's vice president that the Union had tried unsuccessfully to talk to the attorney who did not return its telephone calls and if matters continued in that way he could only assume that the Respondent was refusing to bargain. The vice president replied, "You will have to take it however you want it." We think that this response by the Respondent when confronted with information that clearly raised a question why the Union had been unable to deal with Respondent's attorney for a period of at least 2 months shows a failure to exercise responsibility for the conduct of its bargaining representative and a disregard of the bargaining obligation. Accordingly, we find that the Respondent refused to meet and bargain on 29 October 1980.[1]

3. The judge found that one of the reasons for the strike was the Respondent's refusal to bargain about health insurance. Because we do not accept his finding that the Respondent unlawfully refused to bargain about health insurance, we reject the related finding that the strike was caused by unfair labor practices. We find, however, that the strike became an unfair labor practice strike on 29 October when the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) by refusing to meet and negotiate further with the Union. Consequently, we consider the strikers to be unfair labor practice strikers as of 29 October 1980.[2]

[1] Member Zimmerman dissents from this finding. He agrees with the judge that the Respondent's unlawful failure to meet with the Union commenced on 18 August, rather than on 29 October. Contrary to his colleagues, he finds that the Union's unsuccessful attempts to arrange a meeting with the Respondent through calls to the Respondent's vice president (twice) and the Respondent's attorney (four times), starting on 18 August, suffice to establish that the Respondent's refusal to bargain occurred on that date. Perhaps no single one of these prior failures by the Respondent to cooperate with the Union in this regard would per se be an unlawful refusal to bargain. But the inescapable pattern of circumvention, avoidance, and lack of cooperation evidenced by the Respondent's repeated evasions of its bargaining obligation to the Union colors each of those single instances with the broad brush strokes of unlawful activity ab initio—from the Union's first such request on 18 August for continued negotiations. Thus, the Respondent's subsequent failures and refusals in this regard, culminating in Vice President Morford's virtual concession, in his 29 October conversation with union representative Moore, that the Respondent was indeed refusing to negotiate (i.e., Morford's remark, "You will have to take it however you want it," in response to Moore's charge that the Respondent was refusing to negotiate), establish, in Member Zimmerman's view, that the Respondent set out on its course of unlawful refusal to bargain as early as 18 August, and not, as his colleagues would have it, as late as 29 October.

[2] For a discussion of the reinstatement rights of employees who participate in a strike that is converted from an economic strike to an unfair labor practice strike see Charles D. Bonanno Linen Service, 268, NLRB 552 (1984).

AMENDED CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Substitute the following paragraphs for the judge's Conclusions of Law 3 and 4.

"3. By failing and refusing to meet with the Union for the purpose of collective bargaining on and after 29 October 1980 as the exclusive representative of its employees in the above-described appropriate bargaining unit the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

"4. The strike which began on 18 August 1980 was converted to an unfair labor practice strike by the Respondent's violation of Section 8(a)(5) on 29 October 1980."

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Kansas Van and Storage Co., Inc., Topeka, Kansas, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers on their unconditional offer to return to work.

(b) Refusing to meet and bargain in good faith with Truck Drivers and Helpers, Local No. 696, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen & Helpers of America, as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the bargaining unit.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer James H. Hendricks, Robert A. Nocolay, Frank E. Bath, Jr., Sharon L. Coulter, Daniel P. Jones, Reuben Wabnum, and Basil Gibbs immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, discharging, if necessary, any replacements hired in their former jobs on or after 29 October 1980. Place any of these employees for whom employment is not immediately available on a preferential hiring list in accordance with seniority or other nondiscriminatory practice used by the Respondent. Make whole these employees for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

(b) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) On request, bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit concerning terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody the understanding in a signed agreement:

> All truck drivers, helpers and shop employees employed at the facility located at 220 North Quincy, Topeka, Kansas, but excluding the master mechanic, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(d) Post at its facility in Topeka, Kansas, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[3] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 17, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[3] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers on their unconditional offer to return to work.

WE WILL NOT fail or refuse to meet and bargain in good faith with Truck Drivers and Helpers, Local No. 696, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen & Helpers of America as the exclusive bargaining representative of our employees in the appropriate bargaining unit set forth below.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer James H. Hendricks, Robert A. Nocolay, Frank E. Bath, Jr., Sharon L. Coulter, Daniel P. Jones, Reuben Wabnum, and Basil Gibbs immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, discharging, if necessary, any replacements hired in their former jobs on or after 29 October 1980.

WE WILL place any of these employees for whom employment is not immediately available on a preferential hiring list in accordance with seniority or other nondiscriminatory practice that we use.

WE WILL make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits resulting from our denial to them of reinstatement, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL, on request, meet and bargain with the Union and put in writing and sign any agreement reached on terms and conditions of employment for our employees in the bargaining unit:

> All truck drivers, helpers and shop employees employed at the facility located at 220 North Quincy, Topeka, Kansas, but excluding the master mechanic, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

KANSAS VAN AND STORAGE CO., INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JAMES S. JENSON, Administrative Law Judge. This case was heard on July 28 and 29, 1981, in Topeka, Kansas. The complaint issued on January 28, 1981, pursuant to a charge filed on December 19, 1980, and amended on January 20, 1981. The complaint alleges the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by refusing to negotiate a health insurance contribution plan and be failing and refusing to meet with the Union, and Section 8(a)(3) by refusing to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers. The Respondent denies it has either refused to meet with or bargain with the Union, and contend the strikers, whom it has placed on a preferential hiring list, were economic strikers whom it permanently replaced. All parties were afforded full opportunity to appear, to introduce evidence, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. Both the General Counsel and Respondent filed posthearing briefs which have been carefully considered.

On the entire record[1] in the case, including the demeanor of the witnesses, and the posthearing briefs, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Respondent is engaged in the moving and storage of furniture and other household goods in Topeka, Kansas. It is admitted and found that Respondent annually derives gross revenues in excess of $50,000 for the transportation of furniture and other household goods in interstate commerce pursuant to arrangements with and as agent for various common carriers, including Mayflower Moving Service which operates between and among various States of the United States, that it operates as an essential link in the transporation of furniture and other household goods in interstate commerce, and is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

It is admitted and found that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. ISSUE

1. Whether the Respondent failed and refused to negotiate with the Union about a health insurance contribution plan.

2. Whether, since or about August 15, 1980, the Respondent failed and refused to meet with the Union for the purpose of collective bargaining.

3. Whether the strike which commenced on or about August 18, 1980, was caused by the Respondent's refusal to negotiate a health insurance contribution plan and/or prolonged by its refusal to meet for the purpose of collective bargaining.

4. Whether the Respondent unlawfully refused to reinstate striking employees.

IV. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Setting

For a number of years, the Respondent has had a collective-bargaining relationship with the Union as the representative of all truck drivers, helpers and shop employees employed by the Respondent, at its facility located at 220 North Quincy, Topeka, Kansas, but excluding the master mechanic, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, a unit alleged, admitted, and found to be appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act. The most recent agreement covered the period from August 15, 1977, to August 15, 1980.[2] Pursuant to its terms, on June 4, the Union advised the Respondent of its desire to reopen the contract. Arthur W. Morford is Respondent's president, James L. Morford is Respondent's vice president, and William G. Haynes is Respondent's attorney and principal negotiator. LaRue Moore is the Union's president and Bill Moore, his son, is a union business representative and its representative in bargaining with Respondent during times material herein. James H. Hendricks, James E. Bath, Jr., Daniel P. Jones, and Robert A. Nicolay were employed by Respondent in the unit represented by the Union. Basil Gibbs, Sharon L. Coulter, and Reuben Wabnum were also employed by Respondent. While there was testimony to the effect that the latter three were not strikers, it is clear they performed no work for Respondent during the strike which commenced August 18. The complaint alleges, and the answer admits, however, that on December 18 the Union made an unconditional offer to return to work on behalf of all seven of the above-named "employees."

B. Prestrike Events

On July 3 Business Representative Bill Moore (Moore) called Jim Morford (Morford), advised him of a negotiation meeting with Topeka Transfer and Storage Company, and asked if he planned to attend. Morford responded that Respondent desired to negotiate separately. On July 8, Moore mailed a copy of the Union's proposed contract changes to Morford.[3] Item 13 of the proposal reads, "Discuss a Health & Welfare cost program." On July 16, Moore called Morford again regarding a meeting and one was arranged for July 22 at the union hall.

1. First negotiation meeting

The first negotiation meeting took place at 7 p.m. on July 22 at the union hall. Present for the Union in addition to Bill Moore were Ted Sumner, an employee of Topeka Transfer and Storage, Hendricks, Bath, Nicolay, and Jones. Present for the Respondent were Art and Jim Morford. The testimony shows that Moore went through the Union's list of proposed changes, stating the Union wanted an increase in vacations; an additional holiday; a pension increase; a different method of computing call-in pay; an hourly pay increase of 75 cents the first year and 60 cents each for the second and third years; a mileage rate increase of 2 cents for the first year and 1 cent for each of the next 2 years; an increase in the loading rate of 10 cents the first year and 5 cents for each of the next 2 years; and in lieu of a first-year wage increase, a health and welfare plan paid for by the employer.[4] Moore stated that the Blue Cross plan which was available to, and paid for by, employees was costing too much and that he knew of a better plan that the Company could get into at a cost of approximately 70 cents per hour.[5]

[1] The General Counsel moved to correct the transcript in accordance with an appendix attached to his brief. The Respondent has not opposed the motion. Accordingly, with the exception of the changes requested on pp. 51 and 257, the motion is granted. The appendix has been marked and is received in evidence as G.C. Exh. 20.

[2] All dates are in 1980 unless otherwise stated.

[3] G.C. Exh. 7.

[4] The Union withdrew two of its proposals which Moore acknowledged did not affect Respondent's employees.

[5] Moore did not have a copy of the plan nor did he mention its name. His knowledge of the plan was limited to hearsay.

Jim Morford responded that he and the Company would study the Union's proposal and get back to Moore. Morford asked if the Union intended "to keep economic equality between" Respondent and Topeka Transfer, and Moore responded affirmatively.

The Respondent's written contract proposal was received by the Union on July 26.[6] On July 27, Moore met with Respondent's employees and reviewed the Respondent's proposal. Moore noted that the proposal did "not even address our proposal of insurance, that they had completely ignored it." A vote was taken and the proposal was rejected by the employees. On July 28, Moore called Morford and informed him the Company's proposal was inadequate and another meeting was needed. They agree to meet again July 31.

2. Second negotiation meeting

On July 31, Morford met with Moore, four of Respondent's employees and two employees from Topeka Transfer. Moore stated Respondent's proposal was insufficient and explained why. Respondent's first proposal was to amend article IV, section 4, of the old agreement to provide for a 90-day probationary period instead of 30 days. The second proposal was to amend article VIII, section 1, which provided that drivers were not to be held responsible for damage caused by improper loading or handling of merchandise by others, to add a provision that drivers would "be responsible for carriers charges for violations of ICC rules and company policies and the carriers claim liability charge for improperly prepared inventories." Proposal three sought to change article XV, section 1, by providing for overtime after 40 hours per week instead of after 8 hours per day. With respect to its fourth proposal covering wages, Respondent proposed an hourly increase of 40 cents per hour the first year and 30 cents per hour over each of the 2 succeeding years; a mileage rate increase of 1 cent the first year and 1 cent for the second year with no additional increase for the third year; a load and unload (per cwt) increase of 5 cents for each of the 3 years; an increase of $1 per day for expenses in each of the 3 years;[7] and 50 cents per hour difference between helpers and drivers wages. Its fifth proposal was to change article XV, section 5, to provide that drivers be paid the same hourly rate for breakdowns as layovers. Its sixth proposal was to increase pension fund payments $1 per week the first year and $3 per week for each of the 2 succeeding years. With the exception of proposal five covering breakdowns, which it was agreed should be included in a contract since the Company was already abiding by it, the Union rejected all of the Respondent's proposals as inadequate. Moore testified that after going through, and rejecting, the Respondent's proposals, he told Morford that "you have completely ignored the fact that we requested a health and welfare program," and that Morford replied "that is my economic offer. That is what I am prepared to discuss, and that is all that I have."[8] Moore responded that he did not see any sense in continuing the meeting, which then broke up. On cross-examination, Moore testified that he told Morford that the insurance plan he proposed would cost the Employer "70 cents [per hour per employee] the first year, 15 cents additional the second year, and 10 cents additional the third year; and if it went over that, that it would be deducted from the employee's wages as agreed to by the employees."

On cross-examination, Moore testified he made the following counterproposals at the meeting:[9]

> Vacation: 2 weeks after 3 years. (Initial proposal was 2 weeks after 2 years. Contract provided for 2 weeks after 4 years.)
>
> Pension: Increase of $4 per week the first year and $3 per week for the 2 succeeding years. (Initial proposal was $3 per year.)
>
> Hourly pay on Multiple Metro Pickup (no discussion).
>
> Room expense and meals: $22 the first year, $23.50 the second and $25 the third year. (Initial proposal was for a minimum of $30 per night. Contract provided for $19 per day.)
>
> Hourly rate:
>
> 1st year: Insurance plan at rate of 70 cents per hour in lieu of hourly increase, mileage increase and load and unload increase.
>
> 2nd year: 50 cent hourly increase; and !6 cent mileage rate (down 1 cent from initial proposal).
>
> 3rd year: 50 cent hourly increase; and 16-1/2 cent mileage rate (down 1-1/2 cents from initial proposal).[10]
>
> "Helpers: 50 cents less than drivers on all new hires present employees with 45 days not restricted."
>
> Double time Sunday.
>
> 4 hour call in.

The Company's response to the proposal, according to Moore, was, "[W]ell, we will look at it."

On August 13, Moore called Morford, informed him that time was running out, that the Union had reached "a summary of a contract with his competition," and that they needed to meet again. Later in the day, Morford called Moore, advised him the Respondent had another written proposal and agreed to meet the afternoon of August 15 at the union hall. A union representative picked up a copy of Respondent's second proposal[11] the afternoon of August 13.

---

[6] G.C. Exh. 8.

[7] The contract provided for expenses of $19 per day. The Union's proposal called for "room to $16 or if none available, close to that rate. Actual expense with receipt or paid by the hour to hunt cheaper hotel." In addition, the Union sought a meal allowance of $3 for breakfast, $4 for lunch, and $7 for supper.

[8] Nicolay testified Morford's response was, "[y]ou have my offer right now. I an not prepared to discuss that. I am talking cash only. You have my economic proposal."

[9] R. Exh. 1 contains the notes made by Moore during negotiations.

[10] Moore testified on direct examination that the cost of the proposed insurance plan entailed an additional 13 cents per hour the second year and 10 cents the third year. His notes do not reflect these amounts.

[11] G.C. Exh. 9.

3. Third negotiation meeting

On August 15, Morford called Moore early in the afternoon and stated he and his father could not get away from the office to negotiate. Moore responded that the contract expired at midnight, that they had to meet and proposed a meeting in Morford's office that afternoon, to which Morford agreed. Accordingly, about 3 p.m. Moore and an employee of Topeka Transfer met with the two Morfords in the latter's office. The Respondent's second written proposal[12] proposed hourly wage increases of 50 cents for each of the 3 years;[13] a mileage rate increase of 1 cent the first year, another cent the second year and a half cent the third year;[14] a load and unload (per cwt) increase of 10 cents the first year and 5 cents for each of the two succeeding years;[15] 50 cents per hour difference between helpers and drivers on all new hires;[16] change article XV, section 5, to provide the drivers be paid the same hourly rate for breakdowns as layovers;[17] and an increase in pension fund payments of $1 per week for the first year and $3 per week for each of the 2 succeeding years.[18] During the meeting, Morford amended his proposal by increasing pension fund payments by $3 in each year and by decreasing the hourly increase for the second and third years from 50 cents each to 45 cents and 40 cents per hour respectively. Moore's testimony regarding the meeting was a follows:

> Q. Starting from the beginning of this meeting and taking us through to the end, tell us as best you recall what was said and by whom.
>
> A. I told Jim that we had completed the other contracts, as I told him before, and we needed to get his resolved, that his last proposal had not met the economic equality that he had asked for, and that we felt that his whole proposal was less than what the drivers could live with. I told him he had no[t] offered us any insurance proposal. He had not even responded to it, and he at that time—we told him that he had not made any changes in the pension. He said, "Well, I am willing to make this change." He added $3, $3 per week to the pension per year, and changed the monetary, the hourly rate by a nickel in the last two years and said that he was willing to make those changes, and I said, "Well, you still have not made any changes or made any address to the insurance policy."
>
> He said, "That is my economic offer. That is what I am prepared to offer," and I said, "Well, I do not really have any choice, Jim, other than to take this back to the employees," and he said, "Well, we all have to do whatever we have to do," and I said, "Well, I thank you," and I left.

C. The Strike

On August 16, Moore met with Bath, Hendricks, Jones, and Nicolay. He reported the changes in the company proposal which had been made during the meeting the previous day, and "that they had not addressed the insurance and were not willing to apparently institute a program because all they had addressed was an economic proposal, and they apparently weren't prepared to meet the economic quality of the other company that they had requested." He expressed his feeling that the Respondent had failed to negotiate, but had instead presented its proposals on a "take it or leave it" basis. After the employees voted to strike Respondent, Moore expressed the opinion that the Respondent may have committed an unfair labor practice. The first picket signs were prepared at that time.

Picketing commenced on August 18 at approximately 7:30 a.m. and continued until noon on August 22 with signs reading:

> Notice to the public: Employees of Kansas Van and Storage Co., Inc. are on strike. Members of Teamsters Local 696, Topeka, Kansas, 232-3866.

Commencing about noon on August 22, and continuing through the dates of the hearing herein, the signs have read:

> Employees of Kansas Van and Storage Co., Inc., unfair labor practice, on strike, members of Teamsters Local 696, Topeka, Kansas, 232-3866.

About midmorning on August 18, Moore called Morford to discuss, inter alia, "the things that we are apart on these negotiations." Morford referred Moore to Bill Haynes, his attorney.

D. Attempts to Contact Respondent's Attorney

According to Moore, he immediately called Haynes' office, was advised he was not in and left the following message with Haynes' secretary: "This is Bill Moore. My phone number is 232-3866. and I am calling about Kansas Van and Storage."

On August 19, LaRue Moore (Bill Moore's father and the union president) called Respondent's office in an attempt to reach Art Morford (Respondent's president), but in his absence talked to Jim Morford, and asked if there was some way they could "sit down and work this whole mess out," that he "understood we had had now not only a strike problem, we also had a pension problem."[19] Morford referred him to Haynes. According to

[12] G.C. Exh. 9.

[13] This is an increase of 10 cents per hour for the first year over its initial proposal, and 20 cents per hour in each of the next 2 years over the initial proposal.

[14] An increase of a half cent in the third year over the initial proposal.

[15] An increase of 5 cents in each of the years over the initial proposal.

[16] The same as in original proposal.

[17] Same as in original proposal.

[18] The Respondent had dropped the first three proposed changes in its initial proposal, to which the Union objected, which covered probationary period, drivers responsibility for violations of ICC rules and improperly prepared inventories, and a change in the method of computing overtime.

[19] While acknowledging that he does not normally get involved in negotiations, which are left to his son to handle, LaRue Moore testified that on August 19 he had called "to talk to Art [Morford] who I have know for many years and see if he and I possibly couldn't sit down and maybe clear up the whole ball of wax, strike, pension problem, whatever there was to be done."

LaRue Moore, he then called Haynes' office, and on learning that Haynes was not available, left his name and asked that Haynes call him. Also on August 19, the Union filed a charge against Respondent in Case 17–CA–9862, alleging that Respondent had made unilateral changes in working conditions in violation of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5), and had threatened and interrogated employees in violation of Section 8(a)(1). The charge was later withdrawn.

About September 3, LaRue Moore called Haynes' office again, again learned Haynes was not in, and again left his name with a request that Haynes call him. He assumed Haynes did not return his call because his secretary did not leave him a message to that effect.

On October 16, Moore called Morford and stated, "We still need to get together and talk about negotiations." Morford's response was, "[D]on't talk to me; talk to my attorney." According to Moore, he then called Haynes' office, and on learning he was not in, left his name and phone number, and stated he was "calling about Kansas Van and Storage." The secretary to whom he spoke responded that she would "see he gets the message."

On October 29, Moore called Morford again, using a "speaker phone" so that the employees who were with him could hear the conversation. His account of the conversation with Morford is:

> "Jim, we need to renew negotiations. We need to sit down with you." He said, "Don't talk to me; talk to my attorney," and I said, "Jim, I have tried to talk to your attorney. He is stonewalling me. He will not return my call," and he says, "That is not my fault," and I said, "It may not be your fault, but it is your responsibility. You have an obligation." I said, "If you continue this and he continues not to respond, I can only assume that you are refusing to bargain and negotiate," and he said, "You will have to take it however you want it," and I said, "Well, O.K. I will try to make the attempt of calling Mr. Haynes."

Moore then placed a call on the "speaker phone" for Haynes in the presence of the same employees, and since Haynes was apparently not there, left his name and phone number.[20] Moore claimed that on October 29, he had in his possession a copy of a "plan document" with another company, "a private situation, but it was for my reference, and I also had a 3 year quote on the amount of its cost and the method by which we would compute the mileage rate into the hourly rate for the sake of contributions." He did not forward the "plan document" to either Morford or Haynes, and when asked to produce one later on, was unable to furnish Haynes with a copy.

On November 12, Moore met with several of the strikers and again placed a "speaker phone" call for Haynes. On learning Haynes was out, he left his name, the fact he was with the Union, and asked that Haynes call him.[21] Moore next called a Federal mediator and asked that he assist in establishing contact with Morford and Haynes.

On November 19, Morford called Haynes' office again, was told he was "out on a trial," and again left his name and phone number and asked that he return the call.

On December 18, Moore called Morford from his attorney's office in Kansas City. He asked Morford if he was ready to meet and negotiate, and was again told to call Haynes, which he apparently failed to do. That afternoon Moore returned to Topeka, met with two of the strikers and suggested he make an unconditional offer to return to work. As neither of the strikers objected, he contacted Morford personally and made an unconditional offer to return on behalf of the four strikers and three other employees who had not been called to work during the strike. By letter dated December 23, Art Morford informed Moore that the seven strikers had been permanently replaced and would be placed on a preferential hiring list in the event their jobs became vacant in the future.

E. Events Following Refusal-to-Bargain Charge

On December 19, the Union filed a charge initiating this case, wherein it was alleged that the Respondent had failed to bargain since about August 15. On January 20, 1981, the charge was amended to allege that (1) since July 22, the Respondent refused to bargain by refusing to discuss the Union's insurance proposal; (2) since August 15, the Respondent refused to meet; and (3) since December 23, Respondent failed to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers after an unconditional offer to return to work. On January 26, 1981, Morford wrote the following letter to Moore:

> Dear Mr. Moore:
>
> You have alleged in your unfair labor practice charge that our company has refused to meet to negotiate and has refused to negotiate the union's insurance proposal.
>
> During our last meeting our response to the increase for health and welfare was we proposed a fifty cents per hour increase instead, which you rejected. We explained to you that we believed monies available for improvements should be applied for employees wages. We did not refuse to discuss your proposal.
>
> We have never refused to meet to negotiate. We have always been willing to meet with the union and continue to be willing to meet at a mutually agreeable time and place.
>
> As we told you previously Mr. William Haynes has been retained by our company to represent us in negotiations following our last meeting in August of 1980. To this date Mr. Haynes' office has no record of any attempts by you to arrange for a meeting.
>
> If you now desire a meeting please contact Mr. Haynes in writing with a carbon copy to us and suggest several dates you will be available to meet.

[20] The substance of the October 29 calls to Morford and Haynes' office was corroborated by Nicolay.

[21] Corroborated by Nicolay.

> We assure you that a mutually agreeable date and time will then be arranged with Mr. Haynes.
>
> Your immediate response to this letter will be appreciated.
>
> Yours very truly,
> /s/James L. Morford
> James L. Morford
> Vice President

On January 30, 1981, Moore wrote Haynes[22] proposing several dates in February to negotiate. Haynes responded by letter dated February 3, 1981,[23] and the parties met on February 11, 1981. Present for the Respondent were Morford and Haynes. Moore, Jones, Bath, and Hendricks were present for the Union. The proposals by both sides were reviewed. Moore stated the items he felt they were apart on, among which was "they had not responded to a request that we have an insurance program in lieu of the first year's wages." Haynes expressed the view that he did not think the parties were "that far apart," caucused in private with Morford, and informed Moore that "we will draw something up for you." Agreement was made to meet again on February 21.

The parties met again on February 21, at which time Haynes presented the Union with a written proposal.[24] The proposal, General Counsel's Exhibit 15, provides for a 3-year term commencing February 21, 1981, through February 20, 1984. After reviewing it, Moore stated that it appeared to be less than what the Respondent had previously offered and that "there seemed to be no element of negotiations." Haynes responded "[W]ell, you can see that I finally made a proposal on your insurance." The proposed health and welfare provision in Respondent's proposal reads:

> Effective February 21, 1983, the Employer shall contribute $70.000 per month to the monthly medical and hospitalization premiums for each regular full-time employee following their 90th day of employment, provided said employee makes application for coverage through the Employer and authorizes a payroll deduction for any additional monthly premiums due.[25]

Moore stated that Respondent's proposal did not state who the insurance carrier would be, its cost, or what it would cover, and requested the Respondent furnish more information. Haynes agreed to so and Moore, at Haynes request, agreed to furnish Respondent with a copy of the Builders Health and Welfare Fund "plan document" the Union was proposing.

By letter dated February 24, 1981, Moore reiterated his request to Haynes for more information, and by covering letter dated February 27, 1981, Morford transmitted information which he had obtained from Kansas Blue Cross-Blue Shield, Prudential Insurance, and Mayflower Warehousemen's Association Group Insurance Plan, to Moore. On the same day, Haynes wrote Moore the following letter:

> Dear Mr. Moore:
>
> This is to acknowledge reciept of your letter dated February 24, 1981. You apparently have misunderstood our discussion concerning Kansas Van's proposal in regard to health and welfare or hospitalization during our meeting on Saturday, February 21, 1981.
>
> The Company offered to pay $70 per month towards a hospitalization premium effective the third year of the contract. We stated that the coverage of the plan at the time could be the same as the present Blue Cross Blue Shield coverage or something different than the present plan. We stated that the Company would prefer to remain with Blue Cross Blue Shield but that it was open to suggestion from the Union. You stated that the Kansas Builders Health and Welfare plan was available and that the trust fund would accept payments directly from the Company deducted from the employee's pay. You further stated that the present premium for coverage in that fund was 70 cents per hour worked. I asked you if you would provide me with the trust agreement which allowed for drivers paid on a mileage basis to pay premiums on a flat rate basis and you said that you would do so.
>
> Mr. Morford is requesting that Blue Cross Blue Shield provide you with the present coverage provided by them and an estimate of what the anticipated premiums would be for the next three years. If you do not hear from them within the next ten days, please let me know. Mr. Morford has comparison bids from other companies which he is sending you today.
>
> We will be available at 7:30 PM on March 3, 1981, for another meeting, provided my secretary is able to reach you today to confirm that meeting. I suggest that we meet again in our conference room.

The parties met for the last time on March 24, 1981.[26] Haynes and Morford were present for the Respondent and Moore, Hendricks, Jones, and Bath for the Union. Moore stated he had reviewed the information which Respondent had furnished but that he could not find anything to indicate what any of the plans would cost at the time the Respondent's offer to contribute to a health and welfare plan would go into effect, and that agreeing to anything like that "would be like buying a pig in a poke." Haynes asked Moore for a copy of the "plan document" which the Union proposed. Moore responded that he had been unable to obtain a copy from the plan administrator, but that the Union "could offer a three-year quote as far as the insurance cost; and that if it went over that, we were agreeable to put the language in to take anything that went above that our of the employee's

[22] G.C. Exh. 12.

[23] G.C. Exh. 13.

[24] Present for the Respondent were Haynes and Morford. Moore, Jones, and Hendricks were present for the Union.

[25] Based on a 4-week month and 40-hour week, $70 per month per employee is the equivalent of 43-3/4 cents per hour per employee.

[26] As of the date of the hearing, neither party had requested another meeting.

wages." After the Respondent refused to change its outstanding offer, the meeting ended with Haynes stating he would be available to talk to Moore.

Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel argues the Union's health insurance proposal, which was contained in the Union's written proposal and explained by Moore at the first negotiating meeting of July 22, was a mandatory subject of bargaining, and that the Respondent's failure to address it in either of its two written proposals and its refusal to discuss it during bargaining sessions constituted a refusal to bargain in violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act. Consequently, it is argued, the strike which commenced on August 18 was an unfair labor practice strike, which was prolonged thereafter by the failure of Respondent's attorney to meet at reasonable times with the Union, also violating Section 8(a)(5). It is argued that the refusal to reinstate the unfair labor practice strikers on the December 18 unconditional offer to return made by Moore violated Section 8(a)(3).

The Respondent contends the strike was not caused by its refusal to negotiate the subject of the health insurance contribution plan, but rather by its "refusal to agree to contribute 70 cents per hour for each hour worked for each employee to the health and welfare program which Moore claimed was available commencing the first year of the contract," a copy of which the Union was unable to make available to Respondent. It is argued that the Respondent insisted that all moneys available for economic improvement be used to improve employee's wages, and therefore the evidence established that the parties disagreed on the economic package prior to the strike, culminating in an impasse over economic issues. Therefore, in light of the long amicable relationship between the parties, the good-faith bargaining which preceded impasse and the strike, as well as the Union's failure to furnish Respondent with a copy of its proposed health and welfare plan, it is argued that the General Counsel has failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the Respondent refused to negotiate the subject of health insurance and that the strike was economic in nature. Respondent argues further that, since the Union has at all times been unable to furnish it with a copy of its proposed health and welfare plan, it would not have been able to engage in an intelligent discussion of the health and welfare program proposed by the Union, which was one of the primary economic issues which caused the strike and continued to be a stumbling block to settlement. Accordingly, no settlement could have been achieved during the period after the strike commenced and, therefore, the strike was not prolonged because of Respondent's refusal to bargain or meet between August 18, 1980, and February 11, 1981, when negotiations resumed.

Conclusions

Under Section 8(a)(5) of the Act, it is an unfair labor practice for an employer "to refuse to bargain collectively with the representatives of his employees." The obligation "to bargain collectively" is defined in Section 8(d) as "the mutual obligation . . . to meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, or the negotiation of an agreement." The law requires no party to make concessions or to yield any positions fairly maintained. NLRB v. American National Insurance Co., 343 U.S. 395, 404 (1952); H.K. Porter Co. v. NLRB, 397 U.S. 99, 106 (1970). However, there exists a duty to enter into negotiations with "a spirit of sincerity and cooperation in a genuine effort to find a basis of accord" and "to refuse to do so is an unfair labor practice proscribed by Section 8(a)(5)." NLRB v. F. Strauss & Son, Inc., 536 F.2d 60, 63 (5th Cir. 1976), and cases cited therein. "[T]he ultimate issue whether the Company conducted its bargaining negotiations in good faith involves a finding of motive or state of mind which can only be inferred from circumstantial evidence." NLRB v. A.W. Thompson, Inc., 449 F.2d 1333, 1335 (5th Cir. 1971). "It is well settled that group medical benefits and insurance plans providing for these benefits are encompassed within the terms 'wages,' or 'conditions of employment' and, as such, are matters about which an employer is mandatorily required to bargain." Connecticut Light Co., 196 NLRB 967, 968 (1972), and cases cited therein. It is also settled that a strike caused by unfair labor practices is an unfair labor practice strike even if it also has economic objectives. NLRB v. Borg-Warner Corp., 236 F.2d 898, 907 (6th Cir. 1956), modified on other grounds 356 U.S. 342; NLRB v. Louisville Chair Co., 385 F.2d 922, 929 (6th Cir. 1967), cert. denied 390 U.S. 1013 (1968); NLRB v. Sea-Land Service, 356 F.2d 955, 966 (1st Cir. 1966), cert. denied 385 U.S. 900 (1966). An employer who hires a negotiator-attorney is not excused from the statutory requirement "to meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith." Lawrence Textile Shrinking Co., 235 NLRB 1178, 1179 (1978), and cases cited therein. "There remains on the employer the positive legal duty to meet and confer with the Union at reasonable times and places." NLRB v. Exchange Parts Co., 339 F.2d 829, 832 (5th Cir. 1965). Further, the law is settled that employees who strike in protest over their employer's unfair labor practices are entitled to reinstatement to their jobs on their unconditional offer to return to work, displacing if necessary any replacements hired during the strike. Mastro Plastics Corp. v. NLRB, 350 U.S. 270, 278 (1956); Daisy's Originals. Inc. of Miami, 187 NLRB 251 (1970), enfd. 468 F.2d 493 (5th Cir. 1972). Moreover, a strike is treated as an unfair labor practice strike if the employer's unfair labor practices were a contributing cause of the strike. Southern Pipe v. NLRB, 444 F.2d 340, 352 (5th Cir. 1971). And, a refusal to reinstate all unfair labor practice strikers, displacing replacements to the extent necessary, is itself discriminatory and violates Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. NLRB v. Mooney Aircraft Co., 366 F.2d 809, 812 (5th cir. 1966); NLRB v. Southland Cork Co., 342 F.2d 702, 708 (4th Cir. 1965),

Application of the above principles to the facts of this case convinces me that the Respondent has violated the Act substantially as alleged in the complaint.[27]

[27] Respondent rested at the conclusion of the General Counsel's case in Chief without offering any additional evidence.

Paragraph 10 of the complaint alleges that since about July 22, 1980, the Respondent failed and refused to negotiate with the Union over a health insurance contribution plan, a mandatory subject of collective bargaining. It is abundantly clear from the facts that Moore informed Jim Morford prior to entering into negotiations, that the Union wanted, inter alia, to "discuss a health and welfare cost program." At the first bargaining session on July 22, Moore reiterated the Union's interest in such a plan, proposing that an employer paid plan be negotiated in lieu of a first year wage increase. Morford's only response was to the effect that Respondent would study the Union's proposal and "get back." The Respondent's July 26 proposal makes no mention of a health and welfare program, and when Morford brought up the fact and stated at the second bargaining session on July 31 that the Respondent had ignored the Union's request, Morford responded that the proposal contained his "economic offer . . . and that is all that I have." The Union made several counterproposals, including, in lieu of first year hourly, mileage and load and unload increases, the Kansas State Building Trades, Construction Open End and Health and Welfare Program. While Moore did not have a copy of the plan (indeed none was available) it is significant that Morford did not request a copy, and his only response to Moore's counterproposal was, "[W]ell, we will look at it." The third and last meeting preceding the strike took place on August 15. In the meantime, the Union had received Respondent's second proposal which again lacks any response to the Union's proposal of a health and welfare plan. While Morford modified the proposal by increasing the weekly pension fund payments by $3 per week for each of the 3 years, and by decreasing his hourly wage proposal for the second year by 5 cents and the third year by 10 cents, he still failed to include anything covering health and welfare, and when reminded of it, responded "that is my economic offer. That is what I am prepared to offer." That a health and welfare plan was primary on the Union's list of negotiable items is clear. That it was not on the Respondent's list and the Respondent refused to discuss the subject is equally clear. Nor is there any substance to the Respondent's argument that Respondent insisted that all moneys available for economic improvement be used to improve employee's wages, and that therefore the parties disagreed on the "economic package," culminating in an impasse over economic issues. Respondent did indeed attempt to establish this theory, albeit unsuccessfully, through the cross-examination of Nicolay, regarding the bargaining session of July 31. The testimony cited in the Respondent's brief to support the position is on page 253 of the transcript:

> Q. Do you recall Mr. Morford saying anything about the company was concerned about the economic situation in the company generally, inflation, about the employee take-home pay?
>
> A. I recall that there was some discussion about how the economy had slowed down, but as to whether there was any concern over the employee take-home pay, I dont recall that Kansas Van expressed anything.
>
> Q. Do you recall them expressing or stating any thing with regard to why they were continuing to propose an hourly increase to the employee for the first year, and not a contribution for a health and welfare program?
>
> A. There was no justification given for that.
>
> Q. You said they said this was their economic package, their proposal included their economic package, is that right?
>
> A. Jim said, "you have my economic proposal."
>
> Q. Economic proposal, and that was in response to Mr. Moore's statement that their counterproposal included nothing for health and welfare?
>
> A. Yes. He said, "You haven't even addressed the issue." Jim said, "I am not prepared to discuss that right now. You have my economic proposal."

Thus, the record does not establish that Respondent insisted on an hourly wage increase the first year as a quid pro quo for a health and welfare plan. The Respondent was not disposed to either make an offer or discuss health and welfare insurance prior to the inception of the strike. I find therefore that even though the Union had other economic objectives when it struck on August 18, one of the reasons was the Respondent's failure to discuss and/or negotiate over a health insurance contribution plan in violation of Section 8(a)(5), and that the strike was caused by the Respondent's unfair labor practice as alleged in paragraphs 10 and 14 of the complaint.[28]

Paragraph 12 of the complaint alleges that since August 15, 1980, the Respondent has failed and refused to meet for the purpose of collective bargaining, which conduct prolonged the strike. The record shows that Moore attempted to set up bargaining sessions with Morford on August 18 and October 16 and 29 and that LaRue Moore called Morford on August 19 regarding a meeting to "work this whole mess out." On each occasion, Morford referred them to his attorney. During his October 29 conversation with Jim Morford, Moore informed Morford that he had "tried to call your attorney. He keeps stonewalling me. He will not return my telephone calls." As Moore went on to explain to Morford, it may not have been his fault that Haynes did not return the calls, but the ultimate responsibility for bargaining lay with Morford. Such is the law. NLRB v. Exchange Parts Co., supra; Lawrence Textile Shrinking Co., supra. By failing to either personally respond to the Union's request to meet, and/or by failing to arrange for its negotiator-attorney to respond to the request, the Respondent refused to bargain with the Union as alleged in paragraph 12 of the complaint, which conduct prolonged the unfair labor practice strike as alleged in paragraph 14.[29]

---

[28] The fact Respondent may have bargained in good faith with the Union commencing in February 1981, in no way excuses its unlawful conduct prior thereto.

[29] I do not conclude, as the General Counsel argues, that Moore's phone calls to Haynes' office constituted a request to bargain. In none of the calls did Moore request a meeting, and it was not shown at what point in time Haynes was actually engaged to negotiate on Respondent's behalf. As the aforementioned cases point out, the responsibility to respond to the Union's request to bargain lay in the Respondent.

The complaint alleges and the Respondent admits that, on December 18, the following employees who engaged in the strike made an unconditional offer to return to their former positions of employment:

James H. Hendricks	Basil Gibbs
Frank E. Bath, Jr.	Robert A. Nicolay
Daniel P. Jones	Sharon L. Coulter
Reuben Wabnum

It is alleged and admitted that on December 23 Respondent refused to reinstate them. Respondent contends they were economic strikers and had been permanently replaced prior to December 23. The law is clear that unfair labor practice strikers are entitled to reintstatement on their unconditional offer to return to work, displacing if necessary any replacements during the strike. The Respondent's refusal to reinstate them is discriminatory and violates Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.[30]

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act, and at all material times herein has been, and it now is, the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's employees in the following unit which is appropriate for collective-bargaining purposes within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All truck drivers, helpers and shop employees employed by Respondent, at its facility located at 220 North Quincy, Topeka, Kansas, but excluding the master mechanic, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

3. By failing and refusing to negotiate with the Union on the subject of a health contribution plan; and by failing and refusing to meet with the Union for the purpose of collective bargaining on or after August 15, 1980, as the exclusive representative of its employees in the above-described appropriate bargaining unit, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

4. The strike which commenced on August 18, 1980 was an unfair labor practice strike which was caused by, and prolonged by, Respondent's unfair labor practices.

5. About December 18, 1980, the following unfair labor practice strikers made an unconditional offer to return to work:

James H. Hendricks	Basil Gibbs
Frank E. Bath, Jr.	Robert A. Nicolay
Daniel P. Jones	Sharon L. Coulter
Reuben Wabnum

6. By failing and refusing to reinstate the above-named unfair labor practice strikers to their former positions of employment, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

7. The above-described unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom, and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. My recommended Order will require Respondent to bargain in good faith with the Union on request, including the subject of a health insurance contribution plan. I shall also recommend that the Respondent be required to offer the unfair labor practice strikers named above immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if such jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent jobs, without prejudice to their seniority rights and privileges previously enjoyed, discharging, if necessary, any replacements hired in their former jobs, and make whole such employees for any loss of earnings suffered by reason of their unlawful denials of reinstatement, from the date of their unlawful denials of reinstatement to the date on which they are fully reinstated or declined reinstatement, less their respective net earnings during such period, with backpay computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), plus interest as set forth in Isis Plumbing Co, 138 NLRB 716 (1962), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

[Recommended Order omitted from publication.]

[30] I have reconsidered my ruling rejecting G.C. Exh. 19(a), as requested in the General Counsel's brief, and reaffirm my ruling. It is clear that Respondent considered Gibbs, Coulter, and Wabnum to be strikers even though Moore's testimony leaves some doubt. However, their status, whether as temporary, part-time or full-time employees, can best be determined at the compliance stage. See Marlene Industries Corp., 255 NLRB (1981); United Maintenance Co., 214 NLRB 529 fn. 22 (1974).

Motor Rim & Wheel Service, Inc. and Freight Checkers, Clerical Employees and Helpers, Local 856, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America. Case 32–CA–3470

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND HUNTER

On 31 March 1982 Administrative Law Judge Richard J. Boyce issued the attached decision. The Respondent and the General Counsel filed exceptions and supporting briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order, as modified.

The dissent disagrees with the judge's interpretation of Arizona Electric Power Cooperative, 250 NLRB 1132, 1134 fn. 10 (1980), with respect to the Respondent's duty to bargain over the continued inclusion in the unit of Lisa White as confidential secretary. The Board noted there that the respondent's duty to bargain concerning managerial employees, "would terminate on the expiration of the current contract, provided that the Respondent took appropriate steps at that time to contest their continued inclusion in the unit." Ibid. at 1134.

We agree with the judge that the Respondent simply did not take the requisite appropriate steps to remove the position from the unit prior to executing the next collective-bargaining agreement. The record discloses that the Respondent, at most, proposed a meeting to discuss removing White from the unit. At that meeting the Respondent argued that White was performing the duties of a confidential employee and therefore fell within the "confidential" exclusion in the contract. The Union took the position that White was not a confidential employee and that it would be improper for any confidential employee hired by the Respondent to perform unit work. The meeting ended without any resolution of the matter. The matter was discussed briefly once again during negotiations without any resolution of the matter. Thereafter the Respondent did nothing toward removing White's position from the unit until after it had executed a new collective-bargaining agreement on 20 December, except to inform White on 17 December (but not the Union) that it planned such a move.

Neither the bare proposal to remove the position from the unit nor informing an employee that it plans in the future to effectuate the removal constitutes the "appropriate steps" necessary to free the Respondent of its obligation to bargain over the unit position. It would have been a simple matter for the Respondent to announce to the Union that White was confidential and state unequivocally that she was being moved from the unit prior to signing the new agreement. The duty to bargain would have expired at that time.

The Respondent contends in its exceptions that the make-whole remedy ordered as to employees Sutton is inappropriate. The Respondent relies, inter alia, upon a stipulation entered into during the unfair labor practice hearing regarding Sutton's employment history. In regard to the stipulation, the Respondent's attorney sought and obtained from the General Counsel agreement that the General Counsel was not contending that any liability should be imposed on the Respondent by virtue of Sutton's quitting her employment in September 1981. In light of that agreement, we grant the Respondent's exception to the make-whole remedy ordered for Sutton to the extent that it provides for Sutton's reinstatement.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Motor Rim & Wheel Service, Inc., San Leandro, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(d).

"(d) Make Kathleen Sutton whole for any loss of pay, benefits, or other rights and privileges occasioned by her being bumped, which was a direct consequence of the Respondent's unlawful treatment of the position of confidential secretary as outside the unit, with backpay as provided in footnote 10 of the judge's decision."

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

MEMBER HUNTER, dissenting.

Contrary to my colleagues, I would reverse the judge and find that the Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by removing White, the confidential secretary, from the bargaining unit.

My disagreement with my colleagues lies primarily with their interpretation, consistent with that of the judge, of Arizona Electric Power Cooperative, 250 NLRB 1132 (1980), and its application to the facts of the instant case. In Arizona Electic Power, the Board found that the respondent employer violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by, inter alia, withdrawing recognition from the union for the load dispatcher categories, which were covered by an existing collective-bargaining agreement. Agreeing with the judge that the load dispatchers were not supervisors or managerial employees, but also noting that the lead load dispatcher was stipulated to be a supervisor, the Board based its finding on the ground that no party is privileged to alter unilaterally the scope of an established bargaining unit during the term of a collective-bargaining agreement. However, regarding the duty to bargain about an otherwise excluded classification once the collective-bargaining agreement has expired, the Board stated at fn. 10:

> Of course, were the load dispatchers found to be supervisors or managerial employees, Respondent's duty to bargain concerning them would terminate on the expiration of the current contract, provided that Respondent took appropriate steps at that time to contest their continued inclusion in the unit. In that regard, because Respondent's duty to bargain concerning the lead load dispatcher is based entirely on his voluntary inclusion in the unit, this duty will not extend past the expiration of the current contract unless the parties again voluntarily agree at the time to include him in the unit. [Emphasis added.]

In the instant case, the judge found that under Arizona Electric Power the Respondent could have removed White—whom the judge found to be a confidential employee—from the unit at the time the preceding collective-bargaining agreement expired on 31 May 1980,[1] or during the subsequent hiatus until execution of a successor collective-bargaining agreement on 20 December. The judge further found, however, that although the Respondent expressed its desire to remove White from the unit prior to 20 December, it did not take unilateral action to that effect until after the new agreement was in place, i.e., when employee Halla assumed White's duties on 1 January 1981. Regarding footnote 10 of Arizona Electric Power, which he viewed as having "elements . . . in conflict," the judge interpreted it to mean that, on the expiration of a collective-bargaining agreement, the status quo inclusion of otherwise excluded classifications continues "absent the taking of 'appropriate steps' to the contrary." Presumably, the Respondent's conduct after 31 May and prior to 20 December did not, in the jduge's view, constitute appropriate steps to the contrary. My colleagues now agree with that interpretation and expressly find that the Respondent's pre-20 December conduct did not free the Respondent of its obligation to bargain over White's position.

I read footnote 10 of Arizona Electric Power differently than my colleagues do, and I would come to an opposite conclusion in this case. In my view, footnote 10 means that an employer's duty to bargain concerning an otherwise excluded classification extends past the expiration of a collective-bargaining agreement only if the parties voluntarily agree to again include that classification in the unit. Thus, given the judge's finding that White was a confidential employee, the Respondent's duty to bargain concerning White's position ceased on the expiration of the collective-bargaining agreement on 31 May. Although the Respondent concededly did not remove White's position from the unit until 17 December—i.e., when the Respondent told White that her "position was being taken out of the Union" and that Halla would become a "personal confidential secretary"—there is no direct evidence that the parties voluntarily agreed to include White's position in the unit during the term of the next collective-bargaining agreement.

Further, even assuming that the majority's interpretation of footnote 10 is correct that the status quo continues past the expiration of a collective-bargaining agreement unless the party seeking a departure from the status quo takes appropriate steps to the contrary, I would find that here the Respondent did take appropriate steps to change the status quo before the execution of the successor agreement on 20 December. Thus, as found by the judge, the Respondent expressed to the Union its desire to remove White from the unit in a telephone conversation on 31 July, at a meeting on that subject on 18 August, and possibly also at a bargaining session on 1 October. Such conduct, together with the Respondent's conduct in informing White on 17 December that her position was being removed from the unit, evidences both the intent to take unilateral action, as well as the unilateral action itself, before the execution of the successor agreement. Under the circumstances, I would find that the Respondent had no duty to bargain about White's position on 17 December, and that it therefore did not act unlawfully in removing her from the bargaining unit at that time.

[1] All dates hereafter are in 1980 unless otherwise indicated.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to recognize and bargain with Freight Checkers, Clerical Employees and Helpers, Local 856, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America as the exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate office clerical unit, which includes the confidential secretary, and WE WILL NOT refuse to apply the current collective-bargaining agreement with the Union, which is effective through 31 May 1983 to all of those employees.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL bargain collectively with the above-named Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of all employees in the aforesaid unit by restoring Lisa White to the position she formerly occupied, now titled confidential secretary, should the Union so request and she be willing; by restoring that position to the unit; and by applying the terms of the collective-bargaining agreement to her or whomever occupies that position.

WE WILL make whole Lisa White for any loss of pay, benefits, or other rights and privileges occasioned by our failure to restore her to the position she formerly occupied on her return from leave.

WE WILL make whole Nancy Halla, and anyone else who has occupied the position of confidential secretary, for any loss of pay, benefits, or other rights and privileges occasioned by our unlawful treatment of that position as outside the unit.

WE WILL make Kathleen Sutton whole for any loss of pay, benefits, or other rights and privileges occasioned by her being bumped, which was a direct consequence of our unlawful treatment of the position of confidential secretary as outside the unit.

WE WILL make the Union whole, with interest, for any loss of dues and fees occasioned by our unlawful treatment of the position of confidential secretary as outside the unit.

MOTOR RIM & WHEEL SERVICE, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD J. BOYCE, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was tried before me in Oakland, California, on December 14, 1981, and January 18, 1982.

The charge was filed March 12, 1981, and amended April 29, by Freight Checkers, Clerical Employees and Helpers, Local 856, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (Union). The complaint issued April 30, and alleges in essence that Motor Rim & Wheel Service, Inc. (Respondent) has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act (Act) since January 1, 1981, by unilaterally removing a position from the bargaining unit.

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, a California corporation with headquarters in Montebello and a branch in San Leandro, is engaged in the nonretail sale of automotive wheels and related items. It annually sells to and purchases from outside California goods and materials of a value exceeding $50,000, and thus is an employer engaged in commerce within Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

The Union is a labor organization within Section 2(5) of the Act.

IV. THE ALLEGED MISCONDUCT

A. Facts

The Union has represented the office clerical employees at Respondent's San Leandro branch since 1962. The current bargaining agreement covering those employees was executed December 20, 1980, went into effect the preceding June 1, and runs through May 31, 1983.[1] That agreement, in common with each of seven predecessors since 1962, contains this clause:

> The following classifications of employees are specifically excluded from the coverage of this Agreement:
> (a) Confidential employees, supervisory and professional employees . . . .

Lisa White was the secretary for the San Leandro branch manager from March 1978 through December 17, 1980, when she took maternity leave. She was classified as a stenographer and considered in the bargaining unit. On January 1, 1981, Nancy Halla succeeded to White's exact duties. Halla, however, was given the title of "confidential secretary" and deemed by Respondent to fall within the above clause excluding confidential employees from the coverage of the agreement—and, by implication, from the unit. Respondent never before had so titled or treated any of the clerical employees at the San Leandro branch.

[1] The agreement defines the unit as "all employees covered by this agreement." It thereafter lists three groups of classifications: group I, consisting of telephone operator, general clerk, accounts payable clerk, accounts receivable clerk, and card inventory clerk; group II, consisting of comptometer operator, stenographer, assistant price clerk, commission report payroll clerk, and purchasing clerk; and group III, consisting of lead office clerk. It is concluded that this is an appropriate unit for purposes of the Act.

The parties have stipulated that, as a matter of law, Halla indeed did become a confidential employee upon assuming White's duties. Although a parallel stipulation concerning White is not in the record, it would be anomalous—given the Halla stipulation and the unquestioned coincidence of their duties—not to regard her as likewise having been a confidemtial employee before her leave. White therefore shall be so regarded for purposes of this decision.[2]

San Leandro Branch Manager Stan De Lima, informed White by memorandum dated October 14 that her request for maternity leave had been approved. He assured her, in the same memorandum that she would be replaced "in [her] position as secretary on a temporary basis only, pending [her] return to work." But then, December 17—the day before White took leave—De Lima told her that her "position was being taken out of the union"; that Halla, as her replacement, had agreed to become his "personal confidential secretary"; and that, when White returned, she would be an inventory clerk. Halla was then an inventory clerk. That is a bargaining-unit classification.

White consequently was not restored to her former duties upon returning to work in March 1981, instead "bumping" Kathleen Sutton, an inventory clerk. As an inventory clerk, White received 12 cents per hour less than she would have received had she been restored to her pre-leave position. Halla meanwhile continued under the title of confidential secretary, performing White's former duties. Sutton, hired in May 1978, was more senior than Halla, who was hired in April 1979. White, as earlier noted, began in March 1978. The agreement provides:

> In the event of a layoff, . . . regular employees shall be . . . laid off based upon their seniority and qualifications to perform the work.

When White was hired in 1978, the branch manager at that time, W. E. Wall, asked her to be his confidential secretary and leave the unit. She agreed, and requested that the Union remove her from membership. The Union opposed the idea, however, and it was dropped. De Lima made the same proposal to White when he succeeded Wall. She squelched it, saying that "the Union benefitted [her] better."

Nothing further happened in that regard until July 31, 1980, when Respondent's attorney Robert Kristoff telephoned Union President Ben Leal proposing that they "get together to discuss removing White from the bargaining unit, because she [is] a confidential employee." Leal agreed to a meeting, but said it was the "Union's position" that all work of a confidential nature was done at Respondent's headquarters in Montebello, and that White therefore "was not a confidential employee and would have to stay in the bargaining unit."

The agreed-upon meeting was held August 18 between Kristoff and Kathi Leal, a business representative for the Union and Ben's daughter. Kristoff stated to her, much as he had to Ben, that Respondent wanted one of its clerical positions to be accorded confidential status, outside the unit. Leal asked what the duties of the position would be. Kristoff answered,"The same as Lisa White's." He elaborated that:

> [White] was performing confidential duties, and that, as such, she could be removed from the bargaining unit, because confidential employees were excluded from the bargaining unit under the present contract.

Leal, first disagreeing with Kristoff, interrupted the meeting to telephone the shop steward at the San Leandro branch, obtaining a list of White's duties. Returning to Kristoff, she recited the various things White did besides typing, including payroll, stock records, billing, and catalog sheets. Leal claims to have declared that while it perhaps would be acceptable for the proposed position to embody typing, it would not be "right" that it entail "all these other items" of unit work. Kristoff testified, on the other hand, that Leal objected to the performance of any unit work by a nonunit confidential secretary.[3] In any case, Kristoff countered that "nothing in the contract . . . said she could not do bargaining unit work." Leal held firm, and the meeting ended with Kristoff saying he would be "getting back in touch."

The immediate past agreement expired May 31, 1980. Bargaining leading to the current agreement took place September 16, October 1, and November 4. Agreement in principle was reached October 1, the November 4 meeting being for resolution of nonsubstantive technical details. As previously mentioned, the agreement was executed December 20, retroactive to June 1. According to Kathi Leal, the subject of the confidential secretary came up in none of these meetings, nor in any other conversations during the negotiation and execution of the new agreement. Kristoff and Kenneth Ballard, Respondent's chief spokesperson, testified, however, that Ballard broached the matter during the October 1 meeting, that the resulting discussion consumed about 5 minutes in an all day session, and that the exchange was the same as it had been August 18 between Kristoff and Leal.[4]

Upon succeeding to White's duties, Halla wrote the Union, "requesting a withdrawal from [membership] effective 1/1/81, in order to take another position at my employment." The current agreement contains a conventional 31-day union-security clause. This prompted Kathi Leal to telephone Halla, ascertaining that, apart from the change in title, her job was identical to White's. Leal then called De Lima, obtaining confirmation that Halla had been made his confidential secretary. De Lima added that because of this development White would not be restored to her former duties, but instead would "bump" someone other than Halla when she returned. This was the Union's first intimation that the position had been removed from the unit.

[2] Respondent, in its brief, urges White's confidential status. White credibly testified that about 20 percent of her day, before going on leave, consisted of "typing and whatever the demands were from" the branch manager, the balance being taken up with bargaining unit functions of a plainly nonconfidential character.

[3] The result herein does not require resolution of this conflict.

[4] See fn. 3.

On January 9, in the aftermath of the conversation just described, the Union filed a grievance, "protest[ing] the change of status for Halla from collective bargaining [unit] to management." A grievance meeting followed on February 6. Kathi Leal asked where Respondent "got the right to come in and change someone's title and [thereby] remove them from the bargaining unit." Kristoff countered that Respondent had "every right to have a confidential secretary," and that she could "continue to perform the same amount of unit work that she had previously performed." Leal assertedly said that she could consent to the confidential secretary's "tak[ing] the typing" and doing payroll without losing nonunit status, whereas Kristoff testified that Leal insisted that the position embrace no unit work.[5] Regardless, the meeting failed to bring a resolution.

On March 20, White having bumped Sutton rather than Halla, the Union filed another grievance, this time protesting that Respondent had breached the seniority clause of the agreement. The parties presently agreed to hold that grievance "in abeyance" pending disposition of the present unfair labor practice charge, which, as earlier mentioned, had been filed March 12.

Nothing further having happened with regard to either grievance, the Union informed Respondent by letter dated December 10, 1981, that it "is withdrawing the two grievances," instead "pursu[ing] its remedies through" the present case.

B. Conclusion

Summary

(a) All of Respondent's agreements with the Union have contained a clause excluding confidential employees from their coverage and, by implication, from the unit.

(b) Although White was a confidential employee during the approximately 2-1/2 years she was on the payroll before her leave, Respondent never regarded her or anyone else as a confidential employee until Halla assumed her duties on January 1, 1981.

(c) Respondent's removal of the White/Halla position from the unit happened without union consent, or even prior knowledge, some 11 days after execution of the current agreement and 7 months into its retroactively defined term.

It is concluded in these circumstances, because of compelling Board concern for the stability of bargaining relationships, that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) substantially as alleged. Carolina Telephone Co., 258 NLRB 1387 (1981); Arizona Electric Power Cooperative, 250 NLRB 1132 (1980).

Given the exclusionary clause in the expired agreement and White's confidential status, Respondent properly could have removed her from the unit, without union consent, at the time of expiration; or, apparently, during the subsequent hiatus until execution of the current agreement. Arizona Electric Power Cooperative, 250 NLRB at 1133, 1134 fn. 10.[6] But, while such a desire was expressed to Ben Leal on July 31, to Kathi Lenl on August 18, and possibly during the October 1 bargaining session, Respondent, seemingly deterred by a belief that union consent was a necessary precondition, even between agreements, neither evinced an intent to take unilateral action nor took such action until after the current agreement was in place.

Rejected is Respondent's argument, based on Boeing Co., 212 NLRB 116 (1974), that the removal of Halla from the unit was a permissible rectification of a mistake in classification. Wall's and De Lima's overtures to White to be a confidential secretary, outside the unit; Kristoff's July and August appeals to Ben and Kathi Leal; and Ballard's professed remarks to the Union on October 1, all belie a mistake of fact licensing such conduct as a corrective measure.

Rejected, as well, are Respondent's contentions that its conduct was sanctioned by an impasse in bargaining over the issue, by waiver based on Kathi Leal's posture as concerns the issue, and by waiver implicit in assorted clauses in the current agreement. The questions of impasse and of Kathi Leal's conduct are irrelevant to the bedrock issue whether Respondent took appropriate action at the right time, i.e., before the current agreement was executed. And, regarding the argument of waiver based on contract language, what could be more enabling than the literal exclusion of confidential employees from the unit? Yet, as the cited authorities show, even that does not permit unconsented alteration of the unit during the term of an agreement.

Conclusion of Law

By removing the confidential secretary from the bargaining unit, as found herein, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusion of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[7]

[5] See fn. 3, supra.

[6] Fn. 10 states at one point that an employer's duty to bargain concerning people in excluded classifications who nonetheless have been treated as in the unit "would terminate on the expiration of the current contract, provided that [the employer] took appropriate steps at that time to contest their continued inclusion in the unit." The same footnote later states that the duty to bargain concerning such people "will not extend past the expiration of the current contract unless the parties again voluntarily agree at that time to include [them] in the unit." The question thus arises whether the burden is on the party seeking departure from the status quo to take positive action, or on the party seeking its continuation to procure express agreement to that effect. If the latter is so, the requirement was not satisfied in this case, and White, not to mention Halla, was outside the unit covered by the current agreement. To read the elements of fn. 10 as in conflict is to be avoided, however, if those elements plausibly can be reconciled by an alternative reading. Applying this basic tenet of construction, it is concluded that the intended meaning of fn. 10 is that agreement to continuation of the status quo is to be inferred absent the taking of "appropriate steps" to the contrary.

[7] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

ORDER

Respondent, Motor Rim & Wheel Service, Inc., San Leandro, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to recognize and bargain with Freight Checkers, Clerical Employees and Helpers, Local 856, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (Union) as the exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate office clerical unit, which includes the confidential secretary, and from refusing to apply the current collective-bargaining agreement with the Union, which is effective through May 31, 1983, to all of those employees.

(b) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take this affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of all employees in the aforesaid unit by restoring Lisa White to the position she formerly occupied, now titled confidential secretary, should the Union so request and she be willing; by restoring that position to the unit; and by applying the terms of the collective-bargaining agreement to her or whomever occupies that position.

(b) Make whole Lisa White for any loss of pay, benefits or other rights and privileges occasioned by Respondent's failure to restore her to the position she formerly occupied upon her return from leave.[8]

(c) Make whole Nancy Halla, and anyone else who has occupied the position of confidential secretary, for any loss of pay, benefits, or other rights and privileges occasioned by Respondent's unlawful treatment of that position as outside the unit.[9]

(d) Offer to Kathleen Sutton immediate and full reinstatement to the position she occupied before being bumped by Lisa White, or, if that position no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent one, and make her whole for any loss of pay, benefits, or other rights and privileges occasioned by her being bumped, which was a direct consequence of Respondent's unlawful treatment of the confidential secretary as outside the unit.[10]

(e) Make the Union whole, with interest, for any loss of dues and fees occasioned by Respondent's unlawful treatment of the position of confidential secretary as outside the unit.[11]

(f) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(g) Post at its San Leandro, California facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[12] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 32, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(h) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

---

[8] Backpay shall be computed with interest as prescribed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See generally, Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[9] See fn. 8, supra.

[10] Backpay shall be computed in accordance with F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950). Interest shall be computed as set forth in the fn. 8, supra.

[11] Dura-Vent Corp., 257 NLRB 430, 433 (1981). Interest shall be computed as prescribed in fn. 8, supra.

[12] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Omsco, Inc. and Ricky Taylor and Albert Smith.
Cases 23–CA–8185 and 23–CA–8300

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

On 24 February 1982 Administrative Law Judge Burton Litvack issued the attached decision. The General Counsel and the Respondent filed exceptions and supporting briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.[1]

We agree with the judge's finding that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by interrogating employee Weaver and by threatening employee Ricky Taylor with discharge if he should engage in union activity.[2] We also agree with his recommended dismissal of the complaint allegation that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act when it laid off seven night-shift trepanning employees 6 October 1981. For the reasons set forth below, however, we do not adopt the judge's finding that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by laying off an eighth night-shift trepanning employee, Ricky Taylor, on the same date.

The Respondent is engaged in the manufacture and sale of equipment utilized in the exploration of oil and natural gas. Eighty percent of the Respondent's business involves the production of tubular steel collars used as drilling weights. Part of the drilling collar production process involves passing steel bars through a trepanning machine which drills a hole lengthwise through each bar. A trepanning operator and helper team to staff each machine.

At the time of the alleged unfair labor practices, the Respondent's manufacturing operations entailed two 12-hour shifts. In the trepanning department, 10 employees operated 5 machines during the first shift (5 a.m. through 5 p.m.) and 8 employees worked 4 machines during the second shift.

In mid-September 1980[3] discussions concerning union organization began among trepanning employees. Although the day shift was involved, the majority of union discussions occurred during the night shift. On 26 September a group of seven to nine of the Respondent's second-shift employees met during the first shift in the office of a union representative. Thereafter, second-shift trepan operator Ricky Taylor and helper Alfred Garrison distributed authorization cards on nonworktime either in the plant parking lot or on a public street in the vicinity of the Respondent's facility. When soliciting signatures, Taylor asked low-level supervisor Sholar to sign an authorization card. Subsequently, Sholar told Taylor that Taylor could be "fired for union activity" and that he had been talking too much about the union on company time. There is no credible evidence that the Respondent's officials observed or suspected any other second-shift employees of engaging in union activities.

Between 26 September and 6 October the Union received 14 authorization cards from second-shift employees, including all but helper William Galloway among the 8 trepanning department employees. In the same period, 15 first-shift employees signed cards.

On 6 October Respondent's president Kess Verhuel announced the layoff of six second-shift trepanning employees and two yard hands. Verhuel told the employees that the reasons for the layoff were low production and low supply of steel. Additionally, Verhuel told the employees that all of them had performed good work and that he would give each of them a good job recommendation.

The judge correctly found that the General Counsel had failed to establish as part of his prima facie case that the Respondent had knowledge or suspicion of union activities by any alleged discriminatee other than Taylor. In addition, the judge found that the Respondent had actually relied on its asserted reason for the layoff of the night shift, which reason was economically based and justified.

[1] The judge failed to provide in his recommended Order that the Respondent shall cease and desist from engaging in such conduct "in any like or related manner." We shall modify the Order accordingly.

[2] Supervisor Sholar's statement to employee Taylor that he "could be fired for union activity . . . [and that] employees had been talking too much about the union . . . on company time" was a classic threat within the meaning of Sec. 8(a)(1). Our dissenting colleague's attempt to put a more venial gloss on Sholar's conduct is unavailing. There is no justification for distinguishing between a threat to discharge an employee for engaging in union activity and a threat to discharge an employee for violating an unlawful overly broad no-solicitation rule. The latter threat encompasses the former. There is also no justification for our colleague's evaluation of Sholar's statement by any standard other than the Board's traditional objective test of whether the conduct reasonably tended to interfere with an employee's exercise of Sec. 7 rights. By this test, Taylor's mistaken subjective belief that Sholar was not a statutory supervisor has no relevance in determining the legality of Sholar's conduct.

Member Hunter also would dismiss the 8(a)(1) allegation that Supervisor Taylor interrogated employee Weaver because, in his view, the interrogation was de minimis. Since we find that the Respondent threatened employee Taylor, we do not need to decide whether the interrogation of employee Weaver, standing alone, would be de minimis.

[3] All dates are in 1980 unless otherwise stated.

In so finding, the judge specifically credited Respondent's witness D. C. Ogden, who testified that the layoff was due to the depletion of the Respondent's on-hand stock of steel bars along with a dearth of incoming steel in the immediate future.

As to Taylor, however, the judge determined that the General Counsel had established a prima facie case. The judge relied on the Respondent's actual knowledge of Taylor's union activity from the date of his card solicitation of Supervisor Sholar and on Sholar's subsequent threat of discharge that violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Although the judge found the Respondent's defense of business justification for the layoff to be legitimate he nevertheless found it to be insufficient to rebut the inference of discrimination in Taylor's layoff. Specifically, the judge found that in the absence of any evidence about the factors considered in selecting Taylor for layoff, the Respondent had failed to meet its burden of proof that Taylor would have been laid off notwithstanding his union activities.

Contrary to the judge, we find that the Respondent did not discharge Taylor for engaging in union activity because we disagree with the judge's determination that the record fails to establish what factors were considered in selecting Taylor for layoff. Notwithstanding the Respondent's unlawful threat to Taylor of discharge for engaging in union activity, the credible and uncontradicted evidence shows that the layoff of the night-shift trepanners was due to the Respondent's shortage of on-hand and incoming steel bars. In addition, contrary to the judge's finding, there is evidence that the Respondent utilized a basic seniority system in the layoff of the night-shift trepanners. In this context, the judge failed to consider additional testimony by Ogden wherein he stated that when he informed Verhuel of the Respondent's inventory problem, Verhuel specifically requested a list of the names and dates of hire of the night-shift trepanners. It is undisputed that the Respondent laid off all but the most senior shift trepanning operator and his helper, both of whom had signed union cards.[4]

Based on the foregoing, we find that the Respondent has rebutted whatever prima facie inference of unlawful motivation might be drawn from timing, the Respondent's knowledge of Taylor's union activity, and the threat based on that activity. In sum, (1) the Respondent had a justifiable business reason for laying off its night shift; (2) the Respondent followed a basic seniority system in implementing the layoff; and, (3) although Taylor was laid off with the other night-shift employees, there is no evidence that an employee junior to him in his position on the shift was retained. Consequently, there is no showing that the Respondent treated Taylor disparately. Accordingly, we hereby dismiss the complaint allegation that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) when it laid off employee Ricky Taylor.

[4] Having found that the decision to restrict the layoff to the second-shift trepanners was lawful, we find comparisons of first- and second-shift seniority irrelevant. In any event Taylor was senior to only one first-shift operator, Joe Weaver.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge as modified below and orders that the Respondent, Omsco, Inc., Houston, Texas, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Delete paragraphs 1(a) and 2(a) and (b) and reletter the subsequent paragraphs.

2. Insert the following as paragraph 1(c).

"(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act."

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

MEMBER HUNTER, dissenting.

My colleagues have adopted two 8(a)(1) violations found by the judge. They agree with the judge's findings that Foreman Sholar threatened employee R. Taylor with discharge for his union activities, and that Supervisor J. Taylor unlawfully interrogated employee Weaver. I cannot join in these findings. I would find no 8(a)(1) violation in Sholar's comments and, in all the circumstances, I would find Supervisor Taylor's comments de minimis. Thus, I would dismiss the complaint in its entirety and I dissent from my colleagues' failure to do so.

Regarding Sholar's comments to employee Taylor, I note that Taylor was one of the key employee organizers. He solicited a number of employees to sign cards and he even asked Sholar, who the parties stipulated was a supervisor but who Taylor thought was an employee, to sign a card. Subsequently Sholar called Taylor into his office and told Taylor, "[W]e could be fired for union activity . . . that we had been talking too much about the union . . . on company time." Sholar said Taylor needed to keep everyone quiet about the union on company time. Taylor responded that nobody had talked about the Union on company time and, if Sholar wanted to discuss the subject further, he would have to meet Taylor at the end of the shift. The conversation ended. The judge found this a "blatant" threat of discharge notwithstanding that Taylor did not think Sholar was a supervisor.

My first problem with the judge's analysis is that I do not see this as a "blatant" threat of discharge for union activity. Such a conclusion reads the statement too broadly.[1] Rather, Sholar's statement must be tied into his admonition about when Taylor could solicit for the Union. I read the statement as a threat of discharge if Taylor solicited at the "wrong" time. So one has to look at Sholar's "time" admonition. Here, Sholar pegged his prohibition to "company time." That term has historically been considered too broad a prohibition on solicitation activity. But Taylor responded to that admonition with a comment that he knew that, off his shift, he could solicit. However, "company time" unless further qualified (and it was not here) could still encompass breaks, when employees can solicit. Therefore, this is not a "blatant" threat, as the judge found, but an overly broad no-solicitation rule backed up by a threat of discharge for violating it. Ordinarily, I would find this an 8(a)(1) statement, except for the unique circumstances that Taylor did not think this statement came from a supervisor. An employee's subjective reaction to an employer's statement is typically not to be considered an element of weighing an 8(a)(1) violation but attention must be paid to particular factual circumstances in our assessment of whether a statement was coercive. Here, comment was made to an employee by a person not thought to be a supervisor by the employee. The employee's retort clearly indicates he discerned no coercive impact in the statement. Coupled with an apparent lack of evidence that Taylor repeated the comment to any other employee, e.g., one who knew Sholar to be a supervisor, I cannot in the circumstances find an 8(a)(1) violation in this statement.

Regarding the second comment found to be in violation of Section 8(a)(1), I note that, at the outset of employee interest in the Union, employee Weaver beckoned to Supervisor Taylor as Taylor walked by Weaver's machine. Weaver asked Taylor, "What was all this bulls—t about" the Union. Taylor said he did not know. At some later point, Taylor went to Weaver's machine and, according to Weaver, asked Weaver "if [he] knew who was behind it. He didn't say behind what or nothing else. And I told him no." According to Weaver, Taylor then went to Plant Superintendent Butler and told him "[Weaver] don't know."

[1] My colleagues claim that the discussion which follows attempts to put "a more venial gloss" on Sholar's statement. Rather, the following discussion attempts to analyze his statement more closely and carefully than either the judge or my colleagues have chosen to do.

The judge found this an 8(a)(1) interrogation. He found so even though he concluded that Weaver initiated the incident and that Taylor did not accompany his question with coercive conduct. Additionally, he found that Taylor left the impression that possible reprisals would be taken against the individuals about whom Taylor sought information.

In excepting, the Respondent, inter alia, argues that Weaver and Taylor were good friends and worked closely together. This point was not touched on by the judge. It also raises the point that there was no reference to the Union in Taylor's question. While there may have been an interrogation here, I do not think this one possible 8(a)(1) violation warrants a remedial order. In so concluding I note that I would dismiss all other allegations against the Respondent; any interrogation here was ultimately sparked by an employee's questions of his own supervisor about union activities; and there is an allegation that the two were friends. In these circumstances, I would dismiss this incident as de minimis.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT warn employees that they could be discharged for engaging in union or other protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT interrogate employees as to the union activities, membership, and sympathies of their fellow employees.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

OMSCO, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

BURTON LITVACK, Administrative Law Judge. This matter was heard before me in Houston, Texas, on July 28 and 29, 1981. On January 27, 1981, the Regional Director for Region 23 of the National Labor Relations Board (the Board) issued an order consolidating cases, a consolidated complaint, and a notice of hearing, based on an original and amended unfair labor practice charge in Case 23–CA–8185, filed on October 9, 1980,[1] and January 26, 1981, respectively, by Ricky Taylor, an individual, and on an unfair labor practice charge in Case 23–CA–8300, filed on January 6, 1980, by Albert Smith, an individual, alleging that Omsco, Inc. (Respondent) engaged in acts and conduct violative of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act. Respondent filed an answer denying the commission of any unfair labor practices. At the hearing, counsel for the General Counsel was permitted to amend the consolidated complaint by withdrawing the name of an alleged discriminatee. All parties were afforded full opportunity to offer relevant evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to submit posthearing briefs. Therefore, based on the entire record, the posthearing briefs, and on my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a Texas corporation with an office and principal place of business located in Houston, Texas, where it is engaged in the manufacture of products utilized in the oil and gas exploration and development industry. During the 12-month period immediately preceding the issuance of the consolidated complaint, a representative period, Respondent purchased and received at its Houston, Texas facility goods, products, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from suppliers located outside the State of Texas.

Respondent admits, and I find, that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

Respondent admits, and I find, that United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO–CLC (the Union) is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. ISSUES

1. About October 6, 1980, did Respondent lay off employees Ricky Taylor, Alfred N. Garrison, Marion Keith Bruce, Albert Smith, David Vitela, William J. Galloway, James Duffy, and Ollie Rogers in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act?

2. About September 30, 1980, did Respondent tell an employee that he could be fired for engaging in union activities on company time in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act?

3. About September 30, 1980, did Respondent interrogate an employee concerning the identity of Respondent's employees who were engaged in union activities in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act?

[1] Unless otherwise stated, all relevant dates and events occurred in 1980.

IV. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Facts

The record discloses that Respondent, a State of Texas corporation, was established in 1948 as Oil Field Machine and Supply Company; that on July 1, 1975, its assets were sold to, and it became a wholly owned subsidiary of, a Canadian company, Bralorn Resources; and that upon the sale Respondent's name was changed to its present one. At its Houston, Texas plant, Respondent is engaged in the manufacture and sale of equipment utilized in the exploration for oil and natural gas, of which the production and sale of steel weights, called drilling collars, accounts for approximately 80 percent of Respondent's business. The record further discloses that a drilling collar is a round or tubular shaped piece of strengthened steel of various diameters,[2] with a hole through the center,[3] weighing in excess of 1-1/2 tons, and precisely 31.6 feet in length; that while drilling for deep deposits of oil or natural gas, pressure must be constantly exerted upon the drilling bit to force it into the ground; and that to accomplish this, the drilling collars are used as weights, with at least 21 collars "strung" together and placed directly above the bit. In manufacturing these drilling collars and other equipment, Respondent employs approximately 80 workers, who work at its plant in two daily 12-hour shifts. Kess Verhuel is the president of Respondent, and D. C. Ogden is the treasurer.

According to Ogden, once the steel bars which Respondent uses in its manufacturing process are received by the plant, the bars undergo a straightening process to ensure that the steel "runs true." If the steel has been sold, the requisite bars are immediately put through the "trepanning" process wherein the holes, which are cut to specified diameters, are drilled through the bar lengthwise. Next, the bar is placed on a threadmill which threads both ends of the hole. Finally, if ordered by the customer, special machine work may be done on the collars.[4] As are most of the manufacturing procedures,[5] the trepanning process is performed on both the day and night shifts. The record establishes that there are five trepanning machines in this department; that, at least, as of October 1, all were operated during the first shift but just four were run on the second shift; that two employ-

[2] There are 26 different diameters of drilling collars, ranging from 4 to 10 inches. To ensure that its drilling collars are strong enough to withstand the incredible heat and pressure generated during the drilling process, Respondent purchases and uses for its collars specially ordered heat-treated alloy steel. The steel is received by Respondent, shaped by the manufacturer, and precut to the required length and a specified diameter. Eighty-five percent of Respondent's steel supply is purchased from United States Steel Corporation; 10 percent is imported from France; and the remainder comes from other American suppliers.

[3] There are six different hole sizes for the drilling collars.

[4] According to Ogden, if sufficient quantities of unsold steel are in stock, ". . . we will guess at the hole size that we think we will use and trepan them ahead and put them on the rack."

[5] While not entirely clear from the record, it appears that Respondent utilizes more workers on the day shift (5 a.m. to 5 p.m.) than at night (5 p.m. to 5 a.m.). It also appears that fewer manufacturing procedures are performed on the second shift. Finally, the record does disclose that Respondent has been utilizing a second shift since 1978 or 1979.

ees (an operator and a helper) are required for the operation of a machine; and that as of October 1, there were 10 trepan shop employees on the day shift[6] and eight[7] on the night shift. In addition, among other employees on each shift, Respondent employs individuals, classified as yard hands, whose function is to bring the uncut steel bars to the trepanning machines for cutting.[8]

The record reveals that preliminary discussions concerning the seeking of union representation began at the plant in mid-September and that those involved were primarily the trepan shop employees on the night shift. According to Ricky Taylor,[9] who was classified as an operator, these initial organizing discussions resulted from a series of work-related injuries and other safety problems. There is also record evidence that day-shift employees were consulted in this regard. Thus, Marion Bruce, also an operator, testified that, while he held such discussions mainly with other second-shift employees, "I did talk to some first shift when I got the time." In any event, a vote was taken among a group of unidentified night-shift trepan shop employees, and Taylor and Alfred Garrison, a helper, were selected to contact a union. After being directed to do so by representatives of the Teamsters union, Taylor and Garrison telephoned the Steelworkers union and spoke to Robert Clowers, an organizer; a meeting was arranged for the morning of September 26. While there is no evidence that Respondent was aware of these preliminary union discussions or the leaders, there is, however, evidence that Respondent endeavored to discover this information. Thus, Billy Joe Weaver, a day-shift trepan machine operator, testified that early one morning in the second half of September, he beckoned to his foreman, John Taylor,[10] as the latter passed by Weaver's machine. Weaver, who stated that he had heard rumors about a union and who ultimately signed an authorization card for the Union on October 1, asked Taylor "what was all this bullshit about the union. And he said, I don't know. And he turned around and walked off." Weaver further testified that either later that morning or 2 or 3 days later, Taylor walked over to Weaver's machine, and "[he] asked me if I knew who was behind it. He didn't say behind what or nothing else. And I told him no." Next, according to Weaver, Taylor turned and walked outside the shop to where Don Butler, the plant superintendent, was standing; Weaver heard Taylor say to Butler, ". . . Don, Joe don't know."

On the morning of September 26, a group of Respondent's second-shift employees met with Robert Clowers at the Union's office in Houston. The record is not clear, however, as to the number of employees who attended or as to their identities. In this regard, Robert Clowers, whose memory of the meeting was extremely vague, testified that 10 or 11 employees were present; that, while he did not recall any other names, he specifically recalled Taylor, Garrison, and yard hand James Duffy as attending; that also present were "a couple of Spanish people" and that each employee who attended executed a union authorization card.[11] Ricky Taylor testified that nine employees attended including himself, Alfred, Jim, Ollie, Albert, and Vince; he could recall none of the remaining employee participants. Albert Smith, who worked in the trepanning department as a helper, testified that he was present and that the other employees at the meeting were Ricky, Alfred, Jim, Ollie, Jeff, and Archie. Finally, Garrison testified that besides himself, Ricky, Albert, Nat, Archie, Keith, Ollie, Jim, and Philip attended the meeting with Clowers. What is clear about the meeting is that the latter explained the mechanics of union organizing to the employees, explained that a certain percentage of the employees had to indicate support for the Union, and gave union authorization cards to the participants for distribution to other employees.

Pursuant to Clowers' instructions, during the next 2 weeks union authorization cards were distributed among Respondent's plant employees;[12] however, except for Taylor and Garrison, there is no record that any other meeting participant or second-shift trepan shop employee engaged in such distribution. Thus, Garrison testified that, subsequent to September 26, he solicited five or six employees to support the Union, obtained three or four signed authorization cards, and returned the cards to Taylor who, in turn, was to give the signed cards to Clowers and that he engaged in such activities only during nonwork hours either in the plant parking lot or on a street corner near the plant. Likewise, Taylor testi-

[6] The trepanning department employees on the first shift, along with their dates of hire, are as follows: Robert Ehlinger, operator, 4/14/75; Joaquin Herrera, helper, 2/22/80; Jack Craft, helper, 7/23/80; Juan Flores, operator, 10/5/78; Andy Kraska, helper, 7/23/80; Jimmy Neville, operator, 11/15/78; Joe Weaver, operator, 8/24/79; Ronnie Batchelor, helper, 5/12/80; Oliver Jenkins, operator, 6/20/77; and Riley Jackson, helper, 7/23/80.

[7] The trepanning department employees on the night shift, along with their dates of hire, are as follows: J. Santos Coria, operator, 1/20/78; Ricky Taylor, operator, 7/1/79; Alfred Garrison, helper, 5/1/80; Albert Smith, helper, 3/30/80; Keith Bruce, operator, 8/16/79; Albert Terrazas, helper, 2/27/80; Ollie Rogers, operator, 3/16/80; and William Galloway, helper, 7/6/80.

[8] As of October 1, the yard hands on the night shift were Jim Duffy and David Vitela. There is nothing in the record as to how many yard hands are employed during the day shift, nor is there record evidence as to other classifications of employees on either shift.

[9] Although Taylor's hire date is listed as July 1, 1979, he testified that he had worked for Respondent twice before. Thus, he first worked for Respondent for a period of 6 months in 1975 but quit over a dispute concerning a change in the computation of the pay periods. He was hired again 9 months later and was subsequently terminated because of excessive absenteeism resulting from his wife's pregnancy. According to Taylor, after his brother John who is a day-shift foreman for Respondent asked him to return, Taylor did so in July 1979.

[10] Respondent admitted in its answer that John Taylor is a supervisor within the meaning of Sec. 2(11) of the Act.

[11] After examining a series of nine union authorization cards (which bear the signature of employees of Respondent, are all dated September 26, and which were received into the record as G.C. Exhs. 2(a)–2(i)), Clowers identified the signers as the employees who attended the September 26 meeting. However, Clowers admitted that he had no independent recollection of most of the names of the participants and that it was possible that some of the cards were backdated to September 26. The nine signed cards bear the signatures of Bruce, Taylor, Garrison, Nat Vasquez, Archie Mills, Albert Smith, James Duffy, Albert Terrazas, and David Vitela. As to signing such a card, Bruce stated that he did so later that day at the home of Ricky Taylor, and he denied being present at this meeting.

[12] The parties stipulated to the following facts: (1) that the union received 15 signed authorization cards, dated between September 26 and October 10, from day-shift plant employees; (2) that the Union received 14 signed authorization cards, dated between September 26 and October 6, from night-shift employees; and (3) that the Union obtained 14 signed cards dated subsequent to October 6 from plant employees.

fied the week following the union meeting, he engaged in authorization card distribution in the mornings after work in the plant parking lot and on a street, a short distance from the plant. The record discloses that Respondent was aware that Ricky Taylor was soliciting and distributing authorization cards on behalf of the Union. Thus, among those whom Taylor solicited to sign an authorization card was David Sholar, who is the night-shift foreman in the trepan shop and who, Respondent admitted in its answer, was a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act.[13] Subsequently, Sholar passed by Taylor's machine in the trepan shop and said that he wanted to speak to Taylor. Ten minutes later after completing a job, Taylor went into a tool room to meet Sholar. The former closed the door, and Sholar "told me that we could be fired for union activity . . . that we had been talking too much about the union . . . on company time." Taylor responded that no one had spoken about the Union on company time and that if Scholar wanted to discuss the subject further, he would have to meet Taylor after 5 a.m. The conversation ended at that point.

The General Counsel contends that Respondent spied upon the union solicitation activities of Taylor and Garrison on the morning of Friday, October 3. According to Ricky Taylor, while several second-shift employees were in a group talking and drinking beer in the plant parking lot after work that day, he and Garrison were standing a few feet away, soliciting arriving first-shift employees to sign authorization cards and support the Union. Taylor testified that as he "was handing a union card to a gentleman in a car," he observed his brother and Don Butler approximately 50 feet from them, "standing in the shadows of the shop." Moments later, Butler and his brother approached from behind Taylor, and "Mr. Butler called out that there was no drinking allowed on company property, that we would have to leave." At that point, all the second-shift employees, including Taylor[14] and Garrison, left the parking lot. During cross-examination, Taylor admitted that neither his brother nor Butler could have known exactly what he and Garrison were distributing. Further, while maintaining that his brother and Butler must have seen what he and Garrison were doing as "we wasn't hiding the cards," Taylor admitted that rather than looking at them, Butler and John Taylor "was looking directly at the group" and conceded that he just assumed that they observed the card soliciting as such was done openly. Finally in this regard, no other employee witness corroborated this incident and Garrison specifically denied observing any supervisor ever engage in surveillance of his union solicitation efforts.

At approximately 5:30 p.m. on October 6, Kess Verhuel walked into the trepan shop, carrying a sheet of paper, and spoke to the foreman, David Sholar. Moments later, the latter walked from machine to machine and announced that Verhuel wanted to speak to the employees in the yard area. Thereupon, all the night-shift trepanning employees,[15] with the exception of Santos Coria, who was the most senior machine operator and who signed a union authorization card on October 1, and Albert Terrazas, who was Coria's helper at the time and who signed an authorization card on September 26, assembled in the yard area where Verhuel was waiting for them. The latter was the only management speaker at this meeting, and while all witnesses agree that he announced that each of the assembled employees would be laid off, they disagree as to Verhuel's stated reason. Thus, both Albert Smith and Alfred Garrison testified that Verhuel gave as a reason for the layoff the fact that the production of steel was low; while Ricky Taylor and Marion Keith Bruce testified that Verhuel attributed the layoff to the fact that Respondent's supply of steel in the yard was too low to continue at the same level of trepanning. In any event, Verhuel also stated that the employees had all performed good work and that he would give each a good job recommendation. The meeting ended with Verhuel giving final checks to the employees. Neither Coria nor Terrazas was laid off, and the record discloses that David Vitela was recalled later that week to his former job as a yard hand.

Conceding all the above-described evidence, Respondent contends that the layoffs of night-shift trepanning employees Taylor, Garrison, Rogers, Bruce, Smith, and Galloway and of night-shift yard hands Duffy and Vitela were economically motivated, necessitated by a severely reduced inventory of uncut steel bars and by an anticipated lack of significant amounts of incoming steel in the near future. At the outset, without regard to Respondent's evidence in this regard, employee witnesses, including Taylor and Garrison, admitted that, as of the date of the layoffs, there were "empty areas" among the various sizes of uncut steel bars in Respondent's inventory and that the trepanning employees were cutting a greater percentage of "unpopular" bar sizes. Further, Marion Keith Bruce testified regarding the height of the various stacks of steel bars on hand on October 6: "the lowest I ever seen them was about like they were on [October 6]."

The record establishes that Respondent's treasurer, D. C. Ogden, is responsible for the ordering and purchasing of steel, for keeping an accurate accounting of both cut and uncut steel bars in stock, for the scheduling of work in the trepanning and other departments, and for all sales orders and the pricing of merchandise. Ogden testified that in October 1979, Respondent was given by Bralorn Resources an $11 million budget for the purchasing of steel inventory in 1980 and that, as a result, he ordered large amounts of steel in November and December 1979 and January 1980.[16] Ogden further testified that in late [13] Taylor believed that Sholar was merely a leadman at the time and not a supervisor.

[14] Taylor denied that he was one of those employees who consumed beer that morning.

[15] The night-shift trepanning department employees at the meeting were Taylor, Garrison, Bruce, Rogers, Smith, and William Galloway. Also present were yard hands Duffy and Vitela.

[16] According to Ogden, when ordering steel from domestic suppliers, he decides what sizes of bars are required by Respondent and places an oral order with the supplier. His decision "is based on the sales orders that you have, what you have in inventory, what you sold in the past, and just guessing what you think you are going to need three or four months down the road." Seven to ten days after placing his oral order,

Continued

February, he received a telephone call from an official of Bralorn Resources named Scott Grant, who "told us to reduce our dollar volume in our drill collar inventory, that they were in a money crunch or a cash flow problem and needed cash." Having committed Respondent to large steel orders the previous 3 months, for which Respondent would begin paying in January, and unable, at that time, to cancel said orders,[17] Ogden complied with Grant's order and "quit ordering steel as heavy as we had been and started reducing orders." According to Ogden, such was reflected in substantially reduced orders for steel for the period March through June. Thus, whereas in January, Respondent ordered 1737 tons of steel and in February 1235 tons, in March and April 1069 tons were ordered each month; in May 1024 tons and, ultimately in June, only 496 tons of steel bars were ordered.[18]

The effect of this reduction in the amount of steel bars ordered from suppliers, according to Ogden, was a concomitant reduction in Respondent's inventory of steel bars. Thus, analysis of Respondent's Exhibit 6, which is a compilation of Respondent's purchases and sales for 1980, establishes that commencing in June, Respondent's shipments of steel products became greater than its monthly purchases,[19] that this condition existed through September, and that in monetary terms, Respondent's inventory of on-hand steel bars was reduced from $11,136,075 worth of steel in June to $8,300,961 in October.[20] Ogden testified that while inventories had been as low in the past (Jan. 1980, for example), previous steel orders indicated that Respondent's on-hand stock would quickly be replenished; however, noting the small quantity of bars (138) which was paid for and shipped in August and the normal time lag between shipment and delivery, Ogden did not anticipate significant steel deliveries until sometime in November or sufficient on-hand stock in October to justify operations at the same rate. Consequently, on taking inventory in August, Ogden sent Verhuel a memo, dated August 27, in which he alerted Verhuel that Respondent's inventory of uncut steel bars was extremely low in most sizes, that the continued trepanning of bars based on guesswork, absent job orders for specific sizes, was becoming increasingly risky, and that a slowdown was possible. Ogden testified that Verhuel met with him after reading the memo and that he essentially repeated the contents of the memo, stating that the plant was running dangerously low on stock which, in turn, increased the difficulty in guessing on requirements. Also, Ogden informed Verhuel that threading procedures were behind schedule, leaving large numbers of trepanned bars without reguired threading. As to the latter Verhuel said he would attempt to "speed up" threading operations; however, with regard to trepanning, Verhuel said, "We will see," but did essentially nothing.

Ogden testified that through September trepanning continued at the same rate as before, and on October 1, he undertook an exact counting of all stock, because "we are getting low on bars" and little material was coming in. He further testified that analysis of this inventory was not completed until Friday, October 3 but, since he was extremely busy that day, it was not until the following Monday (Oct. 6) that he went to Verhuel with the results: "and I caught Mr. Verhuel and showed him what we had and told him we were in bad shape and he was going to have to do something."[21] Verhuel listened to Ogden, went into the shop, returned a few moments later, and "asked me to give him a list of the names of the night trepanners, which I did." Later that day, according to Ogden, Verhuel asked him for the hire dates of said employees and then instructed Ogden to prepare their final checks. The latter did so, and the employees were laid off.

Other than the foregoing evidence concerning its depleted inventory of uncut steel bars on October 6, Respondent proffered no evidence as to the necessity for a layoff as opposed to other forms of economic action, including operating the plant with shorter work shifts or, most significantly, as to what factors were considered by Verhuel in selecting for layoff the discriminatees herein. As to the former, not only did the discriminatees so testify but also Jack Stamps, who was in charge of personnel matters for Respondent until mid-September, testified that, as a standard procedure when hiring employees, "I would reassure them, based on what had gone before on the history of Omsco, that we were a growing corporation, that we did not anticipate lay-offs." Also, in this Ogden confirms this in writing and ultimately receives back a promised shipping date from the supplier. Ogden testified that domestic manufacturers require up to 90 days to complete a steel order for Respondent and that subsequent to completion, but prior to shipping, an invoice is sent to Respondent with a shipping date. If Respondent then pays within a specified time, it receives a discounted price for the steel. In any event, according to Ogden, it takes from 4 to 6 weeks, from the date of shipping, for the steel to be delivered to Respondent's plant. Finally, Ogden testified, Respondent does not always receive what it orders as portions are often ruined during manufacture and scrapped.

[17] Bearing in mind the time delay between ordering and paying for its steel, as described in fn. 16, a review of R. Exh. 6 establishes that in the time period January through June, Respondent's steel expenditures ranged from $1.8 million to $2.3 million. As to the cancellations of orders Ogden testified that after 30 days, the customer bears responsibility for the cost of the product.

[18] The reduced steel orders for these months reveals itself further in Respondent's steel payments for the period July, August, and September, when the orders placed in the prior 4 months were ready for shipment. Thus, Respondent paid $1,058,743 in July; $297,587 in August; and $1,026,383 in September for previously ordered steel.

[19] While steel purchases had previously been greater than shipments in 1980, in June, Respondent purchased approximately $1.9 million worth of steel but shipped approximately $2.1 million worth of steel. This imbalance increased so that in September, Respondent purchased slightly more than $1 million worth of steel but sold $2.7 million worth.

[20] Due to increases in the price of steel, the cost of Respondent's steel was approximately 5 percent more in October than in January. Thus, although the dollar amount of inventory was greater in October, the actual number of bars on hand was approximately 5 percent less. Prior to October, the only month for which we have specific figures for the number of steel bars in stock is June. According to R. Exh. 11, as of June 30, there were 2687 uncut drilling collars on hand; 3 months later, September 30, there remained 1345 uncut steel bars in inventory.

[21] Ogden testified that on a normal machine, approximately six bars could be trepanned each shift. If all the steel bars in stock, but not including incoming supplies (which would have been small in October based on the low purchase figure for August), were trepanned, such would have meant approximately 24 days of work for a full complement of workers on the day shift and eight trepan employees at night. However, in view of the paucity of incoming steel bars in October, guessing at hole diameters and drilling every last bar in stock that month would have been extremely risky—especially if portions of the stock were unsold.

regard, Marion Keith Bruce testified that on occasion he and David Sholar spoke concerning the possibility of layoffs, "and he told me, he says, No, we have never had a lay-off, to the best of his knowledge. And he said that they have cut back on hours but never had a lay-off." While testifying that some time in the 1950s Respondent did, indeed, choose to reduce hours rather than lay off employees in a period of business decline, Ogden pointed out that the situation in October was unique in Respondent's history in that never before had depleted inventories been coupled with an anticipated lack of sufficient incoming steel orders, thereby mandating a reduction in operations from previously maintained levels. With regard to the factors involved in the layoff decision-making process, Kess Verhuel, the individual who selected the alleged discriminatees for layoff, did not testify, and no other evidence was offered.

B. Analysis

The consolidated complaint alleges that Respondent laid off employees Taylor, Garrison, Duffy, Rogers, Galloway, Smith, Bruce, and Vitela on October 6 in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act. In support, counsel for the General Counsel contends that the discriminatees were the same people who signed union authorization cards and attended the union meeting on September 26; that by "spying" on the union activities of Taylor and Garrison on October 3, Respondent "placed itself in a position to learn that employees on the night shift were those who were 'pushing for the union'"; that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by John Taylor's interrogation of employee Billy Joe Weaver and David Sholar's threat of termination to Ricky Taylor; that the layoffs occurred the next working day after the "spying" incident; and that said layoffs were the first in Respondent's history. Contrary to the General Counsel, Respondent denies that the layoffs were unlawfully motivated, arguing that it was without knowledge of the aforementioned employees' union sympathies or activities and that the layoffs were precipitated by a shortage of steel bars and an anticipated lack of sufficient incoming steel to justify trepanning operations at prelayoff levels.

A determination of the legality of the instant layoffs is governed by the traditional precepts of Board law in 8(a)(1) and (3) discharge cases, as modified by the Board's decision in Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981). Thus, in order to establish a prima facie violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act, the General Counsel must establish that (1) the individual engaged in union or other protected concerted activities; (2) the employer had knowledge of the activities; (3) the employer's actions were motivated by union animus; and (4) the discharge had the effect of encouraging or discouraging membership in a labor organization. WMUR-TV, 253 NLRB 697, 703 (1980). Further, the General Counsel has the burden of proving the aforementioned by a preponderance of the evidence. Gonic Mfg. Co., 141 NLRB 201, 209 (1963). While the aforementioned analysis was easily applied in cases in which the employer's motivation was straightforward, conceptual problems arose whenever dual motivation was involved—the presence of both a lawful cause and an unlawful cause for discharge. In order to resolve this ambiguity, in Wright Line, supra, the Board established the following causation test in all 8(a)(1) and (3) cases involving employer motivation. "First, we shall require that the General Counsel make a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected conduct was a 'motivating factor' in the employer's decision. Once this is established, the burden will shift to the employer to demonstrate that the same action would have taken place even in the absence of the protected conduct." Id. at 1089. Two points are relevant to the foregoing test. First, in concluding that the General Counsel has established a prima facie violation of the Act, the Board will not "quantitatively analyze" the effect of the unlawful motive. The existence of such is sufficient to make a discharge a violation of the Act. Id. at 1089, fn. 14. Second, while apparently warranting the identical analytical approach, pretextual discharge cases should be viewed as those in which the "defense of business justification is wholly without merit." Id. at 1084 fn. 5.

At the outset, analysis of the posthearing brief of counsel for the General Counsel establishes that he views the alleged discriminatees as a class, with the identical circumstances involved in the layoff of each. Initially, it is contended that each attended the union meeting on September 26 and executed a union authorization card on that occasion. Although unstated, presumably counsel wishes the inference drawn that said individuals, as a group, were the "pushers" or main union adherents in the plant. While the record does establish that two of the discriminatees were, indeed, ardent union adherents, I refuse to draw such a broad inference. In this regard, other than Taylor, Garrison, Bruce, and Smith, there is no evidence as to other employees who participated in the initial organizing discussions at the plant. Also, not all the alleged discriminatees engaged in union activities; there is not a scintilla of record evidence that William Galloway signed a union authorization card, joined in any union discussions, attended any union meetings, solicited any other employee to support the Union, or otherwise indicated support for the organizing campaign. As to the September 26 meeting at the Union's office, the five witnesses who testified concerning the participants and discussions unanimously agreed on only the following alleged discriminatees as attending: Taylor, Garrison, Duffy, Rogers, and Smith. Other alleged participants included presumed second-shift employees Vince, Jeff, Nat, Archie, and Philip,[22] none of whom was laid off on October 6. Further, while it is alleged that Marion Keith Bruce attended, based on the date of his signed authorization card, Bruce himself denied having attended, stating that he executed his card later that afternoon. Also, although General Counsel's Exhibit 2(i), a union authorization card dated September 26, bears the unauthenticated signature of David Vitela, and Clowers, the union organizer, testified that all those present at the meeting of that date signed cards, Vitela did not testify at the hearing, no witness specifically placed him at this meeting, and there is no evidence in the record of either the circumstances surrounding the execution of the above exhibit or what other, if any, union activities in which Vitela may have engaged.

[22] Nat Vasquez and Archie Mills, who are both classified as machinists, executed union authorization cards dated September 26.

While Respondent has not contested or raised as an issue the matter of the alleged discriminatees' union activities, it does strenuously dispute the General Counsel's contention that it had knowledge of same. At the outset, it cannot be seriously disputed that, prior to the September 26 union meeting, Respondent at least suspected the existence of union organizing activities at the plant and that subsequently it obtained actual knowledge, not only of the union campaign in general, but also of the identity of a leading union adherent. Thus, it was uncontroverted that in mid-September, employee Billy Joe Weaver asked his foreman, John Taylor, "What was all this bullshit about union," that Taylor subsequently asked Weaver "who was behind it," and that Taylor reported on the results of this interrogation to Don Butler, plant superintendent.[23] It was also uncontroverted that, some time after September 26, Ricky Taylor solicited David Sholar, an admitted supervisor, to support the Union by asking him to sign an authorization card. While Sholar may be, as contended by Respondent, a "low level supervisor," he nevertheless remains a supervisor within the meaning of the Act and "information acquired by a supervisor, with respect to the specific employees involved in the union campaign, is ordinarily imputable to the employer" as a matter of law. Kimball Tire Co., 240 NLRB 343, 344 (1979); Pellegrini Bros. Wines, 239 NLRB 1220 fn. 2 (1979). However, knowledge that a particular individual was involved in union activities does not itself warrant the conclusion that any other individuals, or group, were known, or suspected, by Respondent to be the organizers of the union movement in the plant or even engaged in union activities at all. Rather, the burden was on the General Counsel to establish this fact. I do not believe counsel for the General Counsel has done so.

In this regard, other than the activities of Taylor and Alfred Garrison, there exists not a scintilla of record evidence that any other employee, including the alleged discriminatees, engaged in any form of overt—or even covert—union activity at or in the vicinity of the plant after September 26 so as to come to the obvious notice of Respondent. In his posthearing brief, counsel for the General Counsel glosses over this fact, pointing to the "spying by John Taylor and Don Butler" in the early morning of October 3. Again, counsel apparently desires that an inference be drawn—that, by placing themselves in a position to learn of employees' union activities, said supervisors did, in fact, discover that the night-shift employees were those "pushing for the union." I can draw no such inference and place no reliance on this incident as establishing knowledge of union activities. Initially, I note that, other than Taylor and Garrison, the record does not even establish the identities of those night-shift workers who were in the parking lot that morning, talking and drinking beer. Next, assuming that the individuals were, in fact, the alleged discriminatees, there is no evidence that they engaged in union activities on that occasion. Finally, the facts that these workers were drinking beer and that Butler and Taylor ordered them to leave the plant parking area for that very reason hardly support the conclusion that Respondent somehow learned of their union activities at this time. As to Garrison, rather than establishing knowledge, the testimony of Ricky Taylor mandates just the opposite conclusion — that Don Butler and John Taylor did not become aware of Garrison's union activities on this occasion. Thus, Ricky Taylor testified that, rather than paying attention to Garrison and himself, the two supervisors were observing the actions of the employees who were talking and drinking beer and that had they, in fact, been looking directly at Taylor and Garrison, Butler and his brother could not have known what they were doing. Thus, Taylor candidly admitted that he just assumed that Butler and John Taylor were aware of their union activities that morning. Also, I note that Garrison did not corroborate the occurrence of such "spying" and specifically denied ever observing supervisors engaging in surveillance of his union activities. Based on the foregoing, I shall not speculate as to what Respondent's supervisors might have learned that morning, and I believe counsel for the General Counsel has failed to prove either that Respondent was generally aware of the union sentiments of second-shift employees or that, except for Ricky Taylor, Respondent knew the identities of union adherents on this shift.

I am not unaware that there are cases in which violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) have been sustained based mainly on circumstantial evidence and inferences drawn therefrom, without specifically addressing the issue of knowledge. NLRB v. Pacific Grinding Wheel Co., 572 F.2d 1343, 1345 (9th Cir. 1978); NLRB v. Long Island Airport Limousine Co., 468 F.2d 292, 295 (2d Cir. 1972). However, I do not believe the record permits any sort of an inference that Respondent knew, or suspected, that the alleged discriminatees, except Ricky Taylor, were, at most, the main union instigators or, at least, strong union adherents. In support of his assertion that Respondent did know or suspect the foregoing, counsel for the General Counsel initially argues that the timing of the layoffs, occurring the first workday after the parking lot "spying" incident, suggests that Respondent did, indeed, learn that the night-shift workers had fomented the union movement at the plant. Without regard to whether "spying" occurred, D. C. Ogden explained that the layoffs were decided on October 6 inasmuch as he had initiated an inventory of Respondent's on-hand steel stock on October 1, as analysis of the accounting was not completed until October 3 and, as he was extremely busy with other work-related matters on that day, he was unable to confer with Kess Verhuel concerning the inventory until the following Monday (October 6). I found [23] Counsel for the General Counsel alleges the interrogation of Weaver by Taylor constitutes a violation of Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act. In the circumstances of this case, I agree. Thus, notwithstanding that the entire incident was initiated by Weaver, and Taylor did not accompany his question with any coercive conduct, there does not appear to have been any necessity or justification for Taylor's question, he was seeking quite specific rather than general information, and rather than being mere innocent conduct, the impression left by such a question is that possible reprisals would be taken against the individuals about whom Taylor sought information. Colson Equipment, 257 NLRB 78 (1986).

Ogden to be an honest and forthright witness and shall credit his testimony as to the foregoing. Next, counsel argues that not only had Respondent never experienced a layoff during its employment history but also employees were expressly informed of this fact during employment interviews and that whenever Respondent suffered economic difficulties in the past, its policy vis-a-vis the employees was to reduce their hours. However, while Ogden corroborated the foregoing facts, he testified that the period of reduced work hours occurred sometime in the 1950s—a period, I believe, too remote to bear upon Respondent's decision-making process in the present decade. Moreover, there exists no record evidence regarding the circumstances surrounding prior periods of economic difficulty for Respondent, and I specifically credit Ogden that the situation by which it was confronted in October 1980, depletion of its on-hand stock of steel bars along with a dearth of incoming steel in the immediate future, was one unique in Respondent's history. Further, based on the testimony of various employee witnesses and Ogden and the record as a whole, it cannot be said that Respondent acted unreasonably in concluding that a layoff was necessary to alleviate the aforementioned situation. Put another way, Respondent's decision to lay off employees does not, itself, establish knowledge or suspicion of the identities of the union proponents at the plant. Finally, and with regard to the latter point, it must be borne in mind that, other than Taylor and Garrison, none of the alleged discriminatees engaged in overt union organizing activities at or in the vicinity of the plant; that at the time of the layoffs, approximately 36 percent of the total employee complement, including 15 day-shift employees, had executed authorization cards for the Union; that, at least 7 other night employees had signed cards; that 2 night-shift trepanning employees who signed cards, Coria and Terrazas, were retained; and that the entire night shift was not eliminated. These latter factors are of particular significance for two reasons. First, absent specific knowledge, which, I have concluded, Respondent did not have, they indicate how remote the likelihood was that Respondent could have even suspected that the union activities which were engaged in by the alleged discriminatees, except Taylor, were more extensive than those of other employees. Second, if Respondent knew or suspected that the second shift was the source of the union sentiment, it would have been more expedient to dispose of all employees thereon and, thereby, "nip the nascent union movement in the bud"—rather than lay off the eight trepan shop employees who may or may not have been the union instigators.

Based on the foregoing, I find that counsel for the General Counsel has failed to establish that Respondent possessed knowledge or suspicion of their respective union involvements when it selected for layoff seven of the eight alleged discriminatees—an essential element in proving prima facie violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.[24] Accordingly, I shall recommend dismissal of those portions of the consolidated complaint regarding Alfred N. Garrison, Marion K. Bruce, Albert Smith, David Vitela, William Galloway, James Duffy, and Ollie Rogers. Simpson Steel Fabricators, 249 NLRB 1111 (1980); Sharkey's Tire & Rubber Co., 222 NIRB 261 (1976); Industrial Products, 216 NLRB 133 (1975).[25] However, the record does establish that Respondent had actual knowledge of the union activities of employee Ricky Taylor who, it was uncontroverted, distributed union authorization cards to several people, including David Sholar, the night-shift supervisor. The record further establishes, and it was also uncontroverted, that shortly after receiving a card from Taylor, Sholar warned the former that Taylor could be fired for engaging in union activities. Notwithstanding that Taylor did not feel threatened or that he did not believe Sholar was a statutory supervisor, such a specific prediction of adverse consequences for engaging in union activities, coming from a managerial representative, is conduct which goes directly to the heart of that which is protected by the Act and constitutes a blatant threat, violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Stewart-Warner Corp., 253 NLRB 136 (1980); Kansas City Power Co., 231 NLRB 204, 205 (1977). Irrespective of this, the statement also patently reveals Respondent's resolute attitude to discipline an employee who, it discovered, was engaging in union activities and, therefore, establishes the existence of unlawful animus towards Taylor.[26] Accordingly, not-

[24] Although not argued by the General Counsel, I note that seven of the eight alleged discriminatees engaged in some form of union activities. Thus, while 36 percent of the total employee complement were so engaged, 87.5 percent of those laid off were so. I am aware that such a statistical anomaly has been utilized in determining whether unfair labor practices have been committed; however, such should only be considered as a factor. Without more conclusive and factual record evidence, this statistical anomaly does not itself establish that Respondent selected the alleged discriminatees for layoff, with knowledge or suspicion of their union activities.

[25] The General Counsel relies on Kranco, Inc., 228 NLRB 319 (1977), as support for the allegations in the consolidated complaint. However, the decision is readily distinguishable from the facts herein involved. Thus, in Kranco, the Board concluded that the Respondent "had reason to conclude that the [union activity] was strong, if not centered, among the night-shift employees." This finding was based on the fact that the night supervisor had discussions with several employees on that shift about a union. Consequently, then, the finding of knowledge had a specific factual basis. Such is missing herein. Other than knowledge that Taylor was distributing authorization cards, there is just no factual basis to conclude that Respondent knew the union sentiments of the second-shift employees or that Respondent knew the identities of other union instigators. Emphasis is placed on the alleged "spying" on October 3, but I reiterate my belief that it would be speculative to draw any conclusions from the events of that morning. Likewise, I have found that there is no basis to conclude that Respondent could have even reasonably suspected union activity on the night shift of a magnitude greater than on the day shift. Accordingly, while the layoff of Ricky Taylor makes the layoffs of the other alleged discriminatees highly suspicious, such does not justify a conclusion that such were unlawfully motivated.

[26] It is gainsaid that an employer is bound by the actions of its supervisors. Glenroy Construction Co., 215 NLRB 866, 867 (1974); GAC Properties, 205 NLRB 1150 (1973). That Sholar's threat may be considered as representing Respondent's attitude is clear from the fact that Plant Superintendent Butler obviously directed John Taylor to interrogate employee Weaver as to the identity or identities of the union adherents. Such permits the inference that Sholar was reflecting the attitude of, if not directly instructed by, his superiors when he threatened to terminate Taylor because of his union activities. Finally, the fact that Sholar uttered his warning in the guise of a "prediction" does not lessen the consequences thereof.

withstanding the possible necessity for a layoff, I believe that counsel for the General Counsel has established that the selection of Ricky Taylor for such was motivated by his union activities, of which Respondent was aware,[27] in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

Utilizing the standard set forth in Wright Line, 251 NLRB at 1089, the burden of proof shifted to Respondent to demonstrate that Taylor would have been selected for layoff notwithstanding his union activities. Respondent's explanation for the necessity for layoffs herein is economic-based. In this regard, I credit the testimony of Treasurer Ogden that, in view of a shortage of both on-hand and incoming steel bars in October, he believed that Respondent ". . . was going to have to do something." Further, while not entirely free from doubt, given what was a "unique" situation, I shall not "second guess" Respondent that a layoff was necessary to alleviate it. However, what Respondent failed[28] to do was to explain what factors were considered by Kess Verhuel, who apparently made the layoff decision and the selections of those employees who were chosen, in selecting Ricky Taylor for layoff. Thus, Verhuel did not testify at the hearing and there is just no record evidence in this regard. Accordingly, I find that Respondent has failed to meet its burden of proof that Taylor would have been laid off notwithstanding his union activities and conclude that, in laying off Taylor, Respondent acted in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act. Reeves Southeastern Corp., 256 NLRB 574 (1981); Modesti Bros., 255 NLRB 911 (1981).[29]

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. By laying off employee Ricky Taylor about October 6, 1980, and thereafter not reinstating him because he engaged in union or other protected concerted activities, Respondent committed unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

3. By interrogating employees as to the union activities, membership, and sympathies of their fellow employees, Respondent interfered with, restrained, and coerced employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act and thereby committed an unfair labor practice within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. By warning employees that they could be terminated for engaging in union activities, Respondent interfered with, restrained, and coerced employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act and thereby committed an unfair labor practice within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

5. Unless specifically found, Respondent committed no other unfair labor practices.

REMEDY

Having found that Respondent engaged in unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. As I have found that Respondent unlawfully laid off Ricky Taylor, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to offer him immediate and full reinstatement to his former position or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position without prejudice to his seniority or other rights and privileges. I shall further recommend that Respondent be ordered to make him whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against him by payment to him of the amount he normally would have earned from the date of his layoff, October 6, 1980, with backpay to be computed in the manner set forth in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and with interest as prescribed in Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[30]

ORDER

The Respondent, Omsco, Inc., Houston, Texas, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Laying off employees because they engaged in union or other protected concerted activities.

(b) Interrogating employees as to the union activities, membership, or sympathies of their fellow employees.

[27] The existence of animus directed at Taylor and a finding that his selection for layoff was unlawfully motivated do not permit the drawing of an inference that the other alleged discriminatees were likewise unlawfully selected for layoff. Thus, the finding that one individual was unlawfully laid off does not, absent record evidence of knowledge as to their union activities, establish that other layoffs are likewise unlawful. Kimball Tire Co., 240 NLRB at 344.

[28] In its posthearing brief, Respondent speculates that selections for layoff were logical and based on the fact that the second shift was recently established. It is sufficient to say that, absent testimony by Verhuel or other record evidence, there is nothing in the record as to why Taylor was laid off.

[29] The fact that Respondent did not explain how and why the remainder of the laid-off employees were selected for layoff is not relevant to my conclusion that counsel for the General Counsel did not establish prima facie violations of Sec. 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act with regard to the layoffs of Garrison, Bruce, Smith, Vitela, Galloway, Duffy, and Rogers. Thus, in arguing the contrary when he asserts that Respondent picked and chose those who were most active on behalf of the union (itself, a rather dubious claim), counsel seemingly—without explicitly stating—analogizes the failure of Respondent to offer any explanation to the offering of a patently false explanation for the selection of the employees for layoff. In this regard, counsel relies on such cases as Shattuck Denn Mining Corp. v. NLRB, 362 F.2d 466, 470 (9th Cir. 1966), and First National Bank of Pueblo, 240 NLRB 184, 185 (1979). However, even in such circumstances, the Board will draw an inference that the employer sought to conceal an unlawful motive only if the surrounding circumstances so justify. Superior Forwarding Co., 242 NLRB 761, 765 (1979). Herein, where the record is barren as to Respondent's knowledge that the selected employees were strong union adherents or suspicions thereof, I draw no such inference.

[30] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(c) Warning employees that they could be discharged because they engage in union or other protected concerted activities.

2. Take the following affirmative action which is deemed necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer Ricky Taylor immediate and full reinstatement to his former job or, if that job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make him whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against him in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

(b) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Post at its Houston, Texas facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[31] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 23, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the consolidated complaint should be dismissed insofar as it alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by laying off employees Alfred N. Garrison, Marion K. Bruce, Albert Smith, David Vitela, William Galloway, James Duffy, and Ollie Rogers.

[31] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Mid-Continent Spring Company of Kentucky and James Stacy Richardson, Petitioner and Local No. 1993, International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, UAW. Case 9–RD–1193

14 December 1985

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF SECOND ELECTION

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

The National Labor Relations Board, by a three-member panel, has considered objections to an election held 10 May 1984 and the hearing officer's report recommending disposition of them. The election was conducted pursuant to a Stipulated Election Agreement. The tally of ballots shows 34 for and 85 against the Union, with 16 challenged ballots, an insufficient number to affect the results.

The Board has reviewed the record in light of the exceptions and brief and adopts the hearing officer's findings and recommendations[1] only to the extent consistent with this decision.

On 16 May 1984 the Union filed objections to conduct affecting the results of the election contending, inter alia, that the Employer interfered with the election by selecting Kathy Marsh, its "personnel manager," as its observer. The Union had protested at a preelection conference to the use of Marsh as the Employer's observer. Notwithstanding this protest, the Employer decided it would use her as its observer, contending that Marsh was merely a personnel clerk.

Based on the credited testimony, the hearing officer found that Marsh was "closely identified with management."[2] Although acknowledging the established Board policy that supervisors and persons closely identified with management may not act as observers, the hearing officer concluded that the election should not be set aside. According to the hearing officer, an exception to this Board policy was warranted because the Employer, including Marsh, did not campaign or take a position during the election, that it was not the first election for unit employees, and that the Union had represented the employees for a number of years. Under these circumstances, the hearing officer concluded that the employees were "less likely to be swayed by campaign rhetoric or the desires of either the Employer or the Union in making their decisions."

The Union excepts to the hearing officer's recommendation to overrule this objection, contending that the mere presence of an observer closely identified with management is so inherently coercive that it constitutes objectionable conduct without any showing of actual interference. We find merit in the Union's exception. As the hearing officer stated, it is well established that an employer may not select a supervisor or a person closely identified with management to be its election observer. Worth Food Market Stores, 103 NLRB 259, 260 (1953); Watkins Buick Co., 107 NLRB 500 (1953); B-P Custom Building Products, 251 NLRB 1337, 1338 (1980). Indeed, the Board has held that the use of such observers by an employer warrants setting aside the election since it is a fundamental deviation from the Board's established rules for the conduct of an election. International Stamping Co., 97 NLRB 921, 923 (1951). This is true whether or not there is a demonstration of actual interference or, alternatively, a showing that no interference took place. International Stamping Co., 97 NLRB 921, 923 (1951); Peabody Engineering Co., 95 NLRB 952, 954 (1951).

In recommending that the use of Marsh as an observer was not objectionable, the hearing officer enumerated factors which he believed demonstrated that such conduct did not result in any prejudice to the Union. As stated, the Board has held that the fact that an observer closely identified with management "could not have had a coercive effect on the voters is besides the point." Peabody, supra at 954. The use of such an observer is a fundamental deviation from the Board's rules which requires the election to be set aside. Accordingly, we find that the Employer's use of Marsh was an objectionable deviation from the Board's rules for the conduct of an election. Therefore, we find that the election must be set aside and a new election held.[3]

[Direction of Second Election omitted from publication.]

MEMBER HUNTER dissenting.

Unlike my colleagues, I agree with the hearing officer that in the particular circumstances of this case no prejudice resulted from the use of Marsh as the Employer's election observer.[1] Hence, I find

[1] In the absence of exceptions, we adopt, pro forma, the hearing officer's recommendation to overrule Objections 2 and 5.

[2] The hearing officer based his finding on the fact that Marsh is considered by the employees to be "personnel manager" and is a member of the management negotiating team. In addition, Marsh attends supervisory meetings and represents the Employer at the first step of the grievance procedure, advises the Union of the hiring and termination of all employees, advises the employees about personnel policy, and receives employee complaints. No exceptions were filed to the finding that Marsh was "closely identified with management."

[3] The Union also excepted to the hearing officer's recommendation to overrule the Union's objection concerning alleged unlawful restrictions placed on the employees' right to solicit union support. In light of our decision, we find it unnecessary to rule on this objection.

[1] Attached is the portion of the hearing officer's report dealing with Objection 6.

no merit in Objection 6. As there is no other objectionable conduct I would issue the appropriate certification.

APPENDIX

OBJECTION NO. 6:

In this Objection, the Union asserts that the Employer interfered with the conduct of the election by selecting Kathy Marsh, its "personnel manager," as its observer. In support of its position, the Union presented evidence through witnesses Jack Crotts, an international representative for the UAW; Lewis Wiley, president of the Union; Linda Cox, vice-president of the Union; Imogene White, a trustee of the Union; Jane Mitchell, financial secretary of the Union and its chief steward; and, former employees William Stanley, Brenda Birdsong, Shirley Walker, and Roxey Hale. The Employer presented evidence through Donald Langhi, its chief executive officer; Herbert Lingenfelter, its plant manager; and Kathy Marsh, whose title according to the company is "personnel."

The undisputed and/or uncontradicted facts in this matter are that on the date of the election May 10, 1984, the Union at the pre-election conference objected to the use of Ms. Marsh as the Employer's observer on the ground that she was the Employer's personnel manager. It appears from the record that the Board Agent conducting the election advised the Employer that observers must be nonsupervisory employees. After a lengthy discussion, the employer apparently asserted that Marsh was merely a personnel clerk and decided it would use her as its observer, notwithstanding the Union's objection. The record fails to reveal any evidence of misconduct by Ms. Marsh during the actual election. Therefore, the only issue to be resolved is whether her mere presence as the Employer's observer is grounds for setting aside the election.

The record reveals that prior to 1980 the Employer did not have a personnel manager. In 1980, the Employer hired Ken Barten, a consultant, for the purpose of setting up a personnel department. Barten admittedly had the title of personnel manager and could hire and fire employees. When Barten's contract expired after 1 year, he was terminated and Marsh, then known as Kathy Houchens, took over Barten's job in the personnel office. At the time, the authority that Barten had to hire and fire was allegedly not granted to Marsh. Marsh, who had previously been Donald Langhi's secretary, did not receive any increase in benefits when she took the personnel position and was paid considerably less than Barten. The record does not reveal any evidence that the Union or the employees were ever advised that Marsh unlike Barten did not possess the right to hire or fire employees or she was not the Employer's "personnel manager." On the contrary, there is considerable evidence that the employees continued to believe Marsh was the "personnel manager." In fact, the Employer's own attorney, Milburn Keith, referred to Marsh (Houchens) as the Employer's personnel manager in a letter to Jack Crotts in late September 1983. (Union Ex. 1) It was uncontradicted that the letter was a confirmation of the composition of the Employer's "negotiating team" for the upcoming 1983 contract negotiations. In light of the fact that Keith is also an officer of the corporation who should be well aware of Marsh's position, and in light of the fact that during the actual contract negotiations the Employer[10] and Union tentatively agreed to make the "personnel manager" the Employer's representative during the first step of the grievance procedure (Union Ex. 2), I find that the reference to Marsh as personnel manager was not mere oversight and that she was known to employees as the "personnel manager."

Marsh testified that upon assuming her job, she was advised by Barten that her duties would consist of doing the payroll, accepting job applications, and processing insurance claims. She denied being given any type of supervisory authority. However, she admitted attending 13 out of 19 of the 1983 contract negotiation sessions, admitted sitting in on a majority of 3rd step grievance meetings and sitting in on a majority of supervisory production meetings. However, she asserted the purpose of her attendance was and is simply to take notes or, in the case of grievance meetings, to answer questions asked by management, to type answers to the grievances, or to obtain employee files if necessary. She denied having any input in employee evaluations and denied attending any meetings involving strategy for negotiations or possible changes in personnel policy. (However, with regard to the latter, there haven't been any substantive changes since Barten left and it is possible no such meetings have been held.)

The record reveals that Marsh is the only person who works in the personnel office and that employees go to her for the purpose of getting safety glasses, filing tax forms, processing insurance claims, filing job applications, asking questions about the Employer's personnel policies and, at least, in some cases, for the purpose of making complaints.[11] In addition, part of Marsh's duties in the past have been to prepare seniority lists, dues check off lists and notifications of hire or termination of employees for the Union. Employees' vacation requests and medical excuses are eventually given to Marsh, and she maintains employee attendance records. With respect to the hiring of employees, Marsh testified that she merely takes job applications and, that if a supervisor in a particular department needs someone, the supervisor reviews the applications and instructs her who to call. She admitted that most persons hired are hired without any pre-job interview. After calling new employees, Marsh advises them how much they will be paid, what benefits they will receive and tells them that they will be on probation. She also instructs employees how to use the time clock and introduces them to their supervisor. Marsh denied any input in the hire of employees and asserted she does not screen or "weed out" any applications. With respect to her other duties, Marsh contended she only follows guidelines set up before she took the job

[10] Langhi and Lingenfelter were also part of the Employer's negotiating team and could have corrected any mistake concerning Marsh's title if they had so desired.

[11] See, for example, the discussion in Objection No. 3 where employees complained to Marsh about allegedly being harassed about joining the Union during working time.

and that her functions do not require the use of any independent judgment. She asserted she takes no independent action with respect to employees with attendance problems.[12]

The record reveals that Marsh's benefits and wages during the critical period[13] were comparable to various expediters and bookkeepers in the Employer's office. Her weekly pay of $300 was less than that of the lowest paid foreman who was paid between $300 and $350 weekly. Her benefits, as well as those of other office personnel, excluding executives, appear to be about the same as for those employees in the bargaining unit. Marsh who was on a weekly salary during the entire period, has not punched the time clock for approximately a year. Rather, she keeps her own time and gives it to Herbert Lingenfelter, the plant manager. Marsh, like other office personnel, is eligible for a bonus based on merit and longevity. She uses the same parking lot, restroom, and break area as other office personnel. Finally, it is undisputed that Marsh delivers paychecks to the foreman in the plant in full view of the unit employees.

Several union witnesses attempted to show that Marsh took an active part in their evaluation meetings, in the 3rd step grievance meetings, and during contract negotiations. However, based upon the entire record, including the demeanor of the witnesses, I conclude that one or more management officials attended such meetings and that Marsh's participation was generally limited to responding to questions concerning information contained in personal records and to obtaining files, if necessary.

Notwithstanding the above, Roxie Hale testified without contradiction that during a job evaluation, Marsh, as well as Hale's immediate supervisor, Theron Blankenship, told her that they were pleased with her work and that Marsh told Hale she would get her raise. Because she appeared to be a very credible witness, I credit Hale's testimony that such statements were made. However, I do not believe they are dispositive as to who actually made the decision to grant Hale's raise. I also credit Hale's uncontradicted testimony that Foreman Blankenship once told her to report an employee she had seen urinating in the parking lot to Marsh.

William Stanley testified that in late June or early July 1984, he called Marsh to find out how the Union "meeting" went. (It was apparent from his testimony that he was referring to the election.) During the conversation Stanley, who had been laid off for about 15 months, asked Marsh if he was still required to send a monthly letter indicating he had a continuing interest in employment. According to Stanley, Marsh told him "no, because after the end of the month he would be [de]terminated." Marsh denied making that statement and testified she merely told Stanley to follow the procedures set forth in the contract. Marsh struck me as the more credible witness. However, even assuming that Marsh made the statement attributed to her, her statement appears to be a simple recitation of the provisions set forth in the collective bargaining agreement concerning employees laid off for more than 15 months. It does not reflect any decision by Marsh.

Finally, union witnesses Crotts and Mitchell both testified that in one of the early contract negotiation sessions, Donald Langhi told them Marsh could hire and fire. Crotts testified that the statement was made after the Union asserted that a Mr. Mike Stanton was hired by mail by Mr. Langhi's brother. According to Crotts, Langhi denied the assertion, claiming that only Marsh (Houchens at the time) did the hiring. Wiley testified that after Crotts raised the issue of Stanton's hire, Langhi replied he did not know anything about it and asked Marsh if she knew anything. She stated Marsh started to reply but was interrupted when the Employer called a recess and went outside. When asked if anything was said as to who had the right to hire during that meeting, Wiley, like Crotts, asserted Langhi said Marsh had such authority. Mitchell[14] when asked about the discussion concerning Stanton's hire could only recall that Langhi disagreed that his brother had hired Stanton and asserted her belief that the Employer had argued that Clifford (Slim) Carroll, the assistant plant manager, had hired Stanton.

Employer witnesses Langhi, Lingenfelter, and Marsh all exhibited poor recollections concerning the conversation about Stanton's hire. Lingenfelter and Marsh could not recall if anything was said about Marsh having the right to hire and fire. Langhi, however, specifically denied saying Marsh had that right.

Of all the conflicts in the evidence, this one is the most difficult for me to resolve. On the one hand, the Employer witnesses do not recall the incident well and only Langhi specifically denied the statement attributed to him. On the other hand, Mitchell's testimony concerning the statement conflicts in part with that of Crotts and Wiley. Moreover, it is particularly troubling that Crotts and Wiley could so clearly recall this conversation but no others in the negotiations in which Marsh participated and allegedly spoke. After due consideration, I must conclude that the Union has failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that Langhi stated only Marsh could hire and fire and I credit Langhi's denial of that statement.

It is general Board policy that in the interest of free elections, supervisors and persons closely identified with [12] I note that the union witnesses are not in a position to know what the actual hiring practices of the Employer are or the extent of Marsh's participation in supervisory meetings or in personal matters. As a result, the Employer's witnesses' testimony was largely uncontradicted. However, I simply cannot believe Marsh's duties are so routine or clerical. If that were the case, I do not believe the Employer would have agreed to make her its representative in the first step of the grievance procedure.

[13] She received a promotion in June 1984.

[14] Mitchell also testified about statements Marsh allegedly made in meetings on September 27, 1983, November 21, 1983, and November 23, 1983. However, Marsh had 3 handwritten sets of notes concerning the September 27, 1983 meeting. She could not remember which of the statements was initially prepared. Moreover, one of the sets of notes contained changes concerning exactly what was said. In addition, I am convinced from the record that Marsh was not even present at the November 21, 1983, meetings at which Marsh, according to Mitchell, allegedly spoke. Considering the duplicative notes, the changes therein, and Mitchell's demeanor on the stand, I do not credit her testimony concerning the alleged statements by Marsh on September 27, 1983, November 21, 1983 or November 23, 1983. Therefore, I have not set them forth herein.

management may not act as observers.[15] Indeed, the Board has held that the use of such observers is such a material and fundamental deviation from the Board's established rules for the conduct of an election, that it will set aside an election without any showing of actual interference in the way the employees voted in the election. In so holding, the Board stated that "[e]lection rules which are designated to guarantee free choice in the election must be strictly enforced against material breaches in every case, or they may as well be abandoned."[16]

Notwithstanding the above, limited exceptions to the prohibition against the use of such observers have developed over the years. Thus the Board has refused to set aside an election contested by two unions wherein the employer used an alleged supervisor as its observer.[17] Similarly, the Board has also refused to set aside an election contested by only one union wherein the petitioner used a supervisor as its observer and majority of its votes cast were for the petitioner.[18] In both cases, the Board noted its prohibition against the use of supervisors as observers was predicated on the likelihood that their presence at the polls might unduly influence voters to cast "no-union" votes and that in the circumstances of those cases the likelihood of such influence was not present. In addition to the above, the Board has also refused to set aside elections where the objecting party failed to object to the use of a supervisor as an observer until after completion of the election rather than during the pre-election conference.[19]

To resolve this issue, it is necessary first to decide whether Marsh is a supervisor or in a position which closely identifies her with management. Section 2(11) of the Act states the term supervisor means:

> "Any individual having authority, in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibility to direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if in connection with the foregoing the exercise of such authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment."

A review of the record and the credited evidence therein reveals little direct evidence that Marsh has any of the aforementioned authority. Marsh has never hired, fired, laid off, disciplined, or transferred any employees and there is no indication in the record that she has the authority to do so. At most, the record establishes she told Roxy Hale that Hale would get a raise and told Stanley that he would be terminated pursuant to the contract after he was laid off more than 15 months. However, those statements do not reflect who made the decision to give Hale her raise and do not establish that Marsh terminated Stanley. Most, if not all, of Marsh's other duties appear to be essentially routine in nature. Finally, while there is some evidence that employees have made complaints to Marsh, there is no evidence that Marsh has actually adjusted any grievance or has the authority to do so. Therefore, I cannot, on the basis of the record before me, find her to be a supervisor within the meaning of the Act.

Notwithstanding the above, however, I do find that Marsh has enhanced responsibilities such that she is in a position which closely identifies her with management. In so holding, I note that Marsh was considered by the employees (and at least by one management official) as the "personnel manager." Marsh attends supervisory meetings, grievance meetings, and was part of the negotiating team for the Employer. She generally is the only person an applicant sees prior to his/her being hired and as such it is reasonable for employees to assume (even erroneously) that she had hired them. In addition, Marsh is the only person in the Employer's personnel office and it is she who advises the Union of the hire and termination of employees—that she is not the one actually making those decisions is of no moment considering the employees do not know that is the case. Marsh advises employees about personnel policy and receives employee complaints. While the record is void of any evidence that she can resolve grievances, it appears employees believe she can or that she will find someone who can (otherwise there would be no purpose in making complaints to her). Finally, I believe the Employer by agreeing, albeit tentatively, that Marsh would be its representative in the first step of the grievance procedure, served notice that Marsh could and did speak on behalf of the Employer. Accordingly, I find her to be closely identified with management.[20]

Considering my findings, at first blush, it would appear that to effectively maintain the Board's rules concerning observers, the election should be set aside. However, there are factors in this case which I have not seen previously addressed by the Board. It is undisputed, for example, that the Employer including Marsh did not campaign or take a position during the election. Moreover, this is not a first election for the employees of the Employer; it is the third. Because of that and because the union has represented them for several years, I believe the employees of this Employer are less likely to be swayed by campaign rhetoric or the desires of either the Employer or the Union in making their decisions as to whether to vote for or against the Union. In my opinion, they would tend to make their decisions based on their perception of the effectiveness of their representation.[21]

Respectful as I am of the Board's necessity to maintain its election rules, I also am of the opinion that the desires of the employees should not be overlooked in these matters and that election results should not be set aside easily. In the particular circumstances of this case, where

[15] Peabody Engineering Company, 95 NLRB 952-954; International Stamping Co., Inc., 97 NLRB 921-923; Worth Food Market Stores, Inc., 103 NLRB 259, 260; Photo-Sonics, Inc., 254 NLRB 567, 569.

[16] International Stamping Co., Inc., id. Sound Refining, Inc., 267 NLRB 1301.

[17] Owens-Park Lumber Co., 107 NLRB 131, 132.

[18] Plant City Welding and Tank Company, 119 NLRB 131, 132. See also Howard Cooper Corporation, 121 NLRB 950, 951.

[19] Howard Cooper Corporation, id.

[20] B-P Custom Building Products, Inc., 251 NLRB 1337, 1338.

[21] Assuming there are no unremedied unfair labor practices. The record does not reveal any unlawful conduct by the Employer.

the Employer stayed neutral in a contest between those employees who wanted to retain union representation and those who did not, I do not believe any prejudice to the Union could have resulted from the use of Ms. Marsh as the Employer's election observer.

Accordingly, I recommend that the Union's Objection No. 6 be overruled.

Florida Steel Corporation and United Steel Workers of America, AFL–CIO. Cases 11–CA–5324, 11–CA–5326, 11–CA–5347, 11–CA–5366, 11–CA–5405, 11–CA–5429, 11–CA–5444, 11–CA–5455, 11–CA–5776, 11–CA–5943, 11–CA–5946, and 12–CA–6593

14 December 1984

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND HUNTER

On 10 January 1983 Administrative Law Judge Stephen J. Gross issued the attached supplemental decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, to which the Charging Party and the General Counsel filed answering briefs. The Charging Party also filed exceptions and a supporting brief and the Respondent filed an answering brief. The General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief to which the Respondent filed an answering brief.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions[1] as modified and to adopt the recommended Order.

Prior to 1974, it was the Respondent's practice to grant scheduled general wage increases based in part on periodic area wage surveys. In the spring of 1973, the Union began its organizing activity at the Respondent's Charlotte and Indiantown plants.[2] In 1974 the Respondent canceled its scheduled wage surveys and withheld annual and quarterly wage increases or TEAM[3] increases at these plants. In a series of cases,[4] the Board found that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act when it canceled the surveys and withheld the wage increases. Accordingly, the Board ordered the Respondent to cease its unlawful conduct and to make whole the employees in the appropriate units for losses in pay suffered by reason of the Respondent's discriminatory practices. After the issuance of the Board decisions, the Respondent resumed granting its scheduled increases.[5] However, the General Counsel and the Union maintain that the wages at the Charlotte and Indiantown plants still fell short and have continued to fall short of the wages that would have been paid had the Respondent continued its pre-unfair labor practice wage policies. A controversy arose over how best to determine what the appropriate wage rates would have been at Charlotte and Indiantown but for the Respondent's unfair labor practices. None of the parties have argued that wages be reconstructed by replicating the area wage surveys used by the Respondent before 1974. At the hearing before the judge, experts presented various techniques for arriving at appropriate wage rates. As discussed in more detail in his supplemental decision, the judge found and we agree that the best approach to reconstructing the wage rates is by a "proportional" method.[6]

Another issue raised by the parties concerns the length of the backpay period. Contending that wages at Charlotte and Indiantown continue to fall short, the General Counsel and the Union urge that the backpay period continue until this proceeding is brought to an end by the Board. The Respondent maintains that it has ceased its unlawful conduct and since it has "commenced to bargain in good faith, offered and/or reached agreement with the Union on interim increases, and implemented those increases, the underlying unfair labor practice was no longer being committed" and the backpay period came to an end.[7] In its exceptions, the Respondent maintains that by December 1982–January 1983 it had already complied with the judge's recommended Order and therefore is not liable for backpay during the period that has intervened since the issuance of the judge's supplemental decision.

We do not agree with the judge's recommendation that the Respondent continues "to incur backpay obligations to its hourly employees in the [1] Member Zimmerman would find that the 22 November 1976 letters to John Wells Jr., James W. Ashcraft, and Loren D. Theodore do not constitute valid offers of reinstatement because these employees were required to take a physical examination. Absent the Respondent's discriminatory discharge, these employees would have continued to be employed without their employee status being jeopardized by such a requirement. He would also find the reinstatement offer to Bruce Lemmond invalid for this reason, as well as the reasons set forth by the judge.

[2] The Union was certified as the bargaining representative in January 1974 at Charlotte and in June 1975 at Indiantown.

[3] TEAM stands for The Economic Adjustment Match, a policy instituted by the Respondent in mid-1974 which involved quarterly rather than annual wage increases.

[4] 220 NLRB 260 (1975), enfd. 543 F.2d 1389 (D.C. Cir. 1976); 220 NLRB 1201 (1975), enfd. 538 F.2d 324 (4th Cir. 1976); 221 NLRB 554 (1975), enfd. 562 F.2d 46 (4th Cir. 1977); 226 NLRB 123 (1976). Member Hunter was not on the Board at the time of the Board's decisions in these cases. He notes, however, that the Board's decisions were enforced in the circuit courts, and he therefore accepts these decisions as the law of the case.

[5] The Respondent began implementing wage increases in August 1976 at Indiantown and in April 1977 at Charlotte.

[6] Insofar as the decision applies the judge's model to wages after the date of the judge's supplemental decision, we reject the Respondent's contention that a "combination index" method is more appropriate.

[7] We note, as did the judge, that although the Respondent and Union reached agreement on interim wages, neither party waived any rights in the backpay proceeding.

Charlotte and Indiantown bargaining units whenever the wage levels of those employees fall short of the levels that would obtain, in light of the then current circumstances, pursuant to the wage policies in force at Charlotte and Indiantown prior to 1974 and that are still in force at [Respondent's] other facilities." In concluding that the backpay period be "open-ended," the judge relied on the underlying Board cases at 220 NLRB 1201 and 226 NLRB 123. In these cases, the Board ordered the Respondent to pay backpay "until such time as [it] institutes and equally applies the TEAM program to the Indiantown employees"[8] and "to notify the bargaining representative of the imminent implementation of scheduled TEAM increases and corporatewide fringe benefits and offer to place said benefits into effect for unit employees at Charlotte unless the Union as bargaining representative objects."[9] We note that the Board's broad orders, especially at 226 NLRB 123, are based in part on what it describes as Respondent's "history of unfair labor practices" and "recent history of other types of flagrant violations," indicating "a course of unlawful conduct taken by Respondent in the service of designs inimical to the collective-bargaining process."[10] Although the General Counsel argues that the Respondent's proclivity to violate the Act has "continued unabated since the underlying orders in these cases," evidence of the Respondent's alleged continuing unfair labor practices is not before us. Further, once the Respondent has met its backpay obligation, it would be inappropriate to hold it liable for backpay whenever wages fell below the judge's model rates. The determination of future wage rates may only be established by good-faith bargaining between the parties and not mandated by orders of the Board.[11] The purpose of this proceeding is to remedy the Respondent's past unfair labor practice, not to police indefinitely the parties' collective bargaining. Once the Respondent has complied with the order set forth in this supplemental decision the backpay period will have ended. Accordingly, we order the Respondent to reimburse employees for wages at the rates and schedules established by the judge, including the period from the date of the judge's supplemental decision on 10 January 1983 to the date of this Supplemental Decision and Order.[12]

[8] 220 NLRB at 1204.

[9] 226 NLRB at 124

[10] 226 NLRB at 124

[11] In finding that the Respondent "incurs backpay obligations so long as its periodic general wage increases at Charlotte and Indiantown fail to at least equal the increases that [Respondent] would have granted had it not changed its wage policies at those two plants," the judge noted that the "parties are free to vary Respondent's general wage increase policies through good-faith collective bargaining."

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the adminstrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Florida Steel Corporation, Charlotte, North Carolina, and Indiantown, Florida, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the recommended Order.[13]

MEMBER HUNTER, concurring and dissenting, in part.

I concur with my colleagues in adopting the judge's decision in all respects, including his formula for determining backpay.[1] In adopting the formula, I note that the General Counsel and the Charging Party took no exception to the formula, and that the Respondent only excepted to the extent it applied to any backpay liability post 1982. In fact, the Respondent states in its brief that it has implemented the judge's model rate and has made a final payout of backpay, "which the Regional Director is now preparing to audit."

While I agree with the adoption of the judge's formula and other findings, I do not agree with my colleagues' decision to cut off the Respondent's backpay liability as of the date of this decision. The Respondent here contends that the backpay period terminates when the Respondent attains rates in conformance with the judge's model since, at that point, the Respondent will have made its employees whole for its past violations. I find merit in the Respondent's contention, and I would cut off the backpay period as of the date the Respondent shows it had attained the wage rates established by the judge's model. At that time, the Respondent will have restored the status quo ante and this proceeding should therefore terminate. After the date, the Respondent should be free to establish rates and other terms of employment after giving the Union an opportunity to bargain in good faith.

[12] In finding that the Respondent is liable for backpay for the period between the date of the judge's decision and this supplemental decision and order, we reject the Respondent's contention that the backpay period ended in December 1982—January 1983 when it allegedly complied with the judge's recommended Order and made a "final payout." The backpay proceeding cannot be closed until a final determination by the Board. Any reimbursement of backpay by the Respondent will be noted at compliance and applied to its backpay liability.

[13] Although we have modified the judge's holding to limit the Respondent's backpay liability to the date of compliance, including the period from 10 January 1983 to the date of this Supplemental Decision and Order, we do not find it necessary to change the judge's order.

[1] Thus, I join Chairman Dotson in adopting the judge's finding, for the reasons stated by the judge, that the Respondent made valid offers of reinstatement to John Wells Jr., James W. Ashcraft, and Loren D. Theodore.

As noted before, the Respondent asserts that it has already made the requisite payout in accordance with the judge's formula and that payout is now being audited by the Regional Director. However, the Respondent's assertion is not sufficient to establish that it has in fact complied with the judge's decision. I therefore leave it to compliance to determine whether the Respondent has already satisfied its backpay obligation, or whether it is still not in compliance in some respects. Accordingly, for the reasons stated above, I respectfully dissent from my colleagues' cutting off of backpay as of the date of this decision.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION

STEPHEN J. GROSS, Administrative Law Judge. The purpose of this proceeding is to determine the amount of backpay due various persons employed or previously employed by Respondent Florida Steel Corporation (FSC or the Company) at its Charlotte, North Carolina and Indiantown, Florida facilities. The FSC backpay obligations that are at issue here arise out of a series of Board orders,[1] the impact of which will be discussed in subsequent parts of this decision. Twenty days of hearing have been held (in Charlotte, Atlanta, and Winston-Salem).[2] Briefs have been filed by the General Counsel, by FSC, and by the Charging Party, United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO (the Steelworkers or the Union).[3]

While the parties have settled numerous backpay matters, a considerable number of others remain to be resolved here. In terms of dollar amounts at issue, the principal remaining matters concern a change in FSC's practices regarding general wage increases for its hourly paid Charlotte and Indiantown employees. Those general wage increases issues will be considered in parts I through VII of this decision. All other issues will be considered in part VIII.

I. WAGE RECONSTRUCTION—BACKGROUND AND BACKPAY PERIOD

As of early 1973, none of FSC's employees were represented by a union. But in May of that year, the Steelworkers filed a petition with the Board seeking certification as representative of the production and maintenance employees at the Company's Charlotte facility. (An election was held; the Charlotte employees voted to be represented by the Steelworkers; and in January 1974 the Board certified the Steelworkers as the Charlotte employees' exclusive bargaining representative.)

Starting at least as far back as 1966 FSC granted annual general wage increases at each of its facilities. In keeping with that practice FSC had granted a general wage increase to its Charlotte employees in February 1973 and had planned to grant another such increase about the same time in 1974. But FSC officials changed their plans and did not grant the Charlotte employees any general wage increase in 1974. The admitted basis for that change was the Steelworkers representation petition. FSC reacted similarly to another Steelworkers representation petition, filed in September 1973, covering the production and maintenance employees at FSC's Indiantown, Florida plant. Again, FSC refrained from granting a wage increase that it would have granted but for the Union's presence.

(In mid-1974 FSC began a policy of granting general wage increases on a quarterly, rather than annual, basis. FSC called the new policy "TEAM"—an acronym for The Economic Adjustment Match. The first wage increases at Indiantown that the Company would have implemented but for the Union's activity there would have been TEAM increases. At Charlotte, as indicated above the first time FSC refrained from granting a general wage increase the Company was still following a yearly increase policy at nonunion plants. Subsequently, however, FSC withheld quarterly—TEAM—increases from the Charlotte employees that it admittedly would have implemented if there had been no union activity there.)

In a series of four cases the Board concluded that FSC's withholding of annual and TEAM wage increases from the Charlotte and Indiantown employees violated the Act. The Board accordingly ordered FSC to cease its unlawful practices and to make the affected employees whole for the losses of pay they suffered by reason of such practices.

A. The Parties' Positions About the Backpay Period

The pages ahead will discuss how best to "reconstruct" the wage rates that FSC would have implemented for its hourly employees at Charlotte and Indiantown had FSC not changed its wage increase policies there. But a preliminary issue must first be decided: What is the length of the period for which FSC wages must be reconstructed.

The problem is this. FSC failed to give any wage increases to employees in its Charlotte and Indiantown bargaining units until after issuance of the Board decisions finding FSC's withholding of wage increases to be violations of the Act. While FSC did resume implementing wage increases, the General Counsel and the Steelworkers contend that FSC's Charlotte and Indiantown wages still fell short, and have continued to fall short, of the wages that FSC would have paid had it continued its pre-unfair labor practice policies. The General Counsel and the Steelworkers accordingly urge that the backpay period continue until this proceeding is finally brought to an end by the Board.

FSC urges otherwise, on three grounds. First, FSC long ago resumed granting wage increases to the Char-

---

[1] 214 NLRB 264 (1974); 220 NLRB 260 (1975), enfd. 543 F.2d 1389 (D.C. Cir. 1976); 220 NLRB 1201 (1975), enfd. 538 F.2d 324 (4th Cir. 1976); 221 NLRB 554 (1975), enfd. 562 F.2d 46 (4th Cir. 1977); 221 NLRB 1008 (1975), enfd. in part 551 F.2d 306 (4th Cir. 1977); 226 NLRB 123 (1976).

[2] Hearings were held as follows: in Charlotte on February 10 through 12, 1981; in Winston-Salem on March 9 through 12; in Atlanta on May 4 through 7; and again in Winston-Salem on May 27 and 28, June 30, July 1 and 2, and August 5, 6, 18, and 19, 1981. In addition, a prehearing conference was held on January 15, 1981, in Washington, D.C. before Judge Joel Harmatz.

[3] FSC also filed a "Limited Reply Brief" and a "Supplemental Limited Reply Brief." The Steelworkers filed a reply to FSC's Supplemental Limited Reply Brief.

lotte and Indiantown employees (April 1977 at Charlotte; August 1976 at Indiantown). And "nothing in the Board's orders suggested that backpay would continue to accrue beyond the time that Respondent actually ceased and desisted from unlawfully withholding wage increases."[4] Second, since as far back as the mid-1970s FSC has been negotiating with the Steelworkers about numerous matters, including wages. In particular, FSC implemented "interim" wage increases at Charlotte and Indiantown on, respectively, January 27, 1980, and December 23, 1979, after concurrence by the Union. According to FSC: "Once Respondent commenced to bargain in good faith, offered and/or reached agreement with the Union on interim increases, and implemented those increases, the underlying unfair labor practice was no longer being committed" and the backpay period came to an end.[5] Third, an "open-ended" backpay period "would mean either that the pay rates established for the future would be highly speculative or that, in order to avoid this, additional back pay proceedings featuring new data, revised models, and more expert testimony would be required."[6]

B. The Board Orders

The First Charlotte Wage-Increase Case.[7] The first case concerning FSC's failure to implement general wage increases involved FSC's withholding of an annual increase in early 1974 at Charlotte. Administrative Law Judge Thomas S. Wilson concluded that FSC had thereby violated the Act. After noting that FSC's wage increases at its other facilities "averaged in 1974 about 40 cents per hour" (and for other reasons spelled out in his decision), Judge Wilson ordered FSC to pay to each Charlotte employee "a sum of money equal to that which he would have earned on and after February 1, 1974, at an increase of 40 cents per hour for the hours worked thereafter . . . ."[8]

The Board affirmed Judge Wilson except for the 40-cent-per-hour figure he had selected:

> In view of the record evidence that Respondent does not give the same general wage increases at all its 11 facilities, and its concern for maintaining a competitive position in each labor market, we shall not set a specific hourly sum. Accordingly, we shall order Respondent to make whole all those employees in the appropriate unit at Charlotte for any loss of pay they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination practiced against them by Respondent's refusal to give them a general wage increase for 1974. If Respondent and the Union cannot agree on the amount of the general increase and/or the retroactive date, it shall be left to the compliance stage of these proceedings to determine such amounts and the proper date, or, if agreement cannot there be reached, to a backpay proceeding.[9]

The Indiantown Wage-Increase Case.[10] The Board found that FSC had unlawfully failed "to institute the new quarterly wage review policy [i.e., TEAM] at Indiantown." It accordingly ordered FSC to "make whole all those employees in the appropriate unit at Indiantown for any loss of pay they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination practiced against them by Respondent with respect to wages during 1974 and until such time as Respondent institutes and equally applies the TEAM program to the Indiantown employees."[11]

The Second Charlotte Wage-Increase Case.[12] This case involved, among other things, FSC's refusal to implement TEAM wage increases at Charlotte. The Board ordered FSC to "make whole all those employees in the appropriate unit at Charlotte for any loss of pay they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination practiced against them by refusing to implement the new quarterly wage review policy."[13]

The Third Charlotte Wage-Increase Case.[14] By late 1975 it was thus reasonably clear that the Board intended to require FSC to apply its TEAM policy to its Indiantown facility and that FSC would incur additional backpay obligations to its Indiantown employees, without further proceedings, until it did so, and did so with wage increases that were commensurate with the amounts FSC would have paid had it not stopped its TEAM increases at Indiantown. But the Board's Charlotte orders read differently, apparently referring only to particular past wage increases not implemented by FSC.

That led the General Counsel to seek reconsideration of the Board's second Charlotte order on the ground that the order "limited monetary recovery to the pay raises employees would have received from August 15, 1974 to April 19, 1975, when the complaint issued, without ordering ongoing implementation of the TEAM policy of quarterly wage reviews and increases, if applicable."[15] By the time all the pleadings were in, the Board had explicitly before it the General Counsel's request for an "open-ended remedy" and FSC's contention that "it would be inappropriate to require [FSC] to grant the TEAM wage increases and benefit improvements to the Charlotte employees who are represented by a certified bargaining agent because said increases are mandatory subjects of bargaining."[16]

The entire Board opinion must be read to get its full flavor. But to summarize, the Board, after focusing on "Respondent's history of unfair labor practices" that indicated "a course of conduct inimical to the collective-bargaining process," continued:

[4] FSC Br. at 15.
[5] Id. at 18.
[6] Id. at 22–23.
[7] 220 NLRB 260 (1975), enfd. 543 F.2d 1389 (D.C. Cir. 1976).
[8] 220 NLRB at 268 and 269.
[9] 220 NLRB at 260.
[10] 220 NLRB 1201 (1975), enfd. 538 F.2d 324 (4th Cir. 1976).
[11] 220 NLRB at 1204.
[12] 221 NLRB 554 (1975), enfd. 562 F.2d 46 (4th Cir. 1977).
[13] Id. at 555.
[14] 226 NLRB 123 (1976).
[15] 226 NLRB at 123 (quoting the Board's description of the General Counsel's motion).
[16] 226 NLRB at 123.

> . . . we hereby clarify our order by providing that the Respondent's obligation to . . . implement the TEAM wage policy corporatewide, which obligation was specifically made retroactive, continued during the period that has intervened from the date of the original Decision (November 20, 1975) until the date of this Supplemental Decision. In addition, Respondent in the future is to notify the bargaining representative of the imminent implementation of scheduled TEAM increases and corporatewide fringe benefits and offer to place said benefits into effect for unit employees at Charlotte unless the Union as bargaining representative objects.[17]

C. Duration of Backpay Period—Conclusion

As I read the Board's orders in 220 NLRB 1201 (Indiantown) and 226 NLRB 123 (Charlotte), FSC incurs backpay obligations so long as its periodic general wage increases at Charlotte and Indiantown fail to at least equal the increases that FSC would have granted had it not changed its wage policies at those two plants. The only limitation on that obligation is one inherent in the Act: "The parties are free to vary" FSC's general wage increase policies "though good-faith collective bargaining."[18]

To that extent FSC's backpay obligation is indeed "open-ended," as stated by the General Counsel in the pleadings leading to the Order in 226 NLRB 123.

As for the increasingly "speculative" nature of the reconstructed wage rates as the years move past us,[19] that was an argument appropriate for raising in the proceedings leading to the 226 NLRB 123 Order. Given that Order, it is beside the point here. On the other hand, the length of the backpay period is a factor warranting consideration when deciding what kind of formulation to use in reconstructing the wage rates that FSC would have implemented but for its unlawful actions.

Finally, there is the factual question of whether the Steelworkers has agreed that periodic general wage increases at Charlotte or Indiantown should be a product of collective bargaining rather than of FSC's corporatewide policies regarding such increases. The record is clear on this point. FSC and the Union have discussed every general wage increase that FSC has implemented at Charlotte and Indiantown since the Steelworkers was certified at those facilities. And the Steelworkers has agreed to each of the increases. But the Union has always done so—

> . . . with the understanding that such wage increases would be on an interim basis. Interim basis was understood by both parties [i.e., FSC and the Steelworkers] to mean (1) that neither party was foreclosed from bargaining for additional wage increases nor (2) was either party in any way waiving any legal rights that they may have or legal arguments they may have concerning the backpay proceeding which we are currently involved in.[20]

What that adds up to is that the Union has at no time agreed that FSC may at either Charlotte or Indiantown, cease following its companywide policy regarding periodic general wage increases.

In sum, as of the date of this decision FSC's backpay period has not ended. Moreover, absent agreement with the Union to the contrary or further action of the Board that revises the Board's Orders of October 1975 and September 1976 (220 NLRB 1201 and 226 NLRB 123), FSC will continue to incur backpay obligations to its hourly employees in the Charlotte and Indiantown bargaining untis whenever the wage levels of those employees fall short of the levels that would obtain, in light of the then current circumstances, pursuant to the wage policies in force at Charlotte and Indiantown prior to 1974 and that are still in force at FSC's other facilities.

II. FSC'S WAGE SETTING PRACTICES

FSC has plants at Ft. Lauderdale, Ft. Myers, Indiantown, Jacksonville, Miami, Orlando, and Tampa, Florida; Atlanta, Georgia; Charlotte and Raleigh, North Carolina; and Aiken, South Carolina. Since at least the mid 1960s FSC has used the process described below to set wage levels at all of its plants except the two at Charlotte and Indiantown. As to those two: (1) it stopped using that process at Charlotte in 1973; and (2) it used that process at Indiantown only from 1970 (when the Indiantown facility first went into operation) until early 1974.

A. Wage Structure

FSC has analyzed each hourly paid job at each of its facilities in terms of various "factors," including the "education," "experience," and "initiative" needed to handle the job; the responsibilities the job entails; and the working conditions associated with the job.[21] Each job is assigned points for each factor. The greater the demands of the job, and the worse the working conditions associated with it, the greater the number of points given. Thus, for example, a job that requires great skill and at the same time confronts the employee with hazardous and disagreeable working conditions is assigned a high total point count. Determination of what grade to assign to any given job is based on the job's point count. The more points, the higher the grade and the better paid the job.

B. FSC's Wage Surveys

As touched on earlier, except at those plants where the employees are represented by a union, FSC has granted general wage increases at least annually. FSC starts its wage-setting procedures with surveys of the wages paid by other employers. It does so since—"we're interested in determining the . . . value of our jobs for recruiting and retention purposes relative to what other companies are paying, that we would likely attract employees from, or that we might lose employees to."[22]

---

[17] Id. at 124.
[18] 226 NLRB at 124.
[19] See text at fn. 6, supra.
[20] Stipulation at Tr. 524.

[21] See, e.g., G.C. Exh. 31. Hereafter I will use "GCX," "RX," and "CPX" when citing exhibits introduced by, respectively, the General Counsel, FSC, and the Steelworkers.
[22] Tr. 1805 (FSC witness Hogue).

Since FSC sets wages on a plant-by-plant basis, each survey focuses on employers in the locality of the plant in question. Generally that means companies within normal commuting distance of the FSC plant.

The process for conducting the initial survey in an area is different from the process associated with subsequent surveys in that same area. If the survey is the initial one, company officials select a "representative group" of "significant" companies that are likely to attract the same kinds of persons as employees as does FSC.[23] Not all of the selected companies will necessarily agree to participate in the survey. As to those employers which do participate, one of FSC's officials will visit each of them to do the following:

(1) Obtain information on such matters as overall pay practices, fringe benefits, and the like.

(2) Learn what kinds of jobs the employer utilizes and "select from those jobs representative jobs."

(3) Determine the point count of each type of "representative" job in the same way that FSC evaluates jobs in its own facilities.

(4) For each separate type of job (at each employer in the "representative" group), determine (a) the number of employees holding that job and (b) their average wage.

FSC updates its surveys on a more or less annual basis. If a new employer enters the area, FSC may add it to the survey. If a participant in the previous year's survey pulls out of the survey, a replacement company may be selected. And if an employer in the previous year's survey creates a new kind of job, that may be added. In all of those cases one of FSC's officials will visit the plant to get the necessary information. Otherwise updates are conducted by telephone, with the surveyor asking about changes in wages; about changes, if any, in working conditions associated with previously surveyed jobs; and about changes in the number of employees in each kind of job.

C. Wage Practice Lines

FSC focuses on three kinds of data obtained from the surveyed employers: the point count of the various jobs; the wage of each of those jobs (using the average wage for each kind of job at each participating employer); and the number of employees in each type of job. But those data are not useful in their raw form. As Graph I [omitted from publication] indicates, there will inevitably be a broad range of wage levels for jobs having similar point counts.[24] Moreover while a higher point count is often associated with a higher wage, jobs of a particular point count at one employer may pay more than the jobs of a higher point count at another employer (as Graph I also shows).

FSC accordingly processes the data to determine their "central tendency." To do that FSC uses a statistical technique called "linear regression analysis."[25] In graphic terms, the output of linear regression analysis is a straight line that is placed so that, relative to any other straight line, it minimizes the total distance between it and all of the various "observations."[26] Graph II [omitted from publication] shows the regression line superimposed on the observations plotted in Graph I. As so used by FSC, the regression line may be referred to as an "area wage curve" (in the Company's terminology), or, more generally, a "wage practice line."[27]

Where regression analysis is appropriate for use, the technique can provide a wealth of precise data. That will be more fully discussed in part IV, below. For purposes of FSC's wage-setting purposes it need only be noted that, subject to various exceptions, if the observations used to plot the wage practice line were drawn from a representative sample any further observations are as likely to be above the line as below it. In that respect, a wage practice line represents the "average" wage at any given point count.

Once the regression line is drawn FSC can readily determine how the wage rate for each of its grade levels at its facility compares to the average wage in the community for comparable jobs (assuming the validity of the sample and of the assumptions underlying the regression formula). All that need be done is: First, determine the dollar equivalents of the intersections of the regression line and the job point counts that represent the midpoint of each grade at the facility (see Graph III [omitted from publication]); and second, compare those dollar figures with existing wages at the facility.

D. How FSC Determines the Amount of Its General Wage Increase

Testimony of FSC Witnesses. FSC grants wage increases as soon as possible after completion of the survey, generally within a few weeks. As for the amount of the increase, FSC witnesses testified that it is company policy to set wages at a level equal to 104 percent of the level implied by the wage practice line. But that 104-percent standard is adopted only where there are no countervailing considerations. Such considerations generally are related to employee recruiting or retention problems being experienced by the facility in question. Depending on the nature of the problem, FSC may set wages for its lowest grade employees at levels substantially higher than those indicated by the wage practice line, and the wages for its highest level employees at

[23] Tr. 1806–07 (witness Hogue).

[24] Graph I is taken from a 1980 survey of 16 employers located in or near Indiantown, Florida. See part V,B, below.

[25] "[R]egression analysis is a statistical technique for trying to quantify the relationship between a variable that you are interested in predicting and one or more variables that you would hope to use in making the prediction." Tr. 971–972 (GC witness Clapper). "Regression analysis can be used to find the equation of a line which best describes the relationship between two variables:" GCX-76 at 3. (In this case job point count would be the variable used to "predict" the wage level of a job. Thus point count would be the "independent" or "predictor" variable; wage rate would be the "dependent" or "criterion" variable. See Tr. 974.)

[26] Graphically an observation here is a point representing the job point count and wage of one employee. Actually the regression equation minimizes the total of the squares of the distance, measured vertically, between each observation and the regression line. (A statistician would speak of minimizing the "errors" or the "residuals" or of "minimizing the sum of the squared deviations from the regression line.") Thus regression analysis is also termed "least squares" analysis.

[27] See GCX 39 and Tr. 2225. (On that latter page FSC witness Haworth defines a wage practice line as "the linear regression estimated formula for wages as a function of the points involved in the jobs that are included in the sample.") levels below the wage practice line; or FSC may adopt exactly the reverse course; or wages at both the upper and lower ends of its structure may be set well above the wage practice line, with middle level jobs at the wage practice line levels.

Under any of these approaches FSC may increase wages on a percentage basis (i.e., each employee's wage being increased by, say, 8 percent), or by a fixed dollar amount (i.e., each employee's wage increased by, for example 50 cents an hour).

Finally, wage setting at a newly established plant involves still other considerations. According to FSC's witnesses, and as will be more fully considered below in connection with Indiantown wages, the initial set of wages at a new plant are pegged at 108 percent to 112 percent of wage practice line levels and then gradually decreased until the 104 percent standard is reached.

As for the organizational steps by which a general wage increase is determined, the procedure starts with several alternative recommendations from FSC's compensation manager; thence to discussions between the compensation manager and the managers of the local facility; then on to several headquarters offices. "[B]ut the final approval is an upper management decision."[28]

In sum, according to the testimony of FSC's witnesses the wage survey and resulting wage practice line serve "as a guide" in FSC's wage-setting process.[29] And while there are company standards, the choice of the wage increase for a facility's various grades is a "judgmental" decision:[30] "in the final analysis, it [comes] down to a discretionary decision by corporate management."[31]

Graphic Displays of Actual Relationships Between FSC Wage Rates and Wage Practice Lines. The record in this proceeding includes wage data for only 3 of FSC's 11 facilities: Charlotte, Indiantown, and Tampa.[32] A number of graphs are in evidence showing the relationship between the wage rates at those three facilities and the respective wage practice lines developed from FSC's area surveys. Those graphs are set out in Appendices A, B, and C to this decision [omitted from publication]. As can be seen from the graphs, at those three facilities FSC wages often did maintain a close relationship with the respective wage practice lines. On the other hand FSC wage rates sometimes departed substantially from the respective wage practice line levels, and wholly parallel relationships were rare.

III. WAGE RECONSTRUCTION—SUMMARY OF FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

No one suggests that past years' wage levels at Charlotte and Indiantown could or should be reconstructed by attempting to replicate the procedures that FSC would have followed had it continued its pre-1974 approach to wage setting at those two facilities. Rather, the parties agree that the best way to reconstruct the wage levels that FSC would have implemented at Charlotte and Indiantown but for its unfair labor practices is to follow a four-step procedure:

1. Compare, on the one hand, wage levels at FSC's Charlotte and Indiantown facilities during a pre-1974 period with, on the other hand, the wage levels of other employers during that same period.

2. Determine what relationship existed between the FSC wage levels during the pre-1974 period and the average wages paid during that same period by the other employers. Express that relationship in mathematical terms.

3. Find out what those other employers' wage levels were in the years since 1973.

4. Apply the mathematical expression determined in step two to the other companies' wage levels in the post-1973 years.

Notwithstanding the parties' general agreement on the process to use in reconstructing wages, the General Counsel and the Charging Party, on the one hand, and FSC, on the other, sharply disagree on what those reconstructed wage levels ought to be. (While the Steelworkers activity participated in this proceeding, the Union wholly supports the General Counsel's backpay formulations. Accordingly further reference in this decision to the position of the General Counsel should be read as also including the Steelworkers position, unless specified otherwise.)

The General Counsel's Position on How to Reconstruct Wages. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, United States Department of Labor (BLS) publishes figures on the average hourly earnings of employees working for manufacturers. (BLS's average hourly earnings statistics will henceforth be referred to as AHE.) The General Counsel concludes from a comparison of FSC wages and AHE that during the pre-1974 "base period" FSC wage levels at Charlotte and Indiantown increased faster than did AHE levels. For example, during the base period on the average FSC's Indiantown wages increased $1.57 for each $1 increase in AHE. According to the General Counsel, that base period trend should be reflected in the Board's reconstruction of FSC's post-1973 wages. Thus the Board's reconstruction of FSC's Indiantown wages should be based on the assumption that those wages would have continued to increase $1.57 for every $1 increase in AHE.

FSC's Position on How to Reconstruct Wage Levels. FSC focuses on the average difference between, on the one hand, FSC wages during the pre-1974 base period and, on the other, the wages paid by other companies during the base period. FSC does that several different ways, using both BLS's AHE data and data derived from private surveys of employers in the Charlotte and Indiantown areas. In each of its proposed wage reconstruction approaches, FSC claims that the proper way to reconstruct FSC wages is to assume that throughout the post-1973 period the difference between the AHE or wage survey data, on the one hand, and FSC wages on the other, would have been the same as the average pre-1974 difference between the wage data and FSC wages. For

[28] Tr. 1867 (witness Hogue).
[29] Tr. 1908 (quoting from an FSC brief in an earlier stage of the FSC litigation).
[30] Tr. 1870 (witness Hogue).
[31] Tr. 1908, quoting an earlier FSC statement.
[32] The exception: two graphs showing the wage rates and related wage practice lines for FSC's Fort Lauderdale and Miami facilities for 1974: GCX-40d.

example, FSC claims that during a 1971–1973 the base period, the average wage that FSC paid to its Charlotte employees was 23 cents higher than the average wage paid by other companies in the Charlotte area. FSC goes on to argue that the proper way to reconstruct Charlotte wages during the backpay period is to determine what wage rates those other companies paid, on the average, during the post-1973 period and to assume that FSC would have paid its employees 23 cents per hour more than that.

The Wage Reconstruction Method Adopted by this Decision. For reasons detailed in parts IV and V of this decision, my conclusion is that none of the wage reconstruction methods proposed by the parties are satisfactory. The General Counsel's methodology results in substantially overestimated wages for employees in the middle and lower grades. FSC's proposals substantially underestimate wages for employees at all levels.

As discussed in part VI of this decision, I have concluded that trends in FSC's wages during the pre-1974 years, the circumstances at FSC's Charlotte and Indiantown plants in the post-1973 period, and the inherent relationship between AHE and any employer's wages, together point toward one wage reconstruction method: Reconstruct FSC wages based on the relationship that existed between FSC wage levels and AHE as of the date of the last wage increase at FSC's Charlotte and Indiantown plants prior to FSC's unlawful change in wage policy.

The table [see Appendix G, Table 1] below lists an example of the effect of my recommendation for the reconstructed hourly wage rate of one middle level grade of employees at Charlotte and at Indiantown for one recent year. The principal wage proposals of the General Counsel and FSC are included in the table for comparison.

IV. THE PARTIES' CHARLOTTE MODELS[33]

To sum up, at Charlotte and Indiantown prior to 1974, and at all times at FSC's other locations, FSC set wage levels for its hourly employees based on a combination of (a) wage survey data obtained from employers located near the facility in question and (b) managerial judgment. As noted earlier, no one suggests that Charlotte and Indiantown wage levels be reconstructed for the post-1973 period by attempting to replicate precisely the process that FSC would have used but for its unlawfully changed wage policy at Charlotte and Indiantown. Rather, all parties propose focusing on the relationship between, on the one hand, Charlotte and Indiantown wages during the pre-1974 "base period," and, on the other, some set of statistical time-series data covering both the base period and the years since then. This part of the decision will consider the way the General Counsel and FSC use that technique to reconstruct the wages of the Charlotte bargaining unit hourly paid employees.

A. The General Counsel's Charlotte Models

The General Counsel retained a statistician, Dr. James M. Clapper, to devise a means of reconstructing FSC's wages at Charlotte and Indiantown during the post-1973 period. In a report of his wage reconstruction efforts, Dr. Clapper first briefly noted that during the base period FSC took into consideration area wage levels determined through annual surveys. The report then continues:

> To attempt reconstruction of the wage rates, it became necessary to identify a measure of wage levels in each labor market which could serve as a surrogate for the no longer available Florida Steel survey of area employers. Once such a measure was identified, it would be possible to use the statistical technique of regression analysis to determine the pre-1974 relationship between Florida Steel wage rates and the measure of area wage rates. Once established, this relationship could be used to reconstruct what Florida Steel wage rates would have been during the [post-1973] period had the historical relationship held, that is, if the company had continued . . . [its] pre-1974 pattern of wage increases vis-a-vis area wage rates.[34]

Dr. Clapper and representatives of the General Counsel jointly determined to use, as the "surrogate" for FSC's surveys, BLS's AHE figures. More specifically, Dr. Clapper and the General Counsel determined to use AHE figures that BLS compiles covering employers that are in the "primary metals and fabricated metal products" business and that are located in the Charlotte standard metropolitan statistical area (SMSA). BLS publishes such figures on a monthly basis, and Dr. Clapper concluded that FSC's base period Charlotte wages should be compared to 12-month AHE figure for the 12 months ended on the date of each FSC general wage increase. (AHE matters will be discussed in greater detail below.)

The simplest way of using regression techniques to determine the pre-1974 relationship between FSC's Charlotte wages and AHE figures is to do so one labor grade at a time. All that takes is a regression correlating (1) wage level at each point in time during the base period when FSC granted a wage increase, and (2) the AHE figures for the months in which FSC granted those increases.

The results of regressions of that type are set out in Table 2 [see Appendix G]. "Slope," as used in Table 2 and elsewhere in this decision, refers to the degree of tilt of the regression line. In the regressions under consideration here, it indicates how much wages increased for every unit change in AHE. For example a slope of 1.110 for Labor Grade 3 means that during the base period Grade 3 wages increased an average of $1.11 for every $1 increase in AHE. Note that a slope of 1.110 does not mean that during the base period Grade 3 wages could be approximated by multiplying AHE by 1.110. Rather, according to the regression on the average, one could approximate the amount of the increase in Grade 3 wages from any one base period wage increase to the next by multiplying the increase in AHE over the same time period by 1.110.[25]

[33] "Model" is used here in the sense of "a theoretical projection in detail of a possible system of human relationships (as in economics)": Webster's Third New International Dictionary.

[34] GCX-76, p. 1.

The data on which Table 2 is based were provided by the General Counsel. But they do not represent any part of the General Counsel's wage reconstruction proposal. The problem, said Dr. Clapper, is scarcity of data.

The Charlote base period ended in February 1973 (the date of the last general wage increase before FSC's unlawful change in policy). And Dr. Clapper determined that the earliest usable wage rates were those that FSC put into effect in May 1969. (Thus references to the General Counsel's Charlotte "base period" will be to the period May 1969 through February 1973.)[36] During that 1969–1973 period FSC granted five increases, as indicated in Table 3 [see Appendix G].[37] That means only five base period "observations." And five observations, said Dr. Clapper, "will not yield very reliable results."[38] Dr. Clapper accordingly first determined to include all the Charlotte labor grades in one "multiple regression" model.[39] That potentially enabled him to treat each of the five wage increases for all Charlotte labor grades as separate observations for one regression equation (for a total of 90 observations.)[40] But to do that, Dr. Clapper had to assume, for purposes of the regression, that the wage rates of all of the various Charlotte labor grades moved in parallel; and to assume that, for wage reconstruction purposes, the average difference between one labor grade and the next during the base period would be maintained during the post-1973 period.

That did not work. The technique does not require that the labor grade wage rates actually have moved in parallel. But it does require that the movement of the various labor grades not have varied too much from a parallel relationship. And the movements of the upper grades at Charlotte during the base period were too disparate from the lower grade movements. After some trial and error, however, Dr. Clapper found that the multigrade approach would work if the Charlotte grades were divided into two sets: lower nine and upper nine.[41] And that has led the General Counsel to propose a two-model forecast for Charlotte.

The result of each of the models is a regression-determined equation that, in effect, shows the trend in the average relationship during the 1969–1973 base period between, on the one hand, wage rates for the labor grades covered by the model, and, on the other, AHE. The resulting slope for the nine lower grades is 1.03. That is, according to the regression for every increase of one unit in AHE during a wage-increase-to-wage-increase time span in the base period, the wages of the nine lower Charlotte grades increased by 1.03 units. (Note that that is a kind of double average: average movement across the five base period wage increases and average as among the various labor grades.)

The slope produced by the General Counsel's model for the upper Charlotte grades was 1.47.

The following table [see Appendix G, Table 4] shows, for a few illustrative years and grades, the Charlotte wage rates produced by applying those slopes to AHE figures for the post-1973 period. (The figures in the right-hand column are intended to provide some sense of the relative increase in the reconstructed wage rates generated by the General Counsel's models. 1973 wages are actual, not reconstructed.)[42]

Why the General Counsel's Models Are an Inappropriate Means of Reconstructing Charlotte Wage Rates. The General Counsel's Charlotte models are clearly the product of considerable effort and statistical sophistication. Nonetheless they are not an acceptable means of reconstructing Charlotte wage rates. While numerous considerations point to that conclusion, two are particularly noteworthy. One has to do with "autocorrelation"—statistical term that will be defined below. The other concerns the connection between, on the one hand, base period patterns and, on the other, reconstructed wages: The record fails to support the General Counsel's assumption that the trend in the base period relationship between wages and AHE would have continued into 1974 and beyond but for FSC's unfair labor practices.

Autocorrelation. Statisticians call the vertical distance between an observation and a regression line a "residual." The mathematics underlying regression analysis are predicated on the assumption that the residuals in a regression model display little if any relationship to one another. To the extent that the residuals in a regression model form a pattern, that assumption is not met. Statisticians call a departure from the no-relationship-among-residuals requirement "serial correlation of the residuals," or "autocorrelation."

[35] Data are from GCX-121. For reconstructed wage levels inherent in those regressions see RX-141.

[36] Data for a wage increase granted in 1968 were also available to the General Counsel. Dr. Clapper could not recall the reasoning that led him to reject the 1968 data.

[37] Table 3 is identical to the first page of RX-72 through 77.

[38] Tr. 1012.

[39] Previous examples of regression analysis—FSC's technique for determining "wage practice lines" and the grade-by-grade regressions discussed above—involve "simple" regression. Each use only one "predictor" variable (e.g., AHE level) and one "criterion" variable (e.g., wage level for one grade). "Multiple" regression means that the model includes two or more predictor variables.

[40] Due to the mathematics of multiple regression, the effective difference in number of observations, as between the grade-by-grade model and the all-grades model, is something less than 90 minus 5. Nonetheless the increase is substantial.

[41] The upper 9 did not include grade 16 (which was unpopulated during the base period) or grade 17 (which was populated only sporadically during the base period). See Exh. 144 and Tr. 710.

[42] Table 4 and the other computations in this decision that use Charlotte primary metals AHE are based on the following AHE levels:

12 mos. ended Feb.	Avg. monthly AHE level
1973	3.20
1974	3.50
1976	4.16
1979	5.23
1980	5.60
1981	6.26

A moderate amount of autocorrelation is not a problem. But a high level of autocorrelation in a regression model spells trouble: "When you have a serious autocorrelation problem . . . you want to find out what was left out of the model or mis-specified. . . . There is probably something that should have been put in the model that isn't there."[43] As the quotation indicates, a high level of autocorrelation suggests a "specification error." "And specification error . . . in . . . a regression analysis sense, means that the model that you have hypothesized is not an accurate model."[44]

What that adds up to is that a high level of autocorrelation indicates that the regression model may be improperly constructed. And autocorrelation has a further aspect of importance here. Ordinarily regression analysis provides not only a set of predictions, but also—via "confidence interval" statements—detailed information about the probable accuracy of those predictions.[45] But the information about the predictions' accuracy is not reliable where there are high levels of autocorrelation.

As it turns out, the General Counsel's regression models present serious autocorrelation problems. In fact, the requirement of lack of pattern among the residuals is "grossly violated" by those models.[46] As a result of this autocorrelation Dr. Clapper was "not professionally willing to make confidence interval statements."[47] Thus, if one looks no further than the statistical standards for evaluating regression models, the General Counsel's Charlotte models are a failure. Dr. Clapper recognized that and argued that additional statistical studies (of FSC's Tampa facility) provide evidence that counterbalance the Charlotte models' autocorrelation problem.[48]

The import of General Counsel's Tampa studies will be considered below. But before getting there it is necessary to focus on the question of why one should accept the General Counsel's assumption that the trend in the base period (1969–1973) relationship between increases in FSC wages and increases in AHE would have continued into the post-1973 years had FSC not violated the Act.

The Lack of Any Economic Rationale Supporting the General Counsel's Wage Reconstruction. As just discussed, according to the General Counsel's Charlotte models, during the 1969–1973 base period on the average the wages of the Charlotte lower grades increased by $1.03 for every $1 increase in AHE, while the upper Charlotte grades increased by $1.47 for every $1 increase in AHE. Thus as Table 4 indicates, most of the reconstructed wages produced by the General Counsel's models keep increasing, relative to AHE, throughout the backpay period.[49] The question is whether FSC wages would in fact have followed those same trends in the middle and late 1970s and into the 1980s if FSC had not unlawfully stopped granted wage increases in 1974. (Note that the question would remain even if the General Counsel's models presented no autocorrelation problems.)

One kind of consideration raised by that question relates to the duration of the base period and wage reconstruction period. Assume, for the moment, that: (1) the base period had been a lengthy one—say 15 or 20 years; (2) the slopes of 1.03 and 1.47 produced by the General Counsel's models accurately described the wage-to-AHE relationships throughout that base period; and (3) the length of the wage reconstruction period was short—just a few years. Under those circumstances it would be reasonable to assume, without more, that these same wage-AHE relationships would continue during the wage reconstruction period—unless FSC could prove otherwise (as by showing that determinative factors present for the 20 years to 1973 had thereafter abruptly changed). But the Charlotte base period used by the General Counsel is a short one, as all parties agree: 5 years and five wage increases. It is so short, in fact, that the trend in the wage-to-AHE relationship developed by the General Counsel could readily be a function of a series of isolated factors. And the wage reconstruction period is a long one (at least 9 years). In these circumstances it seems to me that it is incumbent on the General Counsel to point to evidence that supports the assumption that a wage trend that existed during the base period would have continued in the post-1973 period but for FSC's unfair labor practice.

I have been unable to find any such evidence.

The General Counsel's Assumption of a Nonparallel Relationship Between AHE and FSC Wages. Both AHE and FSC's wages tend to reflect the same kinds of economic forces.[50] As a result, absent information about FSC's operations suggesting otherwise, one can assume a parallel relationship between changes in AHE and changes in FSC's wage levels. Over any appreciable period of time

[43] Tr. 2151 and 2150 (witness Haworth).

[44] Tr. 3506 (witness Clapper).

[45] "If the explanatory variables in the regression equation account for all major forces acting on the dependent variable, so that the unexplained variation is the product of many small forces, statistical theory makes it possible to compute . . . confidence intervals. These permit the assertion, within a specified level of confidence, that the true value of a . . . dependent variable lies within a certain range of the value estimated by the regression equation." M. Finkelstin, "Regression Models in Administrative Proceedings," 76 Harv. L. Rev. 1442, 1450–51 (1973) (footnotes omitted).

[46] Tr. 1468 (witness Clapper). See also Tr. 1316 (agreement by Dr. Clapper that the models' autocorrelation levels are "very substantially above the threshold level").

[47] Tr. 1098. See also Tr. 1467–68 and 3651.

[48] As may be recalled, the record contains evidence of the result of grade-by-grade regressions that correlated AHE with the base period wages of the various individual labor grades at Charlotte: See Table 2 [Appendix G]. The General Counsel suggests that the results of those grade-by-grade regressions, which show no evidence of autocorrelation, lend statistical support to the General Counsel's models. That does not appear to me to be the case. The grade-by-grade regressions are dependent on but five observations each. And that is too few to produce reliable results: See Tr. 1012 (witness Clapper) and 2141 (witness Haworth). I cannot conclude that the results of the statistically unreliable grade-by-grade regressions validate the General Counsel's statistically unreliable multigrade regressions.

[49] Under the General Counsel's principal models, the wages of the lower grades in each of the Charlotte models increase faster, on a percentage basis, than do the upper grades. (That is discussed further in part VI, below.) The General Counsel provided evidence on how his model could be used to increase the reconstructed wages of all Charlotte grades proportionally: GCX–125. Under that approach: Charlotte grade 1 would increase from 81 percent of AHE in 1973 to 88 percent in 1981; grade 6 (Mill) would increase from 94 percent to 100 percent; grade 7 would increase from 99 percent to 114 percent; and grade 15 from 147 percent of AHE in 1973 to 157 percent in 1981.

[50] See, e.g., Steelworkers witness Roomkin: AHE "captures the supply and demand forces that influence wages" (Tr. 3468).

(all other things held equal) the wages of FSC's employees ought to increase in proportion to increases in AHE. And while FSC's wages may move in a pattern different from AHE for a few years at a time, decreases in FSC's wages relative to AHE ought to be as likely as increases (again, all other things held equal). These considerations run counter to the General Counsel's reconstructed Charlotte wages, of course, since with limited exception those reconstructed wages increase proportionally faster than AHE throughout the backpay period.

That, however, does not end the matter since there are a variety of economic factors that could, in theory, cause FSC's wages to depart from a parallel relationship with AHE, even on a relatively long-term basis. For example: a worsening of working conditions at FSC's plants relative to those at other facilities; faster expansion by FSC than by other employers; increasing skill requirements at FSC's facilities relative to the skills required by the jobs of other employers; and community-wide changes in factors other than wages that would affect AHE levels but not wage rates.[51] If one or more of those factors persisted (and steadily increased in impact) throughout the 1970s at FSC's Charlotte plant, one could reasonably conclude that the General Counsel's model captured the impact of these factors during the base period and that it would make sense to project the model-determined slope forward. But there is no evidence at all that any of those factors persisted throughout the 1970s, much less increased steadily in scope.[52]

In sum, the record provides no explanation of why FSC's wages would have increased relative to AHE throughout the 1970s and early 1980s had FSC not violated the Act.[53]

Reconstructing wages in analogous circumstances. FSC operates nine facilities in addition to Indiantown and Charlotte. One of those nine facilities is located in Tampa, Florida. Dr. Clapper accordingly "hypothetically reconstructed" Tampa Wage rates "using the same methodology employed in the Indiantown and Charlotte reconstructions."[54] He then compared the wage rates produced by his model to Tampa's actual wage rates.[55] FSC has never changed its wage-setting procedures at Tampa—FSC still uses wage surveys, wage practice lines, and the like. As Dr. Clapper saw it, if he developed a model for Tampa similar to his Charlotte and Indiantown models, and if that model then produced "reconstructed" wages close to the wages FSC actually paid its Tampa employees, his Charlotte and Indiantown models would thereby be validated. The General Counsel contends that the results of the Tampa regression model make up for the Charlotte models' problems of autocorrelation and lack of an underlying economic rationale for assuming post-1973 continuation of a base period trend in wage-AHE relationships.

As indicated by Dr. Clapper, the General Counsel's Tampa model is methodologically similar to the General Counsel's Charlotte models. The main differences are: (1) the Tampa model uses as a base period April 1973-October 1975 (as contrasted to May 1969-February 1973 for Charlotte);[56] (2) during that base period there were six wage increases (not five, as in the Charlotte base period); (3) the Tampa model uses one regression equation for all Tampa labor grades (unlike Charlotte, which uses two).

The slope produced by the Tampa model is 1.32 (compared to 1.03 and 1.47 for Charlotte).

A comparison of the "reconstructed" and actual wage rates for the period April 1976–April 1980 is set out in Table 5A [see Appendix G]. (The listed months are all those during the 1976–1980 period in which Tampa mill employees received general wage increases.) As can be seen: (1) The model starts off (in 1976) with minor overpredictions and ends (in 1980) with somewhat larger underpredictions; and (2) in general the model accurately reconstructs Tampa wages.

Despite that accuracy, however, I cannot conclude that the Tampa model provides the necessary proof that the General Counsel's Charlotte regression models are designed soundly or that the trend in the base period relationship between wages and AHE shown by the General Counsel's models would have continued but for FSC's unlawful wage policy changes. The question, again, is how much the General Counsel has to prove before FSC comes under the burden of showing why what may be an analogous situation is not in fact analogous. Clearly if the General Counsel had introduced similar to the Tampa model covering all nine of the facilities at which FSC continued its wage increase policies one could thereby accept the General Counsel's Charlotte wage reconstructions absent compelling evidence from FSC showing why those models did not support the General Counsel's Charlotte contentions. But in fact the General Counsel's evidence covers only one of two sets of wages at 1 of FSC's 11 facilities. That, in my [51] Such as amount of overtime worked. See the discussion of AHE, below.

[52] Another possibility I considered is that FSC, for policy reasons of its own—such as a possible desire to avoid the unionization of its plants—deliberately increased its employees' wages faster than other employers. ("[A] company under the feeling that it was under the threat of a union organizing campaign might seek to install a wage premium to move to the upper area of wages in the community as a means of forestalling unionization": Tr. 3277 (witness Roomkin).) But again, the record is barren of evidence indicating the adoption by FSC, for that reason, of a policy whereby FSC wages would keep increasing relative to community wages.

[53] Two commentators on the use of regression analysis in administrative proceedings suggest that absent such an explanation an agency ought not accept a regression-determined forecast: M. Finkelstein, "Regression Models in Administrative Proceedings," 76 Harv. L. Rev. 1442, 1446 (1973) ("there must be some underlying theory which supports" the use of the regression-determined correlation); F. Fisher, "Multiple Regression in Legal Proceedings," 80 Colum. L. Rev. 702, 714, 735 (1980) ("The measurement provided by least squares regression is a way of making theoretical assumptions precise or of the testing them; it is not a substitute for thought . . . . one should make sure that the model used is constructed on sound hypotheses based on theoretical considerations generated from outside the model itself.") Were the Board to adopt that position, consideration of the General Counsel's models could stop right here.

[54] Exh. GC-79, p. 2.

[55] The Tampa facility has two sets of wage rates. Dr. Clapper's Tampa model uses one set—for the Tampa "mill."

[56] Dr. Clapper selected a Tampa base period beginning in April 1973 because that was the first wage increase granted at Tampa after the facility's wage structure was revamped. (". . . in Tampa . . . [prior to 1968] they had a 13 grade system; they compressed it to twelve grades beginning in April of 1968 and in April of 1973 it was compressed to 10 grades": General Counsel witness Yost, Tr. 663.)

judgment, says too little about the probable accuracy or the General Counsel's models.[57]

Questions Regarding the Consistency of AHE Data. One of the assumptions on which the General Counsel's models rests is that the AHE data the models use are consistent at all relevant times—that is, from 1969 to the present. The fact is that those data are not wholly consistent throughout that period of time. The only real question is how substantial are the inconsistencies.

Monthly AHE data are derived by dividing the gross payroll for the month for the various employers included in a particular AHE series by the total hours worked by the employees of those employers. Irregular bonuses and the like are excluded from the gross payroll figures, but overtime payments are included. All such data are obtained on voluntary basis. BLS presents the data by locality (such as for Palm Beach County in Florida and for the Charlotte SMSA in North Carolina), by State and nationally; and by industry groupings (such as "primary metals," "nondurable goods," or "all manufacturing").[58]

The focus in this proceeding is on wage levels in particular geographic areas for particular groupings, over substantial periods of time. Under these circumstances all sorts of inconsistencies are possible. Those inconsistencies include: (1) changes in the definition of the geographical area covered by the AHE data; (2) changes in the definition of the industry grouping; (3) changes in the relative level of overtime (increasing overtime will result in higher AHE figures even if wage rates are not increased); (4) changes in the levels of skills demanded by the employers covered by any AHE series; and (5) changes in the identity of the companies choosing to file reports with BLS.

Overtime Levels, Employee Skill Levels, Identity of Reporting Companies. The record provides no evidence one way or the other on whether there were substantial changes in any of these factors during periods pertinent to this proceeding.[59] It is clear that BLS uses statistical techniques to avoid sudden shifts in AHE data that might be caused by substantial changes in any of these factors. But there remains the possibility that for two periods several years or more apart such factors could mean that apparently comparable AHE figures were not in fact so. And, indeed, one state official involved in the collection of AHE data advised a representative of the General Counsel that he (the official) did not consider AHE data appropriate for the purposes in which it is used in the General Counsel's models.

Definitions of Geographical Areas. The General Counsel's Charlotte models use AHE for the Charlotte SMSA. The General Counsel began his wage reconstruction efforts using the "all manufacturing" series for the Charlotte area. But in 1973 the Charlotte SMSA was redefined to broaden its scope.[60] Upon discovering that change, the General Counsel discarded the Charlotte all manufacturing AHE series on the ground that it was too likely that the SMSA redefinition substantially affected that series. But a BLS official advised a representative of the General Counsel that the "primary metals" AHE series for the Charlotte SMSA was only "minimally affected by the change."[61] It is for that reason that the General Counsel's Charlotte model uses the primary metals AHE series. But that official's statement about the effect of the SMSA change on the primary metals AHE series is untested. No one with any expertise in the matter testified at the hearing in this proceeding.[62]

AHE—Conclusion. Having said all that, the record indicates that whatever flaws Charlotte SMSA primary metals AHE data might have for the purposes such data have been used in this proceeding, they are at least as good as anything else available. Thus, while my conclusion is that the General Counsel's models do not provide an appropriate method of reconstructing FSC's Charlotte wages, that conclusion is not based on those models' use of Charlotte SMSA primary metals AHE data.

B. FSC's Charlotte Regression Model

Central Piedmont Industries (CPI) is an employer association in the Charlotte, North Carolina area.[63] CPI conducts annual wage surveys. Employers in the Charlotte area which are willing to do so provide CPI with wage information, by labor grade. (CPI asks employers to categorize the jobs at their facilities on the basis of National Metal Trades Association grades—a 10-grade scale.) FSC retained Dr. Joan Haworth to develop wage reconstruction methodologies, and she concluded that the CPI surveys provided the best times series for purposes of reconstructing FSC's Charlotte wages.[64] As will be discussed below, FSC's model does so by determining: (1) the average wage level in the Charlotte area; (2) the average gap between one labor grade and the next; and (3) the average dollar difference between FSC's Charlotte wages and average area wages during a 1970–1973 base period.

Average Area Wage Level. FSC's regression model determined: (1) the average Charlotte area wage paid in 1970; and (2) the difference between that average 1970

[57] Dr. Clapper used Tampa wage rates, rather than those of some other Florida Steel facility, as a check because the General Counsel happened to have obtained only Tampa—plus Charlotte and Indiantown—wage rates from FSC. There is no indication that the General Counsel could not have obtained access to the wage rates of additional FSC facilities.

[58] BLS (a Federal agency) does not in fact collect local or State AHE data. Rather, state agencies do so under contract with BLS. In Florida, the Florida Department of Commerce does the AHE surveys. In North Carolina, the North Carolina Division of Current Employment Statistics, Employment Security Commission, does the work. In all cases the States operate pursuant to BLS standards.

[59] Of the firms that report AHE data 2 or 3 percent drop out annually: Tr. 2306 (witness Haworth). But the significance of that level of dropouts is unclear.

[60] Gaston County was added to the SMSA at that time.

[61] Tr. 694 (witness Yost).

[62] In FSC's annual wage surveys leading to wage increases, FSC never limited the survey participants to metal products companies. Thus the use of the primary metals AHE series runs contrary to the General Counsel's goal of using a time series as close as possible in nature to the wage surveys FSC previously conducted.

[63] Since 1977 CPI has been known as "Central Piedmont Employers Association, Inc." But the parties all refered to "CPI" throughout the hearing.

[64] The model uses most, but not all, of the wage data produced by the CPI surveys. The selection of CPI data for use in the model was made by Dr. Haworth.

wage and the average area wage in subsequent years.[65] Thus to derive the average Charlotte area wage for 1980, one would take the 1980 figure generated by the model and add it to the model's 1970 figure.

Labor Grade Variables. Using CPI survey data, FSC's model determines the average wage of each labor grade for each year subsequent to 1970. Then it determines the gap between each adjacent labor grade for each such year. Finally the model determines the average of the gaps between all adjacent labor grades. (Assume that there are only three labor grades; that the year is, say, 1979; and that the gap between the average wage for Grade 1 and the average wage for Grade 2 was 50 cents, while the gap between the average wage for Grade 2 and the average wage for Grade 3 was $1. Roughly speaking, the model would use 75 cents as the labor grade variable for 1979.)[66]

FSC Add-On. Doctor Haworth concluded that the relationship between FSC's Charlotte wages and the CPI wages for the same year correlated less well than FSC wages and the previous year's CPI wages. Accordingly the FSC model compares the average FSC Charlotte wage for 1971, 1972, and 1973 with, respectively, the average CPI wage for 1970, 1971, and 1972. (One base period "year" thus includes FSC data from 1971 and CPI data from 1970; or 1972 and 1971; or 1973 and 1972. For ease of reference this decision will accordingly refer to base period years in the form, e.g., 1972–1971.) The average difference over those three years—1971–1970, 1972–1971—between the average FSC wage and the average CPI wage was 23.1 cents.[67] (It may be recalled that the General Counsel's model used the 5 years 1969 through 1973 as a base period. But CPI data for 1968 and 1969 were not available. So the FSC model does not use FSC's Charlotte wages for 1969 or 1970.)

Reconstructing Charlotte Wages with FSC's Regression Model. The following is an example of how one would use the FSC model to arrive at a reconstructed wage—in this case, solely as an example, FSC Grade 5 for 1979.[68]

1. Base year figure (referred to as the "intercept"): $1.965.
2. Year add-on for 1979: $1.232.
3. Average gap between labor grades for 1979: $0.390.
4. FSC add-on: $0.231.
5. $1.965 plus $1.232 plus five times $0.390 plus $0.231 equals $5.378.

Thus the FSC model's reconstructed wage for (transformed) labor grade five for 1979 is $5.38 per hour.

As Table 5B [see Appendix G] indicates, the reconstructed wages produced by FSC's regression models are generally lower than those of the General Counsel's model.[69]

The Major Faults of FSC's Regression Models. FSC's regression model presents three serious problems. The first is the use of a highly abbreviated base period. The second is the use of a constant dollar figure ($.231) as the difference between FSC wages and area wages. And the third is the manner in which the model determines the base period relationship between FSC wages and area wage rates.

Abbreviated Base Period. FSC has operated the Charlotte facility since the mid-1960s. The General Counsel's model uses as a base period the years 1969–1973. As noted earlier, the record is silent about why the General Counsel's model discards data for years prior to 1969. Nonetheless the base period used by the General Counsel's model gives the General Counsel 5 years—and five annual wage increases—of FSC wages to compare with data from the predictor series (the AHE primary metals series for the Charlotte SMSA) covering that same period of time.

Even that 5-year base period is exceedingly brief for purposes for reconstructing backpay period wages, as touched on above. Yet FSC's Charlotte regression model uses a base period of only 3 years. There is nothing suspect about FSC's reasons for using a 3-year base period. FSC did so because adequate CPI data were not available for the years prior to 1970.[70] Nonetheless, the FSC regression model's base period is 40 percent shorter than the base period both of the General Counsel's Charlotte model and of FSC's "index" models. (FSC's index models will be discussed below.) That difference in base periods alone casts considerable doubt on the utility of FSC's regression models.

The Impact of a Constant Dollar FSC Add-On. FSC's Charlotte regression model uses a constant dollar figure ($.231) to determine the difference between the reconstructed FSC wage for any given labor grade and in any given year and the respective CPI wage. Because of the considerable growth in wage levels during the backpay period, the result of that constant dollar approach is that the FSC model forecasts FSC wages as declining substantially, in percentage terms, relative to area wages. For example, according to the FSC regression model, the average wage of a CPI Grade 4 employee in 1974 was $3.48. The model reconstructs the FSC Grade 4 wage for 1974 as $3.71, or 6.6 percent higher. In 1981 the model shows an average CPI Grade 4 wage of $5.94. The reconstructed FSC Grade 4 wage in 1981 is $6.17, or only 3.9 percent higher. Nothing in the record justifies the implicit assumption inherent in FSC's regression [65] FSC uses a regression model to make these and the other determinations discussed in this part of the Decision. But unlike the General Counsel's model, FSC's model does not correlate FSC wages with any predictor series. Rather FSC uses a regression model as a handy way of determining averages. As that suggests, one could obtain results close to those of the FSC regression model by applying routine arithmetic manipulations to the data used by the FSC model.

[66] See part VI, below, for further consideration of the wage structure aspects of FSC's model.

[67] Dr. Haworth calls it the "weighted average difference between Florida Steel and the CPI for all the labor grades" for the 3-year base period: Tr. 2530.

[68] The figures are from RX–61.

[69] FSC figures are for January of the indicated year. The General Counsel figures are for February.

[70] If FSC's model matched FSC data for a given year to CPI data for that same year, the model would have had a 4-year base period: 1970, 1971, 1972, and 1973. But as noted above, Dr. Haworth found that FSC and CPI data correlated better if FSC data were matched against the prior year's CPI data. Thus a base period of 3 years: 1970–1971; 1971–1972; and 1972–1973.

model that FSC's wages would have declined in percentage terms relative to area wages in that fashion.[71]

Manner in Which FSC's Regression Model Determines the Relationship Between FSC Wages and Area Wage Rates. As discussed earlier, the AHE primary metals series is a reasonably good indicator of trends in wages in the Charlotte area. And throughout the period 1969–1973, FSC's Charlotte wages increased faster than did AHE. One way of seeing that is simply comparing the average FSC wage with AHE figures. Table 6 [see Appendix G] does that.[72]

Another approach is to consider the results of the individual wage rate regression shown in Table 2. The regression-developed slopes indicate that nearly all of FSC's Charlotte wage rates increased proportionally faster than did AHE during the 1969–1973 base period.[73]

The spread between FSC's wage rates and the CPI wage rates used in FSC's regression models is an average of the difference between FSC wage rates and CPI wage rates for the 3 years 1970–1971 through 1972–1973. That approach wholly washes out any trends in the relationship between FSC wage rates and CPI wage rates. (As the General Counsel puts it: "The averaging process obscures any fundamental changes in wage ratios during the base period": Br. 161.)

FSC's only justifications for the use of a 3-year average figure are that no meaningful trends are discernable in the base period in the relationship between FSC wages and CPI wages,[74] and that "the arithmetic average is the one that requires the least justification."[75] But the fact is that FSC's base period Charlotte wages do display a pattern. They increased faster than both AHE and average CPI wages. And the dimensions of that pattern are sufficiently substantial that they must be taken into account in reconstructing post-base period wages.

In discussing the General Counsel's models, I conclude that there is no evidence that would indicate that the ever-widening gap between FSC wages and AHE predicted by the models would continue in the years after 1973. But, similarly, there is no evidence that that trend would reverse itself so that the difference between FSC wages and area wages that existed at the end of the base period would diminish. Yet FSC's regression model implicitly assumes that such a reversal would have occurred. Since that assumption is not supported by the record, FSC's regression model would have to be rejected even if it were otherwise faultless.

CPI Problems

Lack of Representativeness. CPI does not try to use statistically valid sampling methods in obtaining wage rate information. CPI simply sends out questionnaires to employers in the Charlotte area[76] and then compiles without modification the data that are returned by whichever employers care to respond to the questionnaire.[77] Moreover, the CPI data themselves suggest that the CPI survey results do not perfectly reflect the Charlotte area labor market in that the average wage rate of some labor grades for some years, as shown in the CPI surveys, is higher than the average wage rate for more senior labor grades. (For example, the 1970 CPI survey shows the average Grade 3 employee earning more than the average Grade 4 employee. And the 1979 survey shows that, on the average, Grade 2 employees earned more than Grade 3 and Grade 4 employees.)[78] It is unlikely that such inversions would have occurred were the CPI data truly representative of the Charlotte area labor market.[79]

Consistency. The identity of the employers responding to the CPI surveys changes substantially from year to year.[80] While that does not necessarily mean that the CPI data are not reasonably consistent from one year to the next, the data again contain a suggestion of a lack of consistency: The average wage rate for some grades in some years was lower than for that labor grade the previous year. (For example, the survey shows the average Grade 4 wage to be $3.90 in 1973 and $3.37 in 1974.) Given the substantial inflation of the 1970s, that would [71] If the FSC regression model were otherwise attractive, this particular fault could be easily remedied by switching from a dollar to percentage relationship.

[72] Average wage an AHE data are from RX–73.

[73] That clearly delineated trend does not show up well in the figures used by FSC's Charlotte regression model. For example, based on CPI figures collected in GCX–105 the wages of only one of the nine FSC grades (as transformed for use in FSC's model) steadily increased faster than did the respective CPI wage rates for the full 1970/1971—1972/1973 base period: FSC grade 6. And three wage rates were lower, relative to their CPI counterparts, in 1972–1973 than in 1970–1971: FSC grades 4, 7, and 8. (The remaining FSC wage rates—grades 1, 2, 3, 5, and 9—dipped relative to CPI wages but then increased more than they had dropped.) In part that may be a function of the way the wages of the companies in the CPI survey moved during the base period. But almost surely it is also a function of the very short base period used by FSC (as discussed earlier). Further, apparently by reason of the way that Dr. Haworth transformed FSC's actual Charlotte wages for the base period into a nine-grade system, the transformed base period wages used by the FSC model increase less rapidly than do the actual FSC Charlotte wages. For example, the average FSC wage at Charlotte (based on actual wages) increased by 92 cents, or 35 percent, between 1969 and 1973. (See, e.g., RX–73.) But the average Charlotte wage, as transformed for use in FSC's model, increased only 81 cents, or 30 percent. (Average wage figures derived from the base period FSC wages as transformed for use in FSC's regression model can be found in RX–79, p. 1.) For all that, even the figure used by FSC's model show that FSC's wages were more often than not higher at the end of the base period, relative to CPI wages, than they were at the start of the period.

[74] "[T]here's no point in just looking at historical patterns because we don't have very many. . . . The sequential pattern does not tell me anything": Tr. 2198, 2535 (witness Haworth).

[75] Tr. 3775 (witness Haworth).

[76] CPI tries to send the questionnaire to all area companies with 50 or more employees.

[77] The 1972 survey covered about 7500 employees: RX–45. The 1980 survey covered about 17,000 employees: Tr. 1509 (witness Dowd). (In 1980 there were about 80,000 employees doing "manufacturing and production" work in the Charlotte area: Tr. 2322 (witness Haworth).)

[78] There are over a dozen such inversions in the CPI survey data for the years 1970 through 1980: See GCX–105.

[79] All parties agree that the validity of FSC's model hinges on the extent to which the CPI data are representative of the labor market from which FSC drew its employees: See witness Haworth, Tr. 2253–54 (results of model "dependent upon the survey representing the community that Florida Steel was allegedly trying to meet or match" when setting wages).

[80] For example, 86 companies responded to CPI's 1971 survey. Of those 86, the names of only 48 showed up in the 1972 survey: See CPX–3 and Tr. 3214–15. Some of the remaining 38 companies might have been in the survey, but under changed names (due to merger, etc.). But it is unlikely that name changes represent more than a small proportion of the missing companies.

not have occurred were the CPI surveys wholly consistent from one year to the next.[81]

Problems Regarding Grade Structure Information. The wages for each labor grade as reported by the companies responding to the CPI survey varied enormously. Almost surely that was in part a function of ambiguous grade slotting instructions on the CPI questionnaires and of the fact that CPI left to each responding company's judgment decisions about how to report the labor grade category of each job. As a result, the CPI data do not permit a determination of the spread between one labor grade and the next. (That is why FSC based its wage reconstruction on the average spread between labor grades.)

Infrequency of CPI Surveys. CPI conducts its wage surveys once a year. That is a problem in that, while the wage increases at FSC's Charlotte facility also occurred only annually during the pre-1974 period, they occurred at varying times of the year, as follows.

Wage Increases at FSC's Charlotte Facility

Yr. of increase	Mo. of increase
1971	May
1972	January
1973	February

Yet FSC's regression model makes no adjustment for those variations in its determination of the relationship between FSC wages and CPI survey wages.[82]

CPI Data—Conclusion. Obviously there are a lot of problems with the wage data derived from the CPI series. And all things considered, the AHE primary metals series for the Charlotte SMSA probably more closely reflects area wage level changes than do the CPI data. But I cannot conclude that for purposes of this proceeding the quality of the CPI data is substantially inferior to AHE data.

For one thing, the problems that showed up in the CPI data are in part a result of close examination of the raw CPI data. No comparable scrutiny of the AHE data was possible, partially because of the absence of any witness fully knowledgeable about the raw data that employers submit to BLS. Second, the CPI approach avoids AHE's intermixing of overtime wages with regular wages, and unlike AHE, probably at least partially adjusts for skill mix changes (since some of such changes ought to show up as changes in job grade). Third, the rate of increase of average CPI wages tended to be fairly close to the rate of increase in AHE during the period of 1970–1980. (That is depicted in both graphic and tabular form in RX–109.) And where the rate of growth of CPI survey wages did depart from the AHE rate of growth, more often than not it was because the CPI survey wages grew faster than AHE (which, in FSC's model, would be reflected in higher reconstructed FSC wages). Fourth, it is clear that the CPI staff did not seek to bias the results of the surveys. CPI aimed for wage data that reflected the Charlotte labor market.[83]

Finally, the CPI surveys do provide us with wage structure information. And while that information may not perfectly reflect the actual labor market, it certainly appears to provide at least an approximation of changes in the average gap between labor grades in the Charlotte area. AHE, on the other hand, provides no wage structure information at all.

FSC's Charlotte Model—Other Considerations. From time to time during this proceeding FSC suggested that its regression model should be adopted because it resembled the wage-setting methods that FSC used prior to the Union's arrival at Charlotte. But on several counts that suggestion is incorrect. First, as discussed in part II and as portrayed in Appendices A, B, and C [omitted from publication], it is apparent that FSC wages were much more a function of management discretion than of the results of FSC surveys and wage practice lines. Second, while the model's focus on average CPI wage data to some extent resembles parts of FSC's wage-setting processes, the model does not use (or create) wage practice lines. And third, the FSC models do not represent an attempt to emulate FSC's wage-setting practices. In fact, Dr. Haworth, who was responsible for the design of FSC's models, never even saw any of FSC's wage surveys or wage practice lines until long after she had completed the design of the models.

The General Counsel's Dr. Clapper complained that the wage rates reconstructed by FSC's regression model for any given year did not take account of the previous year's wage structure. To Dr. Clapper that means that "you can have a situation where in one year the labor grades are very close together and the next year the labor grades are spread apart and the next they come back together, and they can oscilliate all over creation": Tr. 2729. But for three reasons that is no real concern: (1) to some extent the base period FSC labor grade structure did oscillate; (2) big swings could occur only if such swings occurred in the labor market (as shown in the CPI data) and such swings accordingly are unlikely; and (3) in fact, the average gap between CPI labor grades behaved in a reasonably orderly fashion throughout the 1970s.

C. FSC's "Index" Models

FSC's presentation does not rely solely on its regression model. Rather, FSC also proposed several ways of reconstructing Charlotte wages based on the percentage

[81] FSC determined to use less than all available CPI data (see fn. 64, above) in order to increase the consistency of the data used by the model: "In order to have consistent data bases I did select [from the CPI surveys] those occupations which were present in all of the years": Tr. 2289 (witness Haworth.)

[82] A related problems is that the CPI questionnaires are not necessarily sent out the same time each year.

The CPI questionnaire was sent out in 1973 in the month of February; in 1974, in July; in 1975, October; in 1976, November; in 1977, September; in 1978, August; in 1979, again in August.

The record does not indicate the date of the 1971 survey. Based on the dates of the completion of the surveys, in 1970 and 1972 CPI sent out the questionnaires early in the year; and in 1980, in late summer.

[83] There is no doubt that CPI's president held an antiunion viewpoint. But there is no indication that that viewpoint affected the CPI surveys.

relationship that existed between FSC wages and AHE during the pre-1974 base period.[84]

FSC's "Proportional" Index Approach. Under the most obvious of the index approaches, FSC determined the average percentage relationship during the base period between, on the one hand, the wages of each FSC labor grade and, on the other, AHE. For example, during the period August 1968 through September 1974, the wages of FSC's Grade 3 Charlotte employees averaged 96.3 percent of AHE.[85] Grade 3 wages for the post-1973 period may then be reconstructed by multiplying 96.3 percent times the AHE figure for the desired date. Thus, since AHE was $5.60 in February 1980, the reconstructed wage for the Charlotte Grade 3 employee would be $5.39 ($5.60 times .963).

That approach maintains the same percentage spread between labor grades that existed, on the average, during the base period. It thus assumes that the net impact of all wage increases that FSC would have given in the post-1973 period (but for FSC's unfair labor practice) would have been to maintain a constant percentage relationship between FSC's various labor grades at Charlotte.

The "Across-The-Board" Index Approach. FSC recognized that, alternatively, FSC could have given general wage increases during the post-1973 years by increasing every employee's wage by the same dollar amount. Accordingly, FSC provided an alternative to the first approach. Under the alternative FSC determined the average percentage difference during the base period between the average FSC wage and AHE. The Charlotte percentage worked out to be 102.6 percent of AHE.[86] FSC then went through the following steps to reconstruct wages for each relevant postbase period point in time:

> 1. Determine the dollar increase in AHE that occurred since the previous point in time. For example the Charlotte SMSA primary metals AHE increased by 37 cents between February 1979 and February 1980.
>
> 2. Multiply the base-period differential figure times the AHE increase. (E.g., 102.6% times 37 cents.)
>
> 3. The resulting figure (38 cents in our example) constitutes the across-the-board increase.

Uniform dollar across-the-board wage increases compress the percentage difference between one labor grade and another. For example, under this alternative the reconstructed wage rate for 1980 for Charlotte Grade 9 employee (the highest grade in the transformed wage structure) is 40 percent higher than the Grade 1 wage rate. Under the "proportional" increase approach, the 1980 Grade 9 wage rate is 65 percent higher than Grade 1.

The "Combination" Index Approach. The last variation proposed by FSC is a combination of the first two. FSC explains this approach as follows:

> During the 1975–1980 period, there were 50 wage increases at the various plants of Florida Steel. Of these increases, 33 were across the board increases which granted the same dollar increase to employees regardless of grade. The remaining 17 wage increases provided for larger increases in dollar terms (though perhaps not in percent terms) to employees in the higher salary grades in order to maintain proportional wage differentials. Our estimates [from the proportional index model] provides for the maintenance of proportional wage differentials. [The across-the-board index model] provides for only across the board wage increases. The above estimates allow for both, with a weight of two attached to the across the board estimates and a weight of one granted to the proportional wage increase estimates. These weights reflect the 33 across the board increases compared to the 17 proportional wage increases which were granted at Florida Steel plants during the 1975–1980 period.[87]

Thus the "combination index" reconstructed wage for, say, Charlotte Grade 1 for February 1980 is determined as follows:

> 1. The reconstructed wage increase between February 1973 (the last base period wage increase) and February 1980 for Charlotte Grade 1 employees under the proportional index approach is $1.98; under the across-the-board approach it is $2.47.
>
> 2. $1.98 plus two times $2.47, all divided by 3, equals $2.31. The combination index model's reconstructed 1980 wage for Charlotte Grade 1 accordingly is $2.31 plus the last base period wage ($2.81) or $5.12.

As an example of the impact of the combination approach, it produces a 1980 Charlotte Grade 9 to Grade 1 ratio of 1.47:1. In contrast, the comparable proportional index ratio is 1.65:1. The comparable across-the-board index ratio is 1.40:1.

Table 7 [see Appendix G] lists a sampling of the 1980 reconstructed wages produced by FSC's various index

---

[84] FSC's evidence includes index models that vary by AHE series used, by whether or not AHE monthly data is smoothed by using a moving average, by the weighting given to the various base period wage increases, and by the number of times during the base period that FSC wages are compared to AHE in order to get an average: See RX–72 through 79A–2, revised. I am convinced that the most appropriate index models of all those introduced by FSC are those that use smoothed data from the Charlotte primary metal AHE series; that weight each FSC wage increase during the base period based on the number of months the increase was in effect; and that compare FSC wages to AHE solely at the time of each increase in FSC wages. Accordingly, the following discussion is predicated on RX–79A–2, revised.

[85] See RX–79A–2 revised, Table 2A. The exhibit is based on a 9-grade "transformed" wage structure. Thus grade 3 as used in the exhibit represents a much higher pay scale than grade 3 in the 19-grade structure actually in place during the base period.

[86] That is the base period relationship between AHE and the average wage in a transformed rate structure. The actual average Charlotte FSC base period wage differs from the average wage under FSC's transformation, and thus the actual base period relationship between AHE and the average Charlotte FSC wage would also differ.

[87] E.g., revised RX–79A–2 (emphasis in original).

models and the analogous wages from FSC's regression model.[88]

Advantages of FSC's Index Models

As discussed earlier, changes in AHE levels reflect the net impact of the various forces impinging on the labor market. Over any relatively brief time period changes in any one company's wage levels may be—in fact are likely to be—different from changes at that same point in AHE. But over a period of years those differences, on the average, will diminish absent some long-term set of circumstances unique to that company. Moreover, for comparable reasons changes in any one company's wage levels are no more or less likely to be proportionally smaller than the respective changes in AHE levels than they are to be larger than such AHE changes—again, absent circumstances at the company that push one way or the other. (It bears repeating that the reference is to changes in wages versus changes in AHE. No one contends that any single employer's wage levels will tend to be the same as AHE.)

Those considerations make FSC's index approach an attractive possible answer to the wage reconstruction problem facing the Board in this proceeding. And there is an additional attraction: From the vantage point of those affected by the reconstruction approach adopted by the Board, the index method is relatively easy to understand. That certainly is not the case with either of the regression approaches offered by the parties.

Problems With FSC's Index Models

Use of Multi-year Average. There is one overriding problem with all of FSC's index models: They all are based on the average difference during the base period years between FSC wages, on the one hand, and AHE levels, on the other. And as discussed in connection with FSC's regression model, that use of multi-year averages to establish the difference between FSC wages and AHE levels is unacceptable. It fails to reflect the growth in the FSC's wages relative to AHE during the course of the base period.

Lack of Statistical Measurements of the Probable Accuracy of the Forecasts. Regression models can provide statistical measures of the probable accuracy of the models' forecasts. (See fn. 45, above, and the accompanying text.) FSC's index models cannot do that, and the General Counsel attacks FSC's index models because of that.

In some settings regression analysis clearly provides the best way to make sense out of numerical data.[89] In this proceeding, for example, regression analysis would have been the ideal method for determining the extent of the accuracy of FSC's claim that in general it seeks to set wages at 104 percent of wage practice line levels. (As it happens, no one used regression analysis for that purpose.)

But for a variety of reasons regression analysis did not turn out to be a useful means for reconstructing FSC wage rates. The subject has already been discussed (connection with the General Counsel's model). But to recapitulate briefly: (1) no party could provide an appropriate basis for assuming the continuation in the backpay period of the nonparallel relationship between FSC wages and AHE levels that the General Counsel's regression found to exist during the base period; and (2) the base period provides insufficient data for regression purposes. That second factor—insufficient data—led the General Counsel to use a model design that presented serious autocorrelation problems. And that, in turn, means that the statistical indicators of accuracy produced by the General Counsel's model are meaningless. As Dr. Clapper, the author of the model, testified, it would be inappropriate to rely on any of such indicators.

As for FSC's regression models, they do not use regression techniques to determine the nature of the relationship between FSC wage rates and area wage levels. Rather, FSC used regression analysis as a way of arriving at averages in sets of data. Thus the statistical measures produced by FSC's regression models are beside the point.

The contention that regression analysis is a superior technique because of the "statistical tests grounded in mathematical proofs of the model's overall correctness"[90] accordingly fails to come to grips with the implications of the autocorrelation inherent in the General Counsel's models and with the topsy turvy way that FSC chose to use regression analysis.

What all that adds up to is that none of the Charlotte wage reconstruction models submitted into evidence by the parties offers a satisfactory way of computing backpay. But the record does suggest a workable alternative. That alternative will be considered in part VI, after discussion of the parties' Indiantown wage reconstruction models.

V. INDIANTOWN

A. The General Counsel's Indiantown Model

The General Counsel's Indiantown model, like his Charlotte model, uses a multiple regression approach to find the relationship between FSC wages and AHE during a base period. The Indiantown model replicates the methodology of the Charlotte model except in five respects. First, the AHE figures that Dr. Clapper correlated with FSC's Indiantown wages were taken from the "all manufacturing" AHE series for the State of Florida.[91] Second, the wage rates of all of the Indiantown grades moved in a sufficiently parallel fashion during the base period to enable Dr. Clapper to use one regression equation for all grades (instead of two equations, as in the case of his Charlotte models). Third, the Indiantown model uses a base period of September 1970 through December 1973. (The latter date was the effective date of the last wage increase at Indiantown prior to FSC's un-

[88] The figures in Table 7 [see Appendix G] are taken from RX-79A-2, revised, and RX-62. All figures are as of February 1980 except for the FSC regression figures, which are as of January 1980.

[89] See Coble v. Hot Springs School District No. 6, 682 F.2d 721, 731-732 (8th Cir. 1982).

[90] Steelworkers Br. 5.

[91] Dr. Clapper originally used the all manufacturing AHE series for Palm Beach County. That will be discussed below.

lawful change in wage policy. As for the September 1970 date, FSC opened the plant in March 1970. But the pre-September wage rates were not included in the model since they were "not developed in the same fashion" as the later rates.)[92] Fourth, instead of reconstructing Indiantown's wage structure based on the average dollar difference between one grade and the next throughout the base period, as in the Charlotte models, Dr. Clapper used the average difference during the last 2 years of the Indiantown base period. Fifth, the Indiantown model includes a "jump shift" adjustment to one of the wage increases granted by FSC during the base period.

In that last respect, Dr. Clapper discovered that the model (without the jump shift) resulted in a disappointing "fit" (relationship between regression equation and data). An investigation into the causes of the problem led Dr. Clapper to ask whether the February 1973 increase at Indiantown was an unusual one. Told that it was, Dr. Clapper made an adjustment to the model based on the assumption that part of the February 1973 increase was an extraordinary, one-time event. (The February 1973 increase will be further considered below.)

The model, as adjusted, produced a slope of 1.57. That is, during the base period, averaging among the various labor grades, for every one dollar increase in AHE, FSC's Indiantown wages increased by $1.57.[93] Table 9 [see Appendix G], shows examples of the resulting reconstructed wages.[94]

The General Counsel's Indiantown model presents the same problems as his Charlotte models. And thus, like his Charlotte models, the Indiantown model is not an acceptable approach to reconstructing the wages of FSC employees for the backpay period. The model is beset by high levels of autocorrelation. And again the record fails to indicate why one should assume, just because Indiantown wages increased faster than AHE between 1970 and 1973, that that trend would have continued thereafter but for FSC's wrongful change in wage policy.[95]

AHE Considerations—Change in the Scope of the Industry Grouping. The General Counsel originally used the "all manufacturing" AHE series for Palm Beach County, Florida, in his Indiantown model. Subsequently, however, the General Counsel learned that in 1972 BLS had changed the scope of all the manufacturing series. The change, which was made on a nationwide basis, had varying impacts on AHE data, depending upon geographical area. For reasons not clear on this record the impact was particularly severe in the case of Palm Beach County data, and BLS accordingly "declared a discontinuity . . . or interruption . . . in the West Palm Beach series."[96] That led the General Counsel to redo the model using all manufacturing data for the "Florida statewide" area.[97]

But again, while the AHE all manufacturing series for the State of Florida has its imperfections, it appears to be at least as good a time series, for purposes of reconstructing Indiantown wages, as any other series suggested by the parties.[98]

---

[92] Tr. 1067 (witness Clapper). All parties concur in the use of September 1970 as the start of the Indiantown base period. Actual base period wage rates for FSC's Indiantown plant are set forth in Table 8 [see Appendix G].

[93] In contrast, grade-by-grade regressions produced the following slopes (Source: GX–122):

Grade	Slope
1	1.52
2	1.44
3	1.50
4	1.53
5	1.57
6	1.59
7	1.68
8	0

[94] The table uses wages as of December since December 1973 was the effective date of the last general wage increase prior to FSC's unlawful change in wage policy. (Thus, the December 1973 wage shown in the table is the actual wage payed by FSC, not a reconstructed wage.) Table 9, and the other computations in this decision that use Florida statewide all manufacturing AHE, are based on the following AHE levels:

12 mos. ended December	Avg. monthly AHE level
1973	3.45
1974	3.76
1976	4.36
1979	5.48
1980	5.98

[95] As Table 9 [see Appendix G] indicates, under the General Counsel's principal Indiantown model the wages of the reconstructed lower Indiantown grades increase relatively faster than do the upper grade wages. (That is comparable to the General Counsel's reconstructed Charlotte wages: see fn. 49, above.) Under a revised General Counsel model in which the wages of all grades increase proportionally, the growth of the reconstructed FSC wages relative to AHE would be as follows: grade 1 would increase from 10 percent of AHE in 1973 to 112 percent in 1980; grade 5 would increase from 136 percent of AHE in 1973 to 151 percent in 1980; and grade 9 would increase from 178 percent of AHE in 1973 to 197 percent in 1980: See GCX–126.

[96] Tr. 3728 (witness Haworth). Additional discontinuities were declared in the Palm Beach all manufacturing series again in 1977 and 1978.

[97] The model that used the Palm Beach County data produced much lower projected wage rates than did the model that used Florida statewide data. E.g., the Palm Beach model produced a Grade 1 wage of $4.67 and a Grade 9 wage of $7.32 for December 1978. The comparable figures from the Florida statewide model are $6.01 and $8.66. Thus the General Counsel's switch in the AHE series was understandably upsetting to FSC. (The Company had quickly agreed to pay the backpay amounts resulting from the Palm Beach model's wage reconstructions and in fact put the model's then current wage reconstructions into effect as the wage rates for its Indiantown employees.) But the General Counsel made the change in timely fashion and for the reasons discussed above, not for arbitrary or capricious ones. Accordingly it is the Indiantown model based on Florida statewide data, rather than the model based on Palm Beach County data, that is appropriate for consideration here: Trinity Valley Iron & Steel Co. v. NLRB, 410 F.2d 1161 (5th Cir. 1969).

[98] FSC's Tampa facility is in the city limits of Tampa, unquestionably an urban setting. The Indiantown facility is in a rural area. Generally speaking, wage rates in urban areas are higher than wage rates for comparable jobs in rural areas. Nonetheless the Indiantown wage forecast by the General Counsel's model are considerably higher than the wages at the Tampa facility. FSC claims that these circumstances argue against the reasonableness of the General Counsel's forecasts. As indicated above, I agree with FSC that the General Counsel's Indiantown model should not be adopted. But that is not because I think that FSC's Tampa argument has any validity. The location of the Indiantown facility is such that the majority of its employees have to commute relatively long distances (as will be discussed below). No one claims that that is the case at FSC's Tampa facility. And the record is clear that employers must pay a premium to attract workers to jobs necessitating long-distance commuting.

B. FSC's Indiantown Regression Model

From 1970 through 1973 FSC conducted wage surveys in the Indiantown area. FSC conducted no such Indiantown wage surveys from 1974 through 1979. But then, in late 1980, FSC conducted another wage survey in the Indiantown area (solely for the purpose of preparing evidence for submission in this proceeding).

FSC's Indiantown regression model is much the same as its Charlotte regression model, but with Indiantown survey data playing the role in FSC's Indiantown model that CPI data played in FSC's Charlotte model. The major difference is that while CPI data are available for all years after 1969, postbase period survey data are available at Indiantown only for 1980.

As in its Charlotte model, FSC Indiantown model generates reconstructed wages by determining: (1) average annual area wage level; (2) base period between the average the FSC wage rate and the average Indiantown survey wage rate.

Thus to use FSC's Indiantown regression model to reconstruct the wages for, say, Indiantown Grade 5 for 1980, one proceeds as follows (using the figures in RX-65):

(1) Intercept (base year figure): $1.659.

(2) Year add-on for 1980: $2.125.

(3) Average gap between labor grades for 1980: $.633. Five times $.633 (since we are here reconstructing grade 5) equals $3.165.

(4) FSC add-on: $.447.

(5) The reconstructed 1980 wage rate for FSC's Indiantown Grade 5 is $7.40. (i.e., $1.659 plus $.447.)

Wage Rates for 1974 Through 1979. As touched on above, FSC's surveys of Indiantown area wages are available for 1970–1973 and 1980. No surveys were conducted in the years 1974 through 1979. One way of handling the absence of survey data for the years 1974 through 1979 would be a simple, straight-line, interpolation. And FSC does provide reconstructed wage rates determined in that manner.[99] But FSC points out that while average area wages increased each year in the period 1974–1979, the rates of growth varied from year to year. To take account of that variance, FSC used AHE data to determine year-to-year rates of growth and then applied those growth rates to the reconstructed wage rates produced by the model. (AHE data show that growth rates were much higher in 1978 and 1979 than in the 1974–1977 period. The impact of that pattern on reconstructed wage rates is to diminish backpay amounts relative to the amounts produced by a straight-line interpolation.)[100] The resulting revised version of the reconstructed wage rates is FSC's proposal for the wage rates the Board should adopt in establishing backpay amounts for Indiantown employees. Those revised rates are set out in RX-68.

Table 10 [see Appendix G] compares FSC's and the General Counsel's proposed reconstructed Indiantown wage rates for illustrative years and labor grades.

The Major Faults of FSC's Indiantown Model

Use of a Differential Between FSC Wages and Survey Wages Based on a Base-Period Average. FSC's Indiantown model computes one average FSC Indiantown wage for the 3 years 1970, 1971, and 1973, and compares that figure to the average wage paid by the surveyed companies in those 3 years. (Actually the mechanics of that computation are different, and more complicated, than that description.) It turns out that FSC's wages averaged 44.7 cents higher than the surveyed companies' wages. Under FSC's approach, wages for the post-1973 period are reconstructed by first reconstructing survey wages for the various labor grades and the various post-1973 years and then adding the 44.7 cents to each such reconstructed wage rate.

The use of a constant dollar figure (44.7 cents) rather than a percentage figure as the FSC difference presents obvious problems. (See the discussion of this point in connection with FSC's Charlotte model.) But that can be put aside as easily curable. The real problem with FSC's approach relates to the changes during the course of the base period in the relationship between, on the one hand, FSC wages and, on the other, the average level of wages paid by other employers. The nature of those changes is most readily seen in a straightforward comparison of average FSC Indiantown wages during the 1970–1973 period with AHE data for that same period. As can be seen [see Appendix G, Table 11], average FSC wages increased faster than AHE both in dollar and percentage terms.[101]

The implicit assumption in FSC's use of multi-year averages to arrive at the FSC differential (44.7 cents) is that the differences between FSC Indiantown wages and the average wages of other employers that existed at the end of the period are likely to have returned to earlier levels (had FSC not changed its wage-setting pattern). But that assumption is contradicted by the substantial increase in FSC wages relative to those paid by other employers.

FSC made no attempt to explain why the differential between its Charlotte wages and average area wages generally was larger at the end of the base period than at the beginning. But as to the Indiantown situation, FSC did go to considerable lengths in an effort to show that, for two reasons, the relatively rapid increase in Indiantown wages during the base period was without long-term significance. The two reasons put forth by FSC: (1) the fact that the Indiantown facility first started operations in 1970; and (2) FSC's response to wage controls.

[99] RX-66.

[100] See Tr. 1970–72 and 2597–98 for Dr. Haworth's explanation of her interpolation procedure. Dr. Clapper took issue with that procedure and proposed an alternative: See Tr. 2784–87 and GCX-112. If I had to choose, I would pick Dr. Clapper's interpolation method as being a more logical and straightforward approach.

[101] Average FSC Indiantown wages and AHE levels are taken from RX-71A-1. The General Counsel's grade-by-grade regressions show that practically all of the various FSC Indiantown wage rates grew proportionally much faster over the base period than did AHE (see fn. 93, above). Looking at grade-by-grade comparisons of FSC wages and the wages paid by the companies in the Indiantown-area surveys (see GCX-106), against most of the FSC wage rates increased during the base period relative to their survey counterparts.

"Start-up" Wages at Indiantown. FSC claims that its Indiantown facility was in a "start-up" phase throughout the base period. According to the testimony of James Hogue, FSC's vice-president for industrial relations, it is FSC's policy to set initial wages at a new facility at between 108 percent and 112 percent of the relevant wage practice line. The Company then aims to get back to its usual 104-percent standard within 4 or 5 years.

That policy, Hogue said, developed out of its experience at Indiantown. Accordingly, while a start-up wage premium was not implemented immediately at the Indiantown facility, one was put into effect "sometime after the plant started."[102] What that means, argues FSC, is that the large differential that existed at the end of the base period between FSC's Indiantown wages, on the one hand, and, on the other, average area wages, was a function of FSC's start-up needs.

FSC points out that a start-up premium was essential at Indiantown for several reasons. First, as is the case with any new facility, it must be staffed at least partially with employees drawn away from other employers, and some premium is necessary just to overcome inertia. Second, Indiantown is too small a community to have had within it any large proportion of the people that FSC needed to staff the new facility. Thus FSC had to convince prospective employees either to move to the Indiantown area or to commute relatively long distances. And third, the kind of work offered at the FSC plant was different from the types of work potential employees in the area were accustomed to.

But the record as a whole paints a different picture from the one drawn by the Company.

To begin with, based on FSC's description of its wage-setting procedures, it appears that the Company did use a start-up premium in establishing its Indiantown wage rates in September 1970: The Indiantown wage structure in September 1970 was generally parallel to, and about 12 percent higher than, the wage practice line.[103] That closely fits Hogue's description of start-up wages.

Had FSC then followed the start-up procedures portrayed in Hogue's testimony, FSC wage levels would have gradually decreased, relative to the wage practice lines, to a level just slightly higher than area standards. But what in fact happened is that in December 1971 FSC precipitously dropped the middle and upper grade wages to well below the level of the wage practice line. At the same time FSC increased, on a relative basis, entry level wages. Moreover, there was not hint of an overall decline in FSC wages relative to area wages at any time during the rest of the base period. (No one with any knowledge of the employment situation at the Indiantown plant explained that series of relationships between FSC's wage structure and the relevant wage practice lines.)

One could speculate, I suppose, that as late as the end of 1973 FSC was still trying to find a wage level high enough to fill substantial numbers of jobs that had remained vacant from the time the Indiantown plant got underway. That would mean that FSC's management initially badly miscalculated the wage levels necessary to fill the newly created jobs and then continued to miscalculate for the next 3 years, to the point of seeing needed work go undone because of 3-year-long job vacancies.

If that were in fact the case, it would be inappropriate to assign much relevance, as with regard to predicting future wage patterns, to change during the base period in FSC wages relative to area wages. But no FSC witness testified that it took FSC 3 years to find the initial employees for many Indiantown job slots. And the record contains no employment data showing that jobs at the Indiantown plant went unfilled from their creation in 1970 through 1973.

I am willing to assume that FSC found it harder than it expected to retain its Indiantown employees, particularly in the lower grades, and to fill openings when employees left the Indiantown plant.[104] But retaining and replacing employees (as opposed to the extensive recruiting needed to fill new jobs in a new plant) are routine functions in an ongoing plant. Thus, the fact that it was soon after the plant went into operation that these problems may have cropped up has little if any significance when evaluating the meaning of changes in base period FSC wage rates relative to area wage levels.

Wage Controls. Federally imposed limits on wage increases were in effect for much of the base period. In 1972 wage increases of up to 5.5 percent for most workers, and larger increases for the lowest paid workers were permitted without specific governmental authorization. FSC concluded that a 5.5-percent increase would not be sufficient at the Indiantown plant and sought permission to implement a 7-percent increase. Permission for the increase was granted and FSC implemented it in October 1972. Then, in 1973, FSC sought permission for an even larger exception to wage control limitations. Permission again was granted, and FSC implemented wage increases as high as 17 percent.[105]

---

[102] Tr. 1894.

[103] See Appendix B, for a graphic indication of that relationship [omitted from publication].

[104] The difficulties in retaining and replacing employees could be the very same that FSC witness Hogue said made it hard to fill the newly created jobs when the plant opened in 1970. Thus, according to the testimony of FSC's compensation manager in an earlier stage of this case, a sizable wage increase was needed in December 1973—

> . . . because [Indiantown] is a very small community; also, it's . . . way out from any population center, and you need to have something to attract people to drive that far and work out in the boondocks. . . . We have to have some sort of an incentive for people to drive that far, to work out a great distance from the population centers, and also to work in an industry which is foreign to the area, with quite different working conditions, hours, type of work, and everything else concerned with a steel mill, in relation to industry common to the area. We had to have some sort of a premium, in other words: GCX–39, p. 268. See also GCX–38, p. 77.

[105] Indiantown wages increased as follows in February 1973 (compared with October 1972).

Grade, % increase	Increase in cents
1, 13%	.35
2, 13%	.40

Continued

The wage increases received by FSC's Indiantown employees in October 1972 and February 1973 were substantially larger than the increases received during that period by the average worker in the Indiantown area. But that, argues FSC, was merely a function of FSC's ability to obtain special relief from Federal wage controls. Most firms, and in particular small firms, did not have that same capability. For that reason, so the argument goes, the faster-than-average growth in FSC wages in 1972 and 1973 says nothing about the appropriate position of FSC wages relative to average area wages in the period.

But it does not seem to me that that argument holds up under inspection. For one thing, the record suggests that small firms may have been at least as able as large firms to put big pay increases into effect during the wage control era.[106] For another, many employees whose wages were included in surveys against which FSC wages may be compared were employed by companies whose resources do not compare unfavorably to FSC's.[107] But beyond all that, no one forced FSC to obtain special wage increase exceptions. Rather, in late 1972 and early 1973 FSC obviously thought it necessary to increase its pay scale at Indiantown relative to area wages—which, it knew, were being capped by Federal controls. And that is precisely the kind of circumstance that ought to be considered when attempting to determine the appropriate level of FSC wages relative to average wages in the area.

What all that adds up to is that nothing in the record suggests that the relationship between FSC's Indiantown wages and area wages, as that relationship existed at the end of the base period, was a fluke. Similarly, nothing in the record suggests that that end-of-the-base-period relationship was more likely to return to earlier levels than it was to increase still further. Yet FSC's regression model is predicated on the assumption that FSC wages would decline relative to area wages in the years after 1973. Since that assumption is unfounded, FSC's Indiantown regression model is unacceptable.

The 1980 Indiantown Survey. In December 1980 FSC obtained wage rate data from employers in and around Indiantown.[108] Data were sought only from firms that had been included in FSC's 1973 survey.[109] And only data from job categories included in the 1973 survey were used for the 1980 survey.

The 1980 survey is obviously less likely to be representative of area wages than even the base period FSC surveys, given the constraints placed on the firms and jobs to be included in the survey.[110] And no one contends that the base period surveys were in fact representative samples. But for all that, I am not convinced that 1980 AHE figures are necessarily more reflective of the wages that FSC would have paid (absent FSC's unfair labor practices) than the figures derived from the 1980 survey. The point is that during the base period FSC did pay heed—to some undeterminable extent—to its area surveys. And the 1980 survey much more closely approximates the survey that FSC would have conducted in 1980 had it continued its pre-1974 practices than does any AHE series.

The main problem with FSC's use of Indiantown survey data accordingly is not wholly a function of the quality of those data. Rather, the difficulty with using survey data for wage reconstruction purposes is that no surveys were conducted from 1974 through 1979. Thus all of the wage reconstructions for the entire post-1974 period produced by FSC's regression model are dependent on one survey, the one conducted in 1980. Given the substantial possibility that the survey's figures failed to capture the labor market situation in and around Indiantown, that is simply putting too many eggs in one basket.

C. FSC's Indiantown "Index" Models

As discussed earlier, FSC proposed several ways of reconstructing its Charlotte wages utilizing the percentage relationships between AHE data and FSC wages that existed during the 1969–1973 base period. FSC submitted evidence reconstructing the wages of its Indiantown facility using precisely the same approaches. Again, FSC provided wage reconstructions based on the assumptions of (1) continuous percentage increase in wages; (2) continuous across-the-board wage increases (i.e. same dollar amount of increase for each wage grade); and (3) a combination of percentage and across-the-board (in a ratio of two across-the-board increases for every percentage increase). Table 12 [see Appendix G] shows the reconstructed wages produced by FSC's index models for the highest and lowest Indiantown grades.[111]

But as is the case with all of FSC's other wage reconstruction efforts, its Indiantown index models are unacceptable in that they reconstruct post-1973 wages on the basis of the average base period relationship between FSC wages and those of other employers.

3, 8%	.28
4, 7%	.27
5, 9%	.35
6, 12%	.50
7, 16%	.75
8, 0	0
9, 17%	.82
average wage, all grades, 11%	.43

[106] See Tr. 1991–92, 2277–78 (witness Haworth).

[107] Included in FSC's area surveys: W. R. Grace; Coca-Cola; Southern Bell; and Florida Power & Light. The largest employer in the Indiantown area is another major corporation, Pratt & Whitney. And while that company was not included in FSC's surveys, its wage levels presumably affected area wages.

[108] FSC contracted with Hotton & Associates, Inc., to conduct the 1980 survey. Robert L. Brintle did the actual surveying. Brintle and George Hotton "calculated the data." Hotton "was responsible for the preparation of the final report" on the survey: Tr. 1634 (witness Hotton). Brintle did not testify. Hotton did.

[109] The 1980 survey included data from 16 companies. There were 18 companies in the 1973 survey. But 1 of the 18 had gone out of business. And with another employer, based on the information obtained by Brintle, "we just could not match jobs as they existed in 1973 with what they purported to have in 1980." Tr. 1641 (witness Hotton).

[110] That is not an attack on FSC's motivation in putting those limits on the survey. Had the survey included companies or jobs not on the 1973 list, the 1980 survey surely would have been criticized for its lack of consistency.

[111] Source: RX-71A-1; RX-68; and GCX-100.

VI. WAGE RECONSTRUCTION—CONCLUSION

The previous two parts of this decision considered the General Counsel's Charlotte and Indiantown regression models, FSC's regression models, and FSC's various index models. Those were the only proposed approaches to wage reconstruction examined in any detail at the hearing. Yet as discussed above at some considerable length, none of them is a satisfactory way of computing backpay. The massive amounts of factual data submitted by the parties and the parties' very thorough analysis of that data do, however, point to a way of reconstructing FSC wages that adopts the most cogent contentions of each of the parties.

A. Use of End-of-Base-Period Relationships

Any method of reconstructing FSC's Charlotte and Indiantown wages for the post-1973 years must, it seems to me, take into account these considerations:

(1) A comparison must be made with some set of earnings data available both in the pre-1974 and post-1973 periods; and BLS's AHE is the best such set.

(2) Absent specific circumstances to the contrary, at any given time an employer's wages are no more likely to increase faster than AHE than to decrease faster than AHE (and vice versa); and over a period of years the employer's wage levels will tend to remain in the same proportional relationship with AHE.

(3) During the post-1973 period there were no circumstances at play at FSC's Charlotte or Indiantown plants that would indicate that FSC wages would have proportionally changed either faster or slower than AHE.

(4) During the pre-1974 period, wages at FSC's Charlotte and Indiantown plants increased proportionally faster than did AHE, so that the difference between the average FSC wage and AHE was substantially greater at the end of that period than at any other time in that period.

(5) There is no evidence that the level of FSC's wage rates, relative to AHE, at the end of the base period was a temporary phenomenon and that FSC's wages were thus likely to retreat relative to AHE. Rather, the generally steady upward trend of FSC wages relative to AHE throughout the base period is a positive indication that a further advance in FSC wages relative to AHE was just as probable as a decline (had FSC not changed its wage policies).

While the General Counsel's and FSC's models are each consistent with some of those considerations, none is consistent with all of them. There is, however, one approach—basically a modification of FSC's "index" models—that would be consistent with each of those considerations. That is, reconstruct post-1973 FSC wages based on the relationship between FSC wages and AHE as that relationship existed at the end of the base period. That approach: (1) uses AHE data; (2) takes into account that a company's wage levels are no more likely to increase proportionally faster than AHE than to decrease faster than AHE absent specific circumstances to the contrary; (3) takes into account that no such circumstances were shown to have been present at FSC's Charlotte or Indiantown plants during the backpay period; and (4) reflects the rise in FSC wages relative to AHE during the base period.

The Steelworkers referred on brief to an end-of-the-base-period index model. FSC responded as follows:

> Reliance on the last pre-violation period is erroneous and unreasonable . . . because such reliance assumes that only one point in time accurately reflects long-term Florida Steel policy and that earlier market adjustments are not relevant. Clearly, an accurate reflection of Florida Steel policy would require more than one point in time. . . . It is particularly anomalous that the [end of the base period] . . . was during the lifting of wage and price controls, when Florida Steel was able to change its wage rates significantly. Other firms, reporting earnings to the BLS for the AHE series appear not to have acted as quickly.[112]

FSC's contentions are not persuasive. For one thing, it simply is not "unreasonable" to base a prediction of a company's future wage levels on the relationship between AHE and the company's wage rates at one point in time (absent information showing that that particular relationship was idiosyncratic).

> [U]nless there is reason to believe that you are . . . out of line with the market . . . I would expect that [the percentage relationship between AHE and the Company's wages] would be about the same as it was before. I would assume that we were in equilibrium at that moment, unless I had other information.[113]

An index model based on a number of sets of FSC-AHE relationships would ordinarily be preferable to a model based on only one. But that is only if each such set of relationships was likely to be as good a predictor of future FSC behavior as each of the others. And it is that qualification that points to the use of an end-of-the-base period model. As reiterated throughout parts IV and V of this decision, base period patterns show that the relationships between AHE and FSC wage rates prior to the time of FSC's last base period wage increases are inappropriate for predicting FSC's probable postbase period behavior.

As for FSC's wage control contentions, as noted in part V they are premised on the assumption that the increase, during the wage control period, in FSC's wage rates relative to the wage levels at other firms was the fortuitous result of FSC's efficiency in dealing with government regulation, rather than the product of managerial choice. That would be a dubious proposition under any circumstance. It is particularly so in the case of FSC, whose management has been shown to be thorough, knowledgeable, and deliberate in all matters relating to employee compensation.

[112] FSC's Limited Reply Br. 4.

[113] Tr. 3882 (FSC witness Haworth).

As one witness said, and as the record as a whole proves, finding a way to reconstruct FSC's Charlotte and Indiantown wages is "a very horrible task."[114] It is clear that a wage reconstruction model that reconstructs FSC wages based on end-of-base-period relationships to AHE will not precisely duplicate the wages that FSC would have implemented had it not violated the Act. But no method of reconstructing FSC wages could ever do that. And the end-of-base-period approach is a more reasonable one than anything else anyone has proposed. That is enough for me to conclude that it should be used to reconstruct, for backpay purposes, FSC's Charlotte and Indiantown wage rates for the years since 1973.

B. Wage Structure

As may be recalled, FSC provided three different ways of using an "index" approach to wage reconstruction: (1) a straight percentage approach; (2) an "across-the-board" model; and (3) a combination of (1) and (2). The main difference between them is that under method (1) the percentage difference between the various grades stays the same (as wage levels increase over time) while the dollar difference between grades increases. Under method (2) the dollar difference between grades stays the same while the percentage difference decreases. (Method (3), of course, has some of the elements of both (1) and (2).) Those same three approaches can be used with an end-of-base-period model. And that means that it is necessary to focus on wage structure: Had FSC not unlawfully changed its wage policies, would the grade-versus-grade wage relationships that existed during the pre-1974 base period have changed; and if so, how.

General Counsel's Wage Structure Contentions—Charlotte. As discussed earlier, the General Counsel's Charlotte wage reconstruction is based on two regression models. Both of those models assume that the various grades would have maintained a constant dollar difference from one another throughout the post-1973 years but for FSC's unlawful behavior. For example, under the General Counsel's proposed wage reconstruction, although the Charlotte Grade 7 wage increases from $3.69 in February 1974 to $7.47 in February 1981, it remains exactly $1.27 less than the General Counsel's proposed Grade 15 wage throughout that time. Thus, the percentage difference between those two projected wage rates decreases: from 34 percent in 1974 to 16 percent in 1981.

The General Counsel based the projected grade-to-grade dollar differences on the average grade-to-grade dollar differences between the various Charlotte labor grades during the 1969–1973 base period. (I.e., the projected difference between, say, Grade 4 RF and Grade 5 RF was the average dollar difference between those two grades during the base period.)[115]

The use of a constant dollar difference between grades is contrary to the grade-versus-grade behavior at Charlotte during the base period. Throughout the base period the dollar difference between grades steadily increased. And the percentage spread between grades, which would have decreased if a constant-dollar-difference had been maintained, instead remained relatively steady.[116]

Table 13 [see Appendix G] shows the percentage and dollar difference between the highest and the lowest grades covered by the General Counsel's Charlotte models.

The General Counsel once again points to Tampa as support for his projections. And the fact is that at the Tampa mill the General Counsel's assumption of fixed dollar differences between grades is borne out throughout the 1976–1980 period "reconstructed" by the General Counsel's Tampa model: The dollar difference between any two labor grades remained constant (which resulted in a substantial decrease in the percentage spread). But I cannot conclude that the Tampa data permit the conclusion that but for FSC's unlawful wage policy change FSC would have maintained a fixed dollar difference between the nine lower Charlotte labor grades and between the various upper labor grades. First, there remains the fact that Tampa represents but 1 of FSC's 11 facilities. And second, nothing during Charlotte's base period hints at such a trend. The Tampa projection, on the other hand, precisely reflects the fact that during the Tampa "base period" FSC did maintain a constant dollar difference between grade levels.

Wage Structure—FSC's Regression Model. As discussed earlier, the CPI wage surveys include wage data on a labor-grade-by-labor-grade basis. AHE surveys, of course, do not. FSC's regression model uses the CPI data to obtain, on a yearly basis, the average gap between labor grades. (For example, FSC's models show the average gap between adjacent CPI labor grades in 1974 to have been about 28 cents. The FSC model then uses the CPI average-gap-between-labor-grades figure without modification to reconstruct FSC wages. Thus FSC's 1974 forecast for the wages of Grades 5 and 6 are, respectively, $3.99 per hour and $4.27 per hour: i.e., 28 cents apart.[117])

There are several problems with FSC's approach to reconstructing Charlotte's wage structure. But of most interest to us here is that FSC's regression model's processes inextricably mix together the predicted average yearly increase in wages (for all labor grades) and the predicted average gap between labor grades. (Statisticians call the problem one of "multicollinearity.")[118] As [114] Tr. 3147 (witness Fearn).

[115] Actually, the model determined the average dollar difference between each grade and Grade 1. But the effect is the same.

[116] The grade-by-grade regression models for Charlotte (see Table 2 [Appendix G]) show with relatively minor exception a steady increase in slope from low labor grade to high. That further reflects the invalidity of the constant-dollar-spread assumption.

[117] See RX–62.

[118] Dr. Haworth defined multicollinearity this way (referring to multiple regression models): "[W]hen two variables are related to each other, the coefficient of one of them in most cases [is] likely to take up some of the effect of the other one. The coefficient [of] that particular variable is really supposed to be measuring the impact of that variable. But perhaps it's measuring a joint impact of both variables. That's called confounding, because both variables' effects may be incorporated or imbedded in a single coefficient." (Tr. 3799–3800.)

a result there is a possibility that, for any given year, part of the grade-to-grade gap figure shown in FSC's model in fact should be ascribed to the year-to-year change. The reverse is true too. It could be that for any given year the grade-to-grade gap should be increased to include part of what the model shows to be the year-to-year difference.[119]

The premise behind FSC's use of CPI data to reconstruct the relationship of the various FSC grades to one another is that FSC's wage structure will inevitably refect market forces. The premises is an accurate one. And it points to examining CPI data directly, so as to avoid the multicollinearity problems generated by FSC's regression model.

Wage Structure Information Produced by the CPI Surveys. The General Counsel has compiled grade-by-grade CPI data for grades 1 through 9, for the years 1970 through 1980.[120] The data show that during the 4 years 1970 through 1973 the average CPI grade 9 wage rose from 66 percent higher than the average CPI grade 1 wage to 81 percent higher. [See Appendix G, Table 14.]

Generally speaking, the average CPI grade 9 wage increased relative to the CPI grade 1 wage during the years following 1973. [See Appendix G, Table 15.]

Charlotte Wage Structure—Conclusion. As noted earlier, using an end-of-the-base period index model, and the three most thoroughly considered index methods, the choice is among models producing the following relationships between FSC grades 1 and 15.

Method	Grade 15 as Percent of Grade 1 As of Feb. 1980
"Proportional"	181%
"Across-the-Board"	140%
"Combination"	153%

FSC's witness Haworth suggested that, if an index method is to be used, she would recommend the "combination" approach since it reflects the way FSC granted wage increases at its other plants. And a combination approach would be closer to the preference of the General Counsel and the Steelworkers than would the proportional approach.

Nevertheless it seems to me that the proportional approach is the more appropriate one. FSC's Charlotte grade 15 wage rates ranged from 174 percent to 181 percent of the grade 1 wage rates during the base period. Thus the proportional model more closely squares with Charlotte's wage structure during the base period than does any other index approach. And it is the closest to market realities, as shown by CPI data.

I accordingly conclude that for backpay purposes the wages of FSC's hourly paid bargaining unit Charlotte employees should be reconstructed by using an index model based on the percentage relationships that existed in February 1973 between, on the one hand, each of the various FSC wage levels and, on the other, the Charlotte SMSA primary metals AHE for February 1973 (12-month moving average).

Table 16 [see Appendix G] gives some examples of the reconstructed wage rates produced by the model adopted by this decision, together with analogous wage rates produced by the principal models of the General Counsel and FSC.[121]

Appendix D gives further examples of the reconstructed wage rates produced by the model adopted by this decision.

Wage Structure—Indiantown. During the base period the percentage difference between Indiantown grades 9 and 1 (the highest and lowest grades) ranged between 76 and 91, as Table 17 [see Appendix G] shows.[122]

As with his Charlotte models, the General Counsel's principal Indiantown wage reconstructions maintain a constant dollar difference between grades, resulting in an enormous decrease in the percentage difference. (The General Counsel's reconstructed grade 9 for 1980 is only 36 percent greater than his reconstructed grade 1.) Since the evidence supporting that approach at Indiantown is no more convincing than it was in the case of the General Counsel's Charlotte wage reconstructions, it must be rejected.

FSC's model, utilizing Indiantown wage surveys for the base period and for 1980, produces reconstructed wages that result in grade 9 starting 78 percent higher than grade 1 and increased gradually so that in 1980 it is 91 percent higher than grade 1. But as with FSC's Charlotte regression, its Indiantown model presents multicollinearity problems.

As for the Indiantown survey itself, it is based on so small a sample that the average grade-by-grade wage rates that it produces bounce around far more dramatically than they ought to. But for whatever it is worth, the 1980 survey suggests that in the Indiantown area the grade 9 relationship to grade 1 for that year was comparable to that of the pre-1974 period.[123]

Indiantown wage structure—Conclusion. The "proportional" index approach would produce the same relationship between grade 9 and grade 1 at each point in the post-1973 period as existed at the end of the base period; thus grade 9 would remain 76 percent greater than grade 1. The "across-the-board" index approach would produce a grade 9 wage that steadily declined relative to grade 1, so that by 1980 grade 9 would be only 39 per-

[119] "Because of the way Respondent's model is built and the difinitionally induced multicollinearity, it's virturally impossible to say with any reliability what the wage structure would be at any point in time, because you just can't disentangle the wage structure issues from the [year-to-year] trend issues": Tr. 2767 (witness Clapper).

[120] GCX-105. Under the CPI system the higher the grade number the lower the skills and wage level. But throughout this proceeding the parties revised the CPI numbering system to track FSC's (under which the higher the grade number the greater the skills and wage level). This decision follows the parties' practice.

[121] The labor grades referred to in the table are the grades based on the old, 19-grade, structure. I have used a four-place index figure (e.g., .8125 for Charlotte grade 1 and 1.472 for Charlotte grade 15). The figures given for FSC's regression model are as of January of the indicated years, not February.

[122] The various individual Indiantown grade-versus-grade relationships varied considerably. For example, grade 3 started out (in 1970) 11.2 percent higher than grade 2 and ended the base period only 3.3 percent higher. Grade 7, on the other hand, started 8.0 percent higher than grade 6 and climbed to 11.7 percent higher at the end of the base period. But the grade 9 relationship to grade 1 is the best one to focus on for our purpose in that it summarizes all the others.

[123] Data from GCX-106.

cent higher. (Under the "combination" approach, grade 9 would be 50 percent higher than grade 1 as of 1980.)

Given the base period wage relationships at FSC's Indiantown plant plus the scanty data from the 1980 survey, my conclusion is that, as with the Charlotte wage reconstructions, the most appropriate index model is one that maintains the end-of-the-base-period grade-versus-grade relationships—that is, the proportional approach. Thus my conclusion regarding the reconstruction of the wages of FSC's Indiantown hourly paid bargaining unit employees is that such reconstruction be based on an index model utilizing Florida statewide all manufacturing AHE (12-month moving average); and that the reconstructed wages reflect the relationship between the average level of such AHE for the 12 months ended December 1973 and each of the FSC wage rates that were retroactively made effective in that month.

Examples of the impact of that approach are set out in Appendix G, Table 19, and in Appendix E.

VII. POST-1973 DEVELOPMENTS AFFECTING WAGE RECONSTRUCTION

"TEAM"

Up through early 1974 FSC followed a policy of granting general wage increases annually. But as inflation rates climbed in 1974 FSC concluded that it should instead implement general wage increases quarterly. FSC called the new policy "TEAM."[124] FSC continued to conduct wage surveys on an annual basis (at plants other than Charlotte and Indiantown), and thus each year one of the four TEAM increases was influenced by the survey. The size of the other three increases each year reflected whatever tentative information could be collected plus, of course, corporate decisions about corporate needs.

FSC resumed its annual wage increase policy in late 1976.

The parties agree that, but for FSC's unlawful change in wage policy, FSC would have granted TEAM increases at Charlotte during the period November 30, 1974, through November 27, 1976. The comparable Indiantown dates are September 28, 1974, and September 25, 1976.[125]

As for reconstructing wage levels on TEAM dates, the most reasonable approach is simply to reconstruct each TEAM increase on the basis of the 12-month moving average AHE figure for the month of the TEAM increase—that is, use exactly the same method for reconstructing quarterly increases as is used for reconstructing annual increases. (For example, the Charlotte SMSA primary metals AHE figure for the 12 months ended May 1975 was $3.91. Since FSC's Charlotte grade 12 (mill) wage rate was 126.6 percent of AHE at the end of the base period, the reconstructed grade 12 wage rate for May 1975 is $4.95.)

Transformation of the Charlotte Grade Structure. As discussed earlier, the Charlotte grade structure during the pre-1974 base period specified 19 separate grades. (See Table 3, Appendix G.) FSC continued to use that structure until April 1977. At that point FSC, with the Steelworkers' concurrence, adopted a 9- or 10-grade structure for the Charlotte plant. (FSC says it is a 9-grade structure; the General Counsel says it is a 10-grade structure.) That raises the question of how to transform the old 19-grade structure into the new 9- or 10-grade structure for wage reconstruction purposes. In this proceeding FSC first transformed the Charlotte base period grades into a 9-grade structure; built its principal wage reconstruction models around the transformed grades; and then re-transformed the 9-grade structure produced by those models back into the old 19-grade structure for purposes of determining reconstructed Charlotte grades for the period 1974 to April 1977.

The General Counsel took a very different approach. For one thing, the General Counsel built its Charlotte wage reconstruction models around the old structure, and then determined post-April 1977 wages by transforming the old structure into the new one solely from that point on. Second, the General Counsel made the transformation in a noncomplex fashion. To determine the reconstructed wage levels for the transformed grades, the General Counsel assumed that old grade 1 became new grade 1, and that old grade 17 became new grade 10. As for new grades 2 through 9, the General Counsel divided the reconstructed wage difference between grades 1 and 17 by 9 and used the resulting figure as the dollar interval between each grade. The following is an example of the General Counsel's approach (using, for illustration purposes, the General Counsel's reconstructed wage rates for February 1978 and transformed grades 1, 2, 3, and 10).

1. General Counsel's reconstructed Grade 1 wage (untransformed)	$4.31
2. General Counsel's reconstructed Grade 17 wage (untransformed)	$7.30
3. Grade 1 reconstructed wage (transformed structure)	$4.31
4. Grade 10 reconstructed wage (transformed structure)	$7.30
5. Grade 10 wage minus Grade 1 wage:	$2.99
6. Difference from step 5 divided into nine intervals	$2.99 divided by 9 equals $.332
7. Grade 2 (transformed) reconstructed wage	$4.31 plus $.33 equals $4.64
8. Grade 3 (transformed) recon-	$4.31 plus two times

[124] See part I, above.

[125] See Appendix F for the precise dates of the reconstructed wage increases.

structed wage $.33 equals $4.97

The General Counsel's approach to the transformation of Charlotte's wage structure is relatively simple to do and easy to understand; and it is in line with FSC's intentions in shifting to a new grade structure as those intentions were described to representatives of General Counsel. I accordingly conclude that the General Counsel's approach to the transformation of Charlotte's wage structure should be adopted by the Board for purposes of reconstructing Charlotte wage rates.

Merit Pay Adjustment. Prior to the arrival of the Steelworkers at FSC's Charlotte plant, FSC used a merit system there. Under that system employees who were evaluated as doing better than satisfactory work received extra pay. FSC put that system on hold in 1974 (see sec. VIII, G, below). Then, at the time of the grade structure transformation in 1977, FSC eliminated the merit system (with union concurrence). FSC thereupon increased the base rate of pay (i.e., non-merit rate) for its Charlotte employees by 4 percent.

The General Counsel proposes that that circumstance be handled by adding 4 percent to all post-April 1977 (reconstructed) wage levels produced by whatever Charlotte model the Board choses. (For example, the General Counsel's regression model produces a reconstructed Grade 1 wage rate for February 1978 of $4.31. Adding the 4 percent merit adjustment brings the rate to $4.48, which is the rate on which the General Counsel urges that backpay be based.)

FSC does not take issue with the 4-percent adjustment.

Accordingly the reconstructed Charlotte wages produced by the end-of-the-base-period index model described earlier should be increased by 4 percent to compute the backpay of the Charlotte hourly employees for the period beginning April 24, 1977.

VIII. OTHER ISSUES

A. Dates on Which FSC Offered Reinstatement to Unlawfully Discharged Employees

On various dates in 1973 Florida Steel fired a dozen employees because of the employees' union activities. The Board subsequently required FSC to offer the discharged employees "reinstatement to their former or substantially equivalent positions without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges" and to "make the . . . employees whole for any loss of earnings suffered by reason of their discharge."[126]

Issues remain regarding the dates on which FSC made valid reinstatement offers to six of the discriminatorily discharged employees. This section will deal with those issues.

Bruce N. Lemmond. Lemmond had worked as a truckdriver at FSC prior to his discharge in July 1973. On November 22, 1976, FSC Regional Industrial Relations Manager James S. Rogers wrote a letter to Lemmond that included the following language:

> You are hereby offered full, immediate and unconditional reinstatement to your former, or a substantially equivalent, position with this Company, without prejudice to your seniority or other rights.
>
> If you desire reinstatement, contact the undersigned no later than Friday, December 3, 1976, for instructions as to when and where to report for work. . . .

Lemmond called Rogers on December 3 and asked to come in and talk to Rogers about the offer. Lemmond wanted further information about the job that FSC had planned for him. Rogers refused, saying that the November 22 letter was "self-explanatory" and that there was "no need" to meet on the matter.[127] In the course of the telephone conversation Rogers did add that: (1) Lemmond would receive the same rate of pay that he had been getting in 1973; (2) Lemmond's reporting date would be December 20, 1976; and (3) there were no truckdriver job vacancies—which left Lemmond with the impression that he was being offered some sort of "equivalent" job, not reinstatement into his old job. Rogers did not tell Lemmond exactly what kind of job Lemmond would get or on what shift Lemmond would work.

On December 7 Rogers called Lemmond to advise Lemmond of a change in the reporting date. Rogers told Lemmond to report on December 13 rather than December 20. Lemmond responded equivocally, saying that he was going to talk to his then current employer about the situation and that he would be back in touch with Rogers.[128]

On the date of that second telephone call, Rogers sent another letter to Lemmond:

> This letter will confirm our conversation of today . . . at which time we established your return to work date as Monday, December 13, 1976. You should report to my office at 8 a.m. at which time you will receive an appointment for your return to work physical as well as your job assignment.[129]

Lemmond did not communicate further with Rogers about the job offer and did not show up for work on December 13.

Representatives of the General Counsel subsequently advised FSC that they did not consider FSC's communications with Lemmond to be a valid offer of reinstatement. In response, in late 1977 FSC again offered employment to Lemmond, and all parties agree that that 1977 offer was a valid offer of reinstatement effective December 19, 1977. The issue is whether the letters and telephone conversations of November and December 1976 constituted a valid offer of reinstatement to Lemmond. If they did, FSC's backpay obligations toward Lemmond stopped running at that time. If, on the other [126] 214 NLRB 264, 281 (1974). The Board's order covered 13 employees. That order of the Board was enforced in respect to 12 of the 13 discharged employees in 551 F.2d 306 (4th Cir. 1975).

---

[127] Tr. 256.

[128] Lemmond testified that he had only one telephone conversation with Rogers, not two, and that it was Rogers who said that he would be back in touch with Lemmond. But I credit Rogers' account over Lemmond's in this respect, as the text above indicates.

[129] GCX-11.

hand, those communications did not amount to a valid offer of reinstatement, FSC's backpay obligations continued to run until the time of FSC's 1977 job offer, notwithstanding Lemmond's unexplained failure to show up for work on the reporting date: See, e.g., Craw & Son, 244 NLRB 241, 242 (1979); W. C. McQuaide, Inc., 239 NLRB 671 (1978).[130]

In dealing with that issue one question that needs to be resolved is whether the reference in Rogers' December 7 letter to a physical examination rendered the job offer invalid for purposes of meeting the Board's reinstatement requirements. For in most circumstances a job offer that is conditioned on the discriminatee passing a physical examination does not comply with a Board reinstatement order: e.g., Craw & Son, supra. The question is a close one since FSC does not routinely require that its employees take periodic physical examinations. Thus if Lemmond had not been unlawfully discharged and had remained at FSC without interruption, he would have come under no duty to take a physical examination.

But FSC did not tell Lemmond that his reemployment was conditioned on his passing a physical examination. In fact the job offer letter (of November 22) said nothing about a physical examination at all. Rather, the reference to a physical examination (in the December 7 letter) indicated that it would be given after Lemmond reported to work. And FSC nowhere stated that its employment of Lemmond was conditioned on his passing the physical. Finally, FSC requires physicals of all employees who return to work after any substantial period away from the job. Thus there was nothing discriminatory about the requirement of a physical examination nor did it suggest that FSC was treating Lemmond as a new employee: Compare Woodlawn Hospital, 233 NLRB 782 (1977). Under all these circumstances FSC's reference to a physical examination in its December 7 letter to Lemmond did not invalidate the job offer, assuming that FSC's job offer otherwise met the requirements imposed by the Board's reinstatement order.

FSC's employment offer, however, did not otherwise comply with the Board's order of reinstatement.

FSC's November 22 letter ("You are hereby offered full, immediate and unconditional reinstatement to your former, or a substantially equivalent, position.") was enough to require some sort of response from Lemmond. If Lemmond had said nothing, or had declined the offer, FSC's backpay obligation towards Lemmond would have thereby ended: e.g., Knickerbocker Plastic Co., 132 NLRB 1209 (1961). But Lemmond did respond, indicating that he wanted to find out more about what FSC had in mind. FSC refused to provide the information that Lemmond sought. None of FSC's communications to Lemmond in November or December 1976 specified the job or even the shift that FSC planned for Lemmond. That put Lemmond in the position of having to decide whether to revamp the circumstances of his life (by giving up his existing employment and returning to work at FSC) without any information about crucial aspects of his prospective work at FSC. I appreciate that FSC felt that it would be less disruptive to its employees as a whole if FSC could delay selecting jobs for returning discriminatees until after FSC determined just who would be returning. But that does not excuse FSC's failure to meet its obligation to be specific in offering reinstatement: see Powell Valley Electric Cooperative, 236 NLRB 1040, 1043–44 (1978); Pace Motor Lines, 260 NLRB 1395 (1982).

I accordingly conclude that the backpay owed by FSC to Lemmond should be computed on the basis that FSC's first and only valid reinstatement offer was effective on December 19, 1977.[131]

Alfred Haynes. FSC fired Haynes in May 1973. At the time, Haynes was a Grade 9 forklift operator. He was being paid $3.35 per hour base pay plus a shift differential (Haynes was on a rotating shift) of 16 cents per hour.

On February 4, 1977, FSC sent a letter to Haynes that reads, in substantial part:

> You are hereby offered full, immediate and unconditional reinstatement to your former, or a substantially equivalent position with this Company, without prejudice to your seniority or other rights.
>
> If you desire reinstatement, contact the undersigned no later than Friday, February 18, 1977, for instructions as to when and to where to report for work.

Haynes responded with a visit to Rogers' office. Haynes credibly testified that:

> I told him [Rogers] that I came to listen to see what I was offered. . . . I told him I wanted to see what was offered and what I was going to be doing and what job I would have and what not and what I would be paid.[132]

Rogers responded by saying that the job that Haynes held at the time of his discharge had been discontinued and that FSC was not then in a position to tell Haynes what job he would be assigned to, what department he would be working in, or what shift he would be on. Rogers did tell Haynes that his rate of pay would be $3.35 per hour, the same base rate that Haynes had been receiving when he was fired in 1973.[133]

Haynes then mentioned that, due to family needs, he could work only during the day and argued that in view of his seniority with the Company he ought to be entitled to his choice of shifts. Rogers responded that the Company did not take seniority into account in assigning [130] References in this section to backpay will relate exclusively to the period between unlawful discharge and the effective date of a valid reinstatement offer. It should be understood, however, that the amount of backpay owed by FSC to the six employees discussed in this section is affected by FSC's wrongful withholding of general wage increases, as discussed in parts I through VII of this decision.

[131] FSC initially placed returning discriminatees in entry level jobs (while paying them their old wage rates). Had Lemmond been aware of that practice that alone would have been enough to invalidate FSC's job offer. But there is no evidence that Lemmond (or any of the other employees referred to in this section) knew of that practice.

[132] Tr. 266.

[133] FSC had granted no general wage increases at its Charlotte facility between the time Haynes had been fired and February 1977.

employees to shifts and reiterated that he could not tell Haynes what shift Haynes would be assigned.

That ended Haynes' conversation with Rogers. On February 18, 1977, Haynes sent the following letter to Rogers:

> This is to inform you and the Florida Steel Corporation that I am not interested in returning to the employ of the Company due to the pay scale you offered me in our conference on February 15, 1977. The amount per hour is not what I was making when I left the Company and is not what I now make at my present job.
>
> Your offer at the conference does not meet with what I was making when I left the Company's employ in 1973 and therefore, this is not offering me full and unconditional reinstatement with the Company.[134]

As in Lemmond's case, the Company's first letter to Haynes (on February 4, 1977) was, on its face, a valid reinstatement offer. But also as in Lemmond's case, Haynes' questioning put the Company under an obligation to be more specific: Haynes was entitled to be told, at the very least, what job he was to be assigned to if he returned to work with the Company. Rogers' failure to provide that information brought to an end any requirement on Haynes' part that he further respond to the Company.

Haynes did respond, however, saying that he was not going to return to FSC because of his dissatisfaction with the wage FSC offered. And the letter says nothing about declining to work for FSC because of uncertainty about the nature of the prospective job. But the reasons Haynes gave for refusing to return to FSC are irrelevant. Due to Rogers' lack of specificity, at the end of the meeting between Haynes and Rogers no valid reinstatement offer was outstanding.[135] And a valid reinstatement offer must be outstanding in order for an employee's refusal of employment to toll the backpay period: e.g., Craw & Son, supra; W. C. McQuaide, Inc., supra.

In sum, neither FSC's communications to Haynes in February 1977 nor Haynes' February 18 letter to FSC in which he rejected FSC's offer brought FSC's backpay obligations toward Haynes to an end.[136]

Charles D. Frazier. FSC fired Frazier on May 4, 1973. Using its usual language the Board ordered FSC to reinstate Frazier and to pay him backpay. All parties agree that in December 1977 FSC made a valid reinstatement offer to Frazier and that, accordingly, Frazier's backpay period ended no later than December 19, 1977. But as with Lemmond and Haynes, FSC contends that it made an earlier valid reinstatement offer to Frazier and that Frazier's backpay period thereby ended in December 1976.

On November 22, 1976, Rogers wrote a letter to Frazier that was identical to the letter he had sent to Lemmond on that same day. Rogers sent the letter by certified mail, return receipt requested, to Frazier's address at the time he was fired, as listed in the Company's personnel records. The Postal Service ultimately returned the letter to Rogers on December 8, with the indication that the Postal Service had tried to deliver it but that the letter had gone "unclaimed."[137]

FSC made no further attempt to contact Frazier.

As discussed earlier, the language used in the letter sent to Frazier represents a valid reinstatement offer. That being the case, if FSC's transmittal of the letter represented a reasonable, good-faith effort to contact Frazier, FSC's backpay obligations to Frazier ended on the last day he could have responded to the offer, December 3.[138] The question is whether FSC did make a reasonable, good-faith effort to contact Frazier. And that question is a close one.

On the one hand transmittal of a reinstatement offer by certified mail to an employee's last known address is an appropriate means of attempting to communicate without more satisfies the obligations placed on an employer by a Board order requiring reinstatement of an employee: see, e.g., Knickerbocker Plastic Co., supra; General Iron Corp., 218 NLRB 770 (1975).

But in view of the circumstances present here, my conclusion is that FSC did not satisfy its notification obligation by its one letter to Frazier. For one thing, the letter was returned to FSC by the Postal Service, so that FSC knew that Frazier had not received the notification. For another, FSC had discharged Frazier 3-1/2 years prior to its transmittal of the November 1976 letter to him, and the address used in that letter was taken from a file that had not been updated since Frazier had been discharged. Third, the plant's employees had a bargaining unit representative, the Steelworkers, and it would have been a simple and obvious thing for FSC to have enlisted the Steelworkers in attempting to locate Frazier. But FSC did not do that. Finally, the Steelworkers affirmatively sought information from FSC concerning the identity of the discharged employees who were receiving reinstatement offers. FSC refused to provide the information.[139]

That, it seems to me, adds up to something less than a good-faith effort by FSC to reach Frazier with a reinstatement offer. I accordingly conclude that FSC's backpay obligation towards Frazier was not tolled until December 19, 1977.

John Wells, Jr. On November 22, 1976, FSC sent a letter to Wells worded identically to the letters it sent on that date to Lemmond and Frazier.

According to Rogers, Wells telephoned Rogers on December 1, 1976, in response to the November 22 letter. The focus of the conversation was on Wells' prospective reporting date at FSC. Rogers testified that

---

[134] Rogers responded to Haynes' February 18 letter with a letter dated February 22. In that letter Rogers reconfirmed that Haynes' "base rate of pay" at the time of Haynes' discharge was $3.35.

[135] See Powell Valley Electric Cooperative, supra.

[136] All parties agree that FSC made a valid offer of reinstatement to Haynes in December 1978, which Haynes declined. Thus FSC's backpay obligations to Haynes ended on December 21, 1978.

[137] RX-7.

[138] Southern Household Products Co., 203 NLRB 881 (1973). No one argues that FSC's demand in its November 22 letters that the addressees respond by December 3 was unreasonable.

[139] See Florida Steel Corp., 242 NLRB 1333 (1979).

Wells did not ask for more details about the job to which FSC planned to assign him. But according to Rogers he did indicate to Wells that Wells "would not necessarily be going back to the same identical position which he was in" at the time he was fired, but that "he [Wells] would be making the same rate of pay as that which he was making at the time he left."

Wells did not testify.

Following Rogers' December 7 conversation with Wells, Rogers sent the following letter to Wells:

> This letter will confirm our telephone conversation of today, December 7, 1976, at which time we established your return to work date as Monday, December 13, 1976. You should report to my office at 8 a.m. at which time you will receive an appointment for your return to work physical as well as your job assignment.
>
> As we discussed previously, your rate of pay will be $3.17 per hour.[140]

Wells did not report to work on December 13, 1976, and there is nothing in the record about why he failed to report.

My recommendation is that the Board conclude that FSC's communications to Wells in 1976 constituted a valid reinstatement offer and that FSC's backpay obligations towards Wells were tolled on December 13, 1976, the date Wells failed to report for work.

As indicated earlier, the language that FSC used in its initial reinstatement letters—"You are hereby offered . . . reinstatement to your former, or a substantially equivalent, position"—while ambiguous, is sufficient to require some sort of response from the employee. But if the employee does respond, asking for further details about the job to which he will be assigned, a failure of the employer to provide that detail precludes the employer from claiming that the letter was a valid reinstatement offer. Here Wells did respond, and in the course of his conversation with Rogers, Rogers said that Wells would not "necessarily" be getting his old job back and said nothing about what job Wells would be getting. But Wells did not ask for any information about the kind of job that FSC had planned for him (at least insofar as the record indicates). And since Wells did not ask for more information about the nature of the work he would be given, my conclusion is that the initial validity of FSC's letter offering reinstatement stands unimpaired.[141]

James W. Ashcraft and Loren D. Theodore. On November 22, 1976, Rogers sent letters to Ashcraft and Theodore that were identical in wording to those he sent on that day to Lemmond, Wells, and Frazier.[142] The letters were sent by certified mail and, according to the Postal Service, both were received by the addressees a few days after they were sent. Ashcraft did not respond to the letter and, as far as the record indicates, never communicated thereafter with FSC. Theodore responded to Rogers' letter with a letter of his own declining the job offer.[143]

As discussed earlier, if Ashcraft and Theodore had responded to Rogers' letters with expressions of interest and if they had inquired further about the nature of jobs they were to be offered, Rogers almost surely would have failed to provide them with a reasonable amount of detail about their forthcoming job. Moreover, if they had nonetheless accepted the job offers, the record is clear that FSC would initially have placed them in entry level positions—in violation of the terms of the Board's order. But there is no indication whatever in the record that either Ashcraft or Theodore was aware that those circumstances would occur if he responded favorably to the November 22 letters. And since the November 22 letters contained a reinstatement offer that was "valid on its face," those letters ended the backpay obligation of FSC toward Ashcraft and Theodore: Eastern Die Co., 142 NLRB 601, 603 (1963).

As for the precise date that FSC's backpay obligations toward Ashcraft and Theodore ended, Rogers' letter required the two employees to contact him no later than December 3, 1976. Since Ashcraft did not reply it is clear that FSC's backpay obligation tolled on December 3: Eastern Die Co., supra; Southern Household Products Co., supra. As for Theodore, if we knew the date on which he rejected FSC's November 22 order, that date would be the date of the tolling of FSC's backpay obligation. Southern Household Products Co., supra. Since the record does not provide that information, FSC's backpay obligation toward Theodore will be deemed to have tolled on December 3, as in Ashcraft's case.

B. Robert Early's Missed Promotions

FSC fired Early in August 1973. The Board ordered FSC to reinstate Early, and FSC did return him to work at his previous wage rate in December 1976.

The General Counsel contends that, had Early not been fired, he would have been promoted in 1975 and then again in 1976. If the General Counsel's contentions are correct, the computation of the amount of backpay that FSC owes to Early should take into account those missed promotions: Pepsi Cola Bottling Co., 187 NLRB 1017 (1971), enfd. 467 F.2d 164 (9th Cir. 1972), affd. 414 U.S. 168 (1973). FSC denies that Early would have been promoted.

The Period to November 1979. Early was a Grade 8 crane operator when FSC fired him.[144] At that time (in 1973), FSC operated three different kinds of cranes in the area of the Charlotte facility in which Early worked. Each of the cranes had different functions, controls, and capacity. Then in May 1975 FSC changed the manner in which it produced steel. That, in turn, required FSC to eliminate one kind of crane, add another, and make [140] GC-12.

[141] As for the reference to a physical examination in Rogers' December 7 letter to Wells, see the above discussion about Rogers' letter to Lemmond.

[142] Copies of both letters are included in the record as RX-1 (Ashcraft) and RX-2 (Theodore).

[143] The only evidence on this point is Rogers' testimony. Neither Theodore nor Ashcraft testified. Theodore's letter was not placed into evidence.

[144] Early was employed at FSC's Charlotte facility. The grade levels referred to in this section of the decision refer to the 19-grade system used at Charlotte until April 1977 (see part VII, above).

changes in the operation of the remaining two. But, for present purposes, it is enough to know that, at the time FSC fired Early, there were two different kinds of Grade 8 crane operator jobs and one kind of Grade 11 crane operator job. That was altered in May 1975 so that from then until November 1979 there was a Grade 9 crane operator position as well as two different kinds of Grade 8 crane operator jobs and one kind of Grade 11 crane operator job.

There is no dispute that in the normal course of things (after May 1975) FSC filled Grade 11 crane operator openings from among the Grade 9 crane operators, and filled Grade 9 crane operator openings from among the Grade 8 crane operators. As for how FSC selected a Grade 8 or Grade 9 crane operator for promotion, it is clear that the Company considered both ability and seniority. But the record says nothing about what factors FSC took into account in evaluating the relative ability of competing crane operators.

Early's Performance. As of August 1973 (when Early was fired), Early was the most senior of all the Grade 8 crane operators. From time to time he had performed Grade 11 crane operator duties and had done so satisfactorily. Since 1970 Early had been graded "better than satisfactory" on all of his periodic performance reports. (The record contains no information on his previous performance evaluations.)

The Other Crane Operators. FSC employed six Grade 8 crane operators (in addition to Early) at the time the Company fired Early.[145] Another employee became a Grade 8 crane operator about a month after Early's discharge.[146] And still another employee became a Grade 8 crane operator about a year after Early was fired.[147] Of those eight, six were promoted to the Grade 9 crane operator job prior to the time that Early was reinstated.[148] And of those six, three became Grade 11 crane operators.[149]

The record contains information on the performance evaluations of four of those eight other crane operators—three who became Grade 11 operators and one who never made it beyond Grade 9. While the record is less than complete on point, the available information shows that Early's performance evaluations were at least as good as those given to the other crane operators, and probably better.

In terms of relative experience, as indicated above Early had more time on the job as a Grade 8 crane operator at the time he was fired than any of the other FSC Grade 8 operators. On the other hand two of the other operators came to FSC as Grade 11 operators. While both lost their Grade 11 status for considerable periods of time (for reasons not stated in the record) it was they (plus one other employee) who became Grade 11 crane operators during the period that Early was away from FSC.[150]

The Period to November 1979—Conclusion. The General Counsel has the burden of showing that Early would have been promoted but for his unlawful discharge by FSC.[151] Since FSC presented virtually no evidence on point, the question is whether the General Counsel has made out a prima facie case. My conclusion is that for the period prior to November 1979 the General Counsel did so for the Grade 9 crane operator job, but did not do so for the Grade 11 position.

Turning to the Grade 9 job first, as indicated earlier, of the six emloyees who were, with Early, Grade 8 crane operators at the time of Early's discharge, four were promoted to the Grade 9 position. And of the two employees who became Grade 8 operators after Early's discharge, both became Grade 9 crane operators. Given those statistics, the reasonable inference is that any employee who was a Grade 8 crane operator at the time of Early's discharge would have become a Grade 9 operator unless there was some specific reason precluding the promotion. Nothing about Early's career at the time he was discharged suggests any such factor that would have prevented his promotion. That, in my view, adds up to a prima facie case: see S. E. Nichols of Ohio, Inc., 258 NLRB 1, 9-10 (1981); Golay & Co. v. NLRB, 447 F.2d 290 (7th Cir. 1971).

The situation is quite different for the General Counsel's contention that Early would have been promoted to Grade 11 crane operator during the period he was away from FSC. Of the six employees who held Grade 8 crane operator positions at the time Early was fired, three eventually became Grade 11 operators. But, as noted above, of those three, two had originally been hired as Grade 11 crane operators. Their promotion to Grade 11 crane operator indicates nothing about whether Early would have been promoted to that position. A fairer way of looking at the question is that at the time Early was fired, there were four Grade 8 crane operators who had not previously held the position of Grade 11 operators. Of those four, only one was ever promoted to the Grade 11 position.[152]

Given the fact that seniority was only one consideration used by FSC in selecting employees for promotion, given the absence of information in the record about the factors FSC used in selecting Grade 11 crane operators, and in view of the foregoing statistics, my conclusion is that the General Counsel failed to present a prima facie case that, but for Early's unlawful discharge, FSC would have promoted Early to Grade 11 crane operator at any time prior to November 1979.

[145] The six: Brewer, Hauser, Johnson, Jones, Marshall, and McIlwain.
[146] Employee Nilsson.
[147] Employee Anderson.
[148] The promoted employees: Anderson, Brewer, Hauser, Johnson, McIlwain, and Nilsson.
[149] Johnson (in April 1976); McIlwain (in August 1976); and Nilsson (in June 1976).

[150] The two employees: Johnson (hired in August 1968 as a Grade 11 crane operator and became Grade 8 crane operator in 1970), and McIlwain (hired as a Grade 11 crane operator in October 1969 and became a Grade 8 crane operator in 1972).
[151] The parties have agreed that the General Counsel has the burden of proof on this issue. See also Decker Truck Lines, 139 NLRB 65 (1962), modified on other grounds 322 F.2d 238 (8th Cir. 1963).
[152] Employee Nilsson. He became a Grade 11 crane operator in June 1976. He was terminated as an FSC employee (for reasons not set forth in the record) in August 1976.

The Period November 1979 to January 1980. On November 4, 1979, FSC reclassified the Grade 9 crane operator job so that employees holding the position were thereafter paid at the Grade 11 rate.[153] Absent evidence to the contrary, I can only assume that, had Early not been unlawfully discharged, and had he been a Grade 9 crane operator at the time of the 1979 reclassification (as discussed above), he would have been promoted to Grade 11 in keeping with the reclassification.

FSC did in fact promote Early to Grade 11 crane operator on January 27, 1980 (directly from Grade 8). That ended FSC's backpay obligation toward Early.[154]

The Dates on Which Early Would Have Been Promoted. As touched on earlier, the record indicates that six FSC employees who were Grade 8 operators at the time Early was fired, and two FSC employees who became Grade 8 operators after Early was fired, became Grade 9 crane operators prior to Early's reinstatement. The record contains information about the dates of the promotions of those employees only for four of the employees. Of those four, three became Grade 9 crane operators in early May 1975, when the Grade 9 position was first created.[155] And the fourth was promoted to the Grade 9 position in June 1976. In the absence of further information, the most reasonable inference to draw—having concluded that Early would have been promoted to the Grade 9 position at some point in time, is that Early would have been promoted at the beginning of May 1975, when the Grade 9 position came into being. In view of the lack of information about the precise date when such promotion would likely have occurred, and in view of the specification's reference to a May 17, 1975 date, I shall recommend that the Board conclude that the backpay amounts owing Early be based on a May 17, 1975 hypothetical promotion date, as stated in the General Counsel's specifications.

As for the date on which Early would have been promoted to Grade 11, as stated above that would have occurred on November 4, 1979.

C. Are "Bending Coordinators" Members of the Bargaining Unit

FSC's Charlotte facility is made up of two divisions. The "mill" (where steel is produced) and the "rebar foundry." (Rebars are steel bars used for reinforcing concrete.) The pertinent part of the Board's description of the Charlotte bargaining unit reads as follows: "All production and maintenance employees . . . employed at the Employer's [Charlotte] N.C. steel mill and fabricating division, excluding . . . fabricating shop leadmen . . . and supervisors as defined in the Act."

At issue here is whether persons occupying the position of "bending coordinator" in the rebar foundry division are members of that unit. If they are, persons who occupied the bending coordinator position at any time since February 1974 are entitled to backpay (because of FSC's unlawful change in wage policies). Bending coordinators are not members of the unit (and not entitled to backpay) if they are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act if they are "fabricating shop leadmen," within the meaning of the Board's unit description. They are members of the bargaining unit if they do not fit within either of those categories.[156]

Administrative Law Judge Harmatz, who conducted the prehearing conference in this proceeding, ruled, without objection, that the General Counsel had the burden of proving that persons occupying bending coordinator positions are members of the bargaining unit.[157] The question to be resolved in this section of this decision is whether the General Counsel has met that burden.

Bending Coordinators as "Fabricating Shop Leadmen." Insofar as the record here indicates, there is no entity at the Charlotte facility known as the "fabricating shop." There is, however, a "rebar shop" that handles the "fabrication" of the rebars.[158] That fabrication, in turn, "consists of shearing [the rebars] to certain lengths and then some of it has to be bent in different shapes and designs."[159] As that quotation suggests, there is a "bending department" in the rebar shop. Until about 1973 or early 1974 the senior worker on each of the shifts in the bending department (under the rebar shop foreman) was known as the "bending crew chief." (The bending crew chief was in fact senior to everyone in the entire rebar shop, other than the foreman.) He assigned work to the 10 or so other bending department workers on his shift; guided and directed them (including instructing inexperienced employees); checked on their output; coordinated "work flow through [the] bending operations";[160] made hiring and firing recommendations to his superiors; kept production records; and did some setup work.

Under these circumstances there is no doubt that the bending crew chiefs were the "leadmen" in the rebar shop's bending division. And since the reference in the unit designation to "fabricating shop" must be construed to mean, or at least include, the rebar shop, the bending crew chiefs were excluded from the unit by virtue of the unit designation.

The "bending crew chief" title was subsequently changed to "bending coordinator." (Actually the title was changed on some categories of company documents

[153] The November 4 date is based on a posthearing stipulation that I am including in the record as Exh. ALJ-4. The upgrading of the Grade 9 crane operator job is also referred to at Tr. 334 and 341 (witness Moore). The Charlotte wage structure had shifted in 1977 to a 10-grade system from a 19-grade structure, so that that actual reclassification of the crane operator job was from Grade 4 to Grade 5. For the sake of clarity, the discussion in this section refers to jobs in their pre-1977 designations, even for the 1979–1980 period.

[154] That reference to the end of FSC's backpay obligation toward Early does not take into account the backpay that FSC owes to Early based on FSC's unlawful change in wage policies.

[155] Johnson and Nilsson became Grade 9 crane operators on May 4, 1975; Anderson became a Grade 9 crane operator on May 11, 1975.

[156] Three persons occupied the position of bending coordinator during periods in which bargaining unit employees at the Charlotte plant became entitled to backpay by reason of FSC's wrongful withholding of pay increases: J. A. Tabor (from October 26, 1973, to February 9, 1975); W. T. Newell (from April 7, 1974, to February 9, 1975); and C. R. Chastain (from January 1, 1975, to February 9, 1975, and from May 11, 1975, to November 1979).

[157] Transcript of January 15, 1981 prehearing conference at 18–19.

[158] Tr. 608 (witness Hunt).

[159] Id.

[160] GCX-31.

by early 1973, which was prior to the issuance of the Board's bargaining unit description.) But that title change was the only change in the position. Everything else about it—duties, responsibilities, pay, and the persons holding the job—remained the same.[161] Since bending coordinators filled precisely the same role as bending crew chiefs, and since bending crew chiefs were excluded from the bargaining unit by virtue of the Board's exclusion of "fabricating shop leadmen," I can only conclude that the bending coordinators have never been part of the unit and are not entitled to backpay.

Bending Coordinators as Supervisors. Section 2(11) of the Act defines the term "supervisor" as—

> . . . any individual having authority, in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibly to direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if in connection with the foregoing the exercise of such authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment.

As touched on above, bending coordinators do "assign" employees to particular tasks. But the record is too sketchy to permit any determination of whether that function "requires the use of independent judgment." And bending coordinators recommend the hiring and discharging of employees. But again, the record is insufficient to permit a determination of whether such recommendations are "effective" and are based on independent judgment. As for the various secondary indicia of supervisory status, by and large they cut both ways.[162]

Given the state of the record, it might well be that further information that is wholly consistent with the existing evidence on point would make it clear that bending coordinators are "employees": see, e.g., Bodolay Packaging Machinery, 263 NLRB 320 (1982); Vapor Corp., 242 NLRB 776, 787 (1979); Commercial Movers, 240 NLRB 288 (1979). But it equally might be that further information (again, wholly consistent with existing evidence) would prove that bending coordinators are "supervisors": see NLRB v. Porta Systems, 625 F.2d 399 (2d Cir. 1980); Abilene Steel Metal v. NLRB, 619 F.2d 332 (5th Cir. 1980); Conair Corp., 261 NLRB 1189, 1203–04 fn. 9 (1982). And what all that adds up to is that the General Counsel has not met his burden of proving that the bending coordinators are employees, not supervisors.

D. Medical Insurance Premiums

On May 5, 1974, FSC implemented in its employee group medical insurance plan and, at the same time, increased the insurance contributions ("premiums") paid by participating employees. FSC made the changes at all of its plants except Charlotte. Since FSC excluded the Charlotte plant from the changes because of an antiunion discriminatory intent, the Board ordered the Company to retroactively grant the medical insurance benefits to the employees in the Charlotte bargaining unit.

Some of the Charlotte employees did incur medical expenses during the post-May 1974 period which were not covered by the medical insurance plan then in effect in Charlotte but which would have been covered had the May 1974 changes been implemented at Charlotte. (I will refer to these previously nonreimbursable expenses as "additional medical claims.") FSC has reimbursed the employees for their additional medical claims.

The Parties' Positions. The General Counsel's concern is that FSC has required all persons who were in the Charlotte bargaining unit during the period at issue to pay to FSC amounts equal to the higher premiums they would have had to have paid if FSC had in fact implemented the medical plan changes in May 1974. (I will use the term "additional premiums" to refer to the difference between: (a) the total amount of premiums an employee would have to have paid had the new plan been implemented, and (b) the premiums actually paid by an employee during that period.)[163] According to the General Counsel, FSC is entitled to the additional premiums only in limited respects. To more fully describe the General Counsel's position, it is best to divide the employees into three categories.

Category 1: Employees whose additional medical claims exceeded their additional premiums. The General Counsel agrees that FSC is entitled to collect the additional premiums from these employees.

Category 2: Employees who had additional medical claims but whose additional premiums exceeded the amount of their additional claims. The General Counsel's position is that FSC is entitled to the additional premiums from this category of employees only up to the amount of each of the employee's additional claims. FSC insists it is entitled to the full amount of additional premiums.

Category 3: Employees who had no additional medical claims. The General Counsel urges that FSC be precluded from collecting any additional premiums from this category of employees. FSC, again, claims that it is entitled to the full amount of additional premiums from such employees.

Medical Insurance premiums—Conclusion. The lines are drawn most clearly in respect to Category 3 employees—those who had no additional medical claims. My conclusion is that FSC is not entitled to recover the additional premiums from such employees. One basis for [161] Chastain and Newell were the bending crew chiefs at the time of the change, and they remained on as bending coordinators.

[162] For example: on the one hand (1) bending coordinators are paid on an hourly basis and receive the fringe benefits of hourly employees, while all persons other than bending coordinators claimed by FSC to be supervisors are salaried and receive different kinds of fringe benefits; (2) during the Steelworkers' organizing efforts the bending coordinators did not attend management meetings on union matters, and at least one bending coordinator became a member of an antiunion "employee" committee; and (3) bending coordinators wore red hardhats, not the white ones worn by all other persons FSC claims to be supervisors. On the other hand: (1) everyone (except the bending coordinators) who the General Counsel claims to have been "employees" wore yellow hardhats (i.e., bending coordinators were the only personnel in the Charlotte facility to wear red hardhats); and (2) the bending coordinators park their cars in the area of the plant reserved for supervisors.

[163] In October 1976 FSC again modified the medical insurance plan, at all locations except Charlotte, by eliminating the employees' group insurance premiums. Thus the period under consideration here is limited to May 1974 to October 1976.

that conclusion is precedent: Rice Lake Creamery Co., 151 NLRB 1113, 1129–31 (1965), enf. denied 365 F.2d 888 (D.C. Cir. 1966). But beyond that, the only bases for charging the employees for the additional premiums are that: (1) the employees would be unjustly enriched by having "had the benefit of the increased coverage without the corresponding detriment of higher premiums";[164] and (2) only by that approach would the employees be in the same position they would have been in absent FSC's discrimination.

The problem with those arguments is that neither takes into account that insurance, by its nature, is forward looking and involves protection against possible future loss. Had FSC implemented the insurance changes at Charlotte in 1974, each premium payment by an employee would have bought something: "security against anticipated loss."[165] But for those employees with no additional medical claims for the period May 1974-October 1976, payment of the additional premiums at this juncture buys nothing. For those employees: (1) Requiring them to pay the additional premiums does not put them in the same position that they would have been in but for FSC's discrimination. There is simply no way to retroactively give them the additional security they would have had if FSC had implemented the medical plan nondiscriminatorily. (2) It is hardly unjustly enriching the employees to refrain from requiring them to make the additional premium payments. Rather, requiring them to do so would be requiring them to pay something for nothing.

I recognize that requiring the extra premiums would ease FSC's burden and would put FSC more closely in the position it would have been in but for the discrimination. But the object of a Board order in an 8(a)(3) case is to make the discriminated-against parties whole, as nearly as possible. That rarely means restoring things to exactly how they would have been but for the discrimination. And sometimes the order to make whole will be costly to the respondent. While that ought not to be the object of a Board backpay order,[166] individual employees ought not to be asked to pay for benefits they did not buy simply in order to reduce that costliness.

That leaves for consideration the Category 2 employees—those whose additional medical claims are less than their additional premiums. In Rice Lake, three employees incurred additional medical expenses during the period of their unjust discharge by their employer. The additional medical claims of two of the three totaled less than the premiums they would have paid had they remained employed. As to those two employees (Category 2 in the above listing), the Board held that: (1) they should pay no additional premiums; and (2) they should receive no compensation for their additional medical claims: 151 NLRB at 1130. While the bases for the Board's decision on this point are not spelled out in detail, the logic is clear. For an employee to be entitled to reimbursement for any additional medical claims, he ought to be treated as though he chose the revised medical coverage, including all the additional premiums that went with it. Since no one would choose such retroactive coverage if it resulted in a net loss, the only answer is to disallow both the employees' claims for reimbursement of their additional medical claims and the employer's demand for reimbursement for the additional premiums.

Under the circumstances I conclude that: (1) FSC may not recover any additional premiums from employees who had no additional medical claims; (2) FSC may not recover any additional premiums from those employees who did have additional medical claims if the amount of those claims was less than their additional premiums; and (3) FSC is not required to pay the additional medical claims of any employees whose additional premiums exceeded their additional medical claims, and FSC may take as an offset against any remaining backpay due such employees the amounts already paid such employees as reimbursement for such additional medical claims.

E. Vacation Benefits

On January 1, 1974, FSC changed its vacation policy in the following ways, at all locations other than Charlotte. No changes in vacation policy were implemented at the Charlotte facility.

(1) Employees who had been with FSC for at least 10 years became eligible for 3 weeks of vacation. Previously employees had to have 12 years' service to be eligible for 3 weeks' vacation.

(2) Employees who had been with the Company for 20 years became eligible for 4 weeks' vacation.

(3) Employees with less than 1 year's service no longer were entitled to a vacation. Previously they were.

In sum, the changed vacation policy benefited employees with 10 or 11 years' service and those with more than 20 years' service. It adversely affected employees with less than 1 year's service.

The Board concluded that FSC had excluded the Charlotte employees from the "improved vacation policy"[167] for antiunion reasons. FSC accordingly was ordered to grant to the Charlotte employees the vacation benefits that FSC had granted elsewhere, retroactive to January 1, 1974. FSC has agreed to make the ordered vacation benefit payments to employees. But FSC contends that it is entitled to be reimbursed by those Charlotte employees who, subsequent to January 1, 1974, received vacation benefits when they had less than 1 year's service.

FSC's contention is erroneous. The adverse changes that FSC made in the first year employees' vacation rights are readily separable from the improvements in the vacation rights that FSC granted to its long-service employees. And the Board ordered only that FSC grant the withheld fringe "benefits" to the Charlotte employees. The Order says nothing about FSC having to implement at Charlotte the reductions in new employees' vacation rights that FSC made elsewhere. The language used in the Order was not inadvertent: see, e.g., NLRB v. Keystone Steel & Wire, 653 F.2d 304, 308 (7th Cir. 1981). Since the Order does not require, either expressly or im-

[164] FSC Br. 107.

[165] Metropolitan Police Retiring Assoc. v. Tobriner, 306 F.2d 775 (D.C. Cir. 1962).

[166] E.g., Republic Steel Corp. v. NLRB, 311 U.S. 7, 10, 12 (1940).

[167] 220 NLRB at 264.

plicitly, that FSC implement any 1974 vacation policy changes that adversely affected the Charlotte employees, FSC is not entitled to be compensated by any employee based on a retroactive implementation of those adverse changes.

F. Cutoff Date of the Backpay Period for Clerical Employees

In the period 1977–1978 there were about 150 employees in the Charlotte bargaining unit. All but 4 of those 150 were paid on an hourly basis. The other four—"clerks" and "recorders"—were salaried. (I will refer to those four as "bargaining unit clericals.")[168] Until the arrival of the Steelworkers at Charlotte, FSC kept the salaries of the bargaining unit clericals equivalent to its clerical employees of the same grade who were not in the bargaining unit. But as in the case of the hourly employees, after the arrival of the Steelworkers FSC stopped granting periodic increases to the bargaining unit clericals even though FSC continued to grant such increases to employees who were not in the bargaining unit. The Board concluded that FSC had thereby violated the Act.

The only backpay issue involving the bargaining unit clericals relates to the cutoff date from backpay liability. According to FSC's answer to the General Counsel's backpay specification: "the backpay period for [bargaining unit clericals] ended November 20, 1977 when the Company offered in negotiations with the Union to implement on November 20" the salary increases implemented on that day for clericals not in the bargaining unit.

The facts are that in early December 1977, in the course of a meeting with union representatives, FSC representatives proposed salary increases for the bargaining unit clericals that were identical to the increases that the nonbargaining unit clericals had started getting on November 20, 1977. The union representatives neither accepted the proposal nor objected to it, and the meeting moved on to other subjects. The matter of clerical salaries was not raised again in FSC-union meetings until September 1978. (At that time union officials, upset at learning that the bargaining unit clericals had missed the pay increase that FSC had earlier proposed, quickly agreed to an increase for the clericals. FSC implemented the increase a few days later.)

At no time has the Union ever told FSC that it did not want FSC to implement a proposed pay increase for the clericals. Nor has there been any agreement between the Company and the Union regarding the appropriate pay scale for the bargaining unit clericals.

As discussed in section I,B, above, the import of the various underlying Board orders in this proceeding is (among other things) that FSC had been under an obligation to pay to the Charlotte bargaining unit employees increases that, under all the relevant circumstances, are analogous in timing and amount to those received by other FSC employees. The only limitation on that obligation is that such increases are not to be put into effect if "the Union as bargaining agent objects."[169] The Union did not "object" to implementation of the 1977 increase for the clericals. It certainly did not do so expressly. And even if silence by the Steelworkers could under some circumstances be interpreted as an objection, that was not the case with regard to the 1977 increase: The Company raised the matter only once (prior to September 1978). And it did so in the course of a meeting that dealt with numerous matters of far greater importance—in dollars-and-cents terms—than small raises for four employees. The only implication that FSC could reasonably have drawn in those circumstances from the Steelworkers' silence was that the Union overlooked the subject, not that it opposed the increase.

The cutoff date of the backpay period for the bargaining unit clericals accordingly is the same as for the other bargaining unit emloyees (see part I,C, above).

G. Merit Pay

At all material times FSC employees have been periodically evaluated—generally every 6 months—by their supervisors in "performance reviews."[170] Until January 14, 1973, the grades received by FSC's Charlotte employees as a result of these performance reviews affected their pay: Employees who received grades above "satisfactory" (or its equivalent) were paid more than employees graded satisfactory or worse. The differential was known as "merit pay."

Complications arose if an employee who had been receiving merit pay subsequently received a grade of satisfactory or worse. FSC did not reduce employee's pay. Rather, it "red-circled" the employee. When a general wage increase was thereafter implemented, the red-circled employee received the greater of: (a) 50 percent of the increase; or (b) the amount that would put him on a par with other employees of his grade with satisfactory or worse performance evaluations. Of course, once the employee's pay was at the proper, nonmerit, level, he was no longer red-circled.

In January 1973 FSC ended the merit pay system at Charlotte. Thereafter employees who were being paid at the regular, nonmerit, level in January 1973 received no merit pay notwithstanding evaluations of better than satisfactory. And employees who in January 1973 were receiving merit pay kept getting the differential even if their performance review grades fell to satisfactory or worse. The Board held that FSC's post-January 1973 failure to grant merit pay to employees who had qualified for the additional pay violated the Act. It accordingly ordered FSC to make such employees whole "by paying each of them a sum of money equal to that which he would have earned . . . if Respondent had not withheld his merit increase."[171]

---

[168] The Company refers to all nonsupervisory, salaried, clerical, and "technical" employees as "salaried non-exempt" employees. ("Non-exempt" refers to the applicability to them of the Fair Labor Standards Act. "Non-exempt" thus distinguishes them from management personnel, who are also salaried, but who are "exempt.") The pleadings and the evidence in this proceeding track company usage.

[169] 226 NLRB at 124

[170] See, in this connection, the discussion above of Robert Early and other FSC crane operators.

[171] 220 NLRB at 268. The Steelworkers and FSC agreed to the termination of the merit pay system as of April 24, 1977. (See part VII, above.) Thus FSC has incurred no backpay liability for its failure to pay merit pay subsequent to that date.

Only two issues regarding merit pay are outstanding. First, would the wage controls imposed by Phase III of the Economic Stabilization Act have caused FSC to refrain from granting merit pay increases during the period that it was in effect. And second, some of the employees who became entitled to merit pay after January 1973 subsequently received evaluations of satisfactory or worse. They accordingly would have been red-circled had FSC actually had its merit pay system then in effect. Should the backpay owed to those employees reflect those below-merit evaluations.

The Impact of the Economic Stabilization Act. This issue has already been litigated and decided. Administrative Law Judge Wilson heard evidence on this precise subject. He found that: "Originally in 1973 at Charlotte this merit plan was interrupted by the wage guidelines established by the Cost of Living Council, out that interruption was removed on August 13, 1973."[172] That finding is conclusive. Employees who became entitled to merit pay in the period January through August 1973 would not have started receiving merit pay until August 13, 1973. FSC's backpay obligations should reflect that circumstance.

The Impact of FSC's Red-circled Procedures. It is evident that had FSC continued its pre-1973 merit pay practices at Charlotte, employees there whose performances deteriorated to below-merit levels thereby would have ceased qualifying for merit pay. Their subsequent pay increases would accordingly have been affected by FSC's red-circle procedures. All that is as FSC contends. The only matter of concern is the nature of the evidence submitted by FSC purporting to show which employees would have been red-circled.

At various times in the period at issue employees were graded on a letter or integer basis. The record is clear that for employees graded on that basis, "4" or "5" or "A" or "B" meant above satisfactory and qualified the employees for merit pay. "C," "D," or "E," or "1," "2," or "3," meant satisfactory or worse.[173] Thus C or 3 (or worse) was not high enough for merit pay.

But during the period 1973 through 1975 employees sometimes received noninteger numerical grades (like 2.8 or 3.4).[174] During the 1973–1975 period in which those noninteger numerical grades were given, no employee went on to merit pay or came off it (because of FSC's wrongful cessation of the merit system). Accordingly the question is this: Had FSC been on the merit pay system in 1973–1975, how would FSC have dealt, in terms of merit pay, with noninteger grades—grades that were never in fact considered for merit pay purposes. One possibility is that FSC would have granted merit pay to any employee who received a grade at all better than 3.0 ("satisfactory"). Under that assumption a 3.1 grade would entitle employees to merit pay. Another possibility is that FSC would have insisted that employees receive at least a 4.0 ("above satisfactory") grade. Under that approach an employee receiving merit pay would be red-circled if he received an evaluation of 3.9 or lower.

FSC proposed a middle ground. Its answer to the specifications assumes that had merit pay been effect in the 1973–1975 period, employees receiving merit pay would have continued to do so if they were graded 3.5 or higher. Such employees would have been red-circled, under this assumption, with grades of 3.4 or lower.[175]

FSC's approach is a reasonable and fair one. (Indeed, the General Counsel seems to interpolate the grades the same way FSC does, referring to a "34" (i.e., 3.4) as "satisfactory" and "36" as "above satisfactory.")[176] I accordingly conclude that the backpay due FSC employees because of FSC's unlawful cessation of its merit pay plan should reflect FSC's red-circle procedures as applied to the evaluations set forth in Respondent's Exhibit 21.[177]

IX. CONCLUSION

Interest Rate. All of the Board orders underlying this backpay proceeding provide that FSC shall pay interest on the backpay amounts at 6 percent per annum. The 6-percent figure was in keeping with the Board's invariable practice at the time. In August 1977 the Board changed its approach to determining the interest rate to be imposed on respondents.[178] And since then the interest rate levied on backpay has been considerably higher than 6 percent.

The Steelworkers argues that the new higher rates ought to be applied to the backpay FSC owes to interest rates "is not applicable in cases in which an earlier order of the Board providing for a different interest rate has been enforced by a court of appeals." S. E. Nichols of Ohio, Inc., 258 NLRB 1, 1–2 (1981). Accord: Iron Workers Local 378 (Judson Steel Corp.), 262 NLRB 421 (1982). Since all the underlying orders in this proceeding were enforced by courts of appeals (see fn. 1, above), I am required to leave the 6-percent figure intact.

Computation of Backpay. FSC's Charlotte and Indiantown plants have each employed well over 100 bargaining unit personnel throughout the backpay period. And all such employees are owed backpay. Moreover, the backpay period is a lengthy one. Because of that, because there are no issues outstanding on matters such as interim earnings or numbers of hours each of the various employees worked, and because the parties are in a better position than is the Board to do the arithmetic computation necessary to arrive at backpay amounts, the parties stipulated that "computation of individual employee backpay amounts owing will not be sought from the Administrative Law Judge or any reviewing authorities."[179] In view of that stipulation, the accompanying

[172] 220 NLRB at 265.

[173] See Tr. 52–53 (witness Rogers) and GCX–7.

[174] The grades were sometimes listed as a total of 10 separate grades for individual aspects of the employee's performance. Thus an employee's grade might be "28" or "34." But for all intents and purposes those would be equivalent to 2.8 or 3.4. See GCX–7 and Tr. 358.

[175] FSC witness Rogers was frank to say that the 3.5 cutoff that the Company is arguing for is solely one of "judgment": Tr. 358.

[176] G.C. Br. at 41.

[177] The General Counsel raised several arguments not specifically dealt with above in opposition to FSC's red-circle contentions. I considered those arguments, but found none to be persuasive.

[178] The case happened to involve FSC: 231 NLRB 651.

[179] I am including the stipulation in the record as ALJ–5.

Order will simply require FSC to pay the employees named in the backpay specifications amounts reflecting the conclusions of this decision.

ORDER

The Respondent Florida Steel Corporation, Charlotte, North Carolina, and Indiantown, Florida, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall, within 30 days of the date of this Order, make whole the employees named in the backpay specifications in this proceeding by paying to those employees amounts reflecting the various conclusions set forth in the foregoing decision.

APPENDIX D

Reconstructed Wage Rates, FSC's Charlotte Plant, as of February 28, 1976[1]

Grade	Wage Rate in February 1973[2]	Percent of AHE in February 1973[3]	Reconstructed Wage Rate as of February 28, 1976[4]
1 RF & Mill	$2.60	81.25%	$3.38
2 RF	2.75	85.94	3.58
3 RF	2.80	87.50	3.64
4 RF	2.85	89.06	3.70
5 RF	2.90	90.63	3.77
3 & 4 Mill	2.94	91.88	3.82
5 Mill & 6 RF & Mill	3.00	93.75	3.90
7 RF & Mill	3.17	99.06	4.12
8 RF & Mill	3.33	104.1	4.33
9 RF & Mill	3.50	109.4	4.55
10 RF & Mill	3.64	113.8	4.73
11 RF & Mill	3.83	119.7	4.98
12 Mill	4.05	126.6	5.27
13 Mill	4.27	133.4	5.55
14 Mill	4.49	140.3	5.84
15 Mill	4.71	147.2	6.12
17 Mill	5.16	161.3	6.71

[1] February 28, 1976, is one of the dates on which FSC would have granted a wage increase to its hourly Charlotte employees but for the Company's unlawful change in wage policy.

[2] The last wage increase that FSC granted at Charlotte before its change in wage policy was in February 1973.

[3] Based on AHE of $3.20 (Charlotte SMSA primary metals average AHE for the 12 months ended February 1973).

[4] Based on AHE of $4.16 (Charlotte SMSA primary metals average AHE for the 12 months ended February 1976).

APPENDIX E

Reconstructed Wage Rates, FSC's Indiantown Plant, as of December 25, 1976[1]

Grade	Wage Rate as of Dec. 1973[2]	Percent of AHE as of Dec. 1973[3]	Reconstructed Wage as of Dec. 25, 1976[4]
1	$3.50	101.4	$4.42
2	3.80	110.1	4.80
3	4.00	115.9	5.05
4	4.30	124.6	5.43
5	4.70	136.2	5.94
6	5.15	149.3	6.51
7	5.75	166.7	7.27
9	6.15	178.3	7.77

[1] December 25, 1976, is one of the dates on which FSC would have granted a wage increase to its hourly Indiantown employees but for the Company's unlawful change in wage policy.

[2] The last wage increase that FSC granted before its change in wage policy was in April 1974. That increase was made retroactive to December 1973.

[3] Based on AHE of $3.45 (Florida Statewide all manufacturing average AHE for the 12 months ended December 1973).

[4] Based on AHE of $4.36 (Florida Statewide all manufacturing average AHE for the 12 months ended December 1976).

APPENDIX F

Presumed Dates of Reconstructed Wage Increases[1]

Charlotte

Feb. 3, 1974	May 29, 1976
Nov. 30, 1974	Aug. 28, 1976
Feb. 22, 1975	Nov. 27, 1976
May 24, 1975	Feb. 26, 1977
Aug. 30, 1975	Feb. 26, 1978
Nov. 29, 1975	Feb. 25, 1979
Feb. 28, 1976	Feb. 24, 1980

1981, 1982, and subsequent years, if any: last Sunday in February.

Indiantown

Sept. 28, 1974	June 26, 1976
Dec. 21, 1974	Sept. 25, 1976
Mar. 29, 1975	Dec. 25, 1976
June 28, 1975	Dec. 25, 1977
Sept. 27, 1975	Dec. 31, 1978
Dec. 20, 1975	Dec. 23, 1979
Mar. 27, 1976	Dec. 28, 1980

1981, 1982, and subsequent years, if any: last Sunday in December.

[1] Source: GCX-97 and 100.

APPENDIX G

Table 1

	Methodology Adopted by this Decision	General Counsel's Model	FSC's Regression Model
1980 Charlotte Grade 11 Reconstructed Wage	$6.70	$7.31	$6.27
1980 Indiantown Grade 5 Reconstructed Wage	8.14	8.64	7.40

Table 2

Separate Regressions of FSCWages on AHE for Each CharlotteLabor Grade

Labor Grade	Slope
1	0.877
2	1.033
3	1.110
4	1.094
5	1.956
6	0.965
7	1.064
8	1.055
9	1.052
10	1.141
11	1.328
12	1.329
13	1.363
14	1.440
15	1.523
16	1.625

Table 2—Continued

Separate Regressions of FSCWages on AHE for Each CharlotteLabor Grade

Labor Grade	Slope
17	1.722
18	1.823

Table 3

Base Period Wages at FSC's Charlotte Plant

	May 1969	May 1970	May 1971	Jan. 1972	Feb. 1973
1. RF & Mill	$2.01	$2.14	$2.24	$2.35	$2.60
2. RF	2.07	2.20	2.30	2.46	2.75
3. RF	2.07	2.23	2.35	2.51	2.80
4. RF	2.13	2.30	2.42	2.58	2.85
5. RF	2.21	2.37	2.50	2.66	2.90
3. Mill	2.30	2.43	2.53	2.67	2.94
4. Mill	2.30	2.43	2.53	2.67	2.94
5. Mill	2.30	2.45	2.55	2.72	3.00
6. RF & Mill	2.31	2.47	2.59	2.75	3.00
7. RF & Mill	2.42	2.60	2.72	2.84	3.17
8. RF & Mill	2.52	2.70	2.84	3.01	3.33
9. RF & Mill	2.63	2.82	2.97	3.14	3.50
10. RF & Mill	2.75	2.94	3.10	3.27	3.64
11. RF & Mill	2.84	3.08	3.25	3.52	3.83
12. Mill	3.01	3.25	3.43	3.61	4.05
13. Mill	3.17	3.41	3.61	3.80	4.27
14. Mill	3.33	3.57	3.79	3.98	4.49
15. Mill	3.59	3.73	3.98	4.17	4.71
16. Mill	—	—	—	—	—
17. Mill	—	—	—	4.53	5.16
Average Hourly Wage, All Grades	$2.65	$2.84	$2.99	$3.21	$3.57

Table 4

Charlotte Lower Grades

February	Reconstructed Wage	% of AHE
	Grade 1 RF and Mill
1973	2.60	81%
1974	2.93	84%
1976	3.59	86%
1979	4.75	91%
1981	5.78	92%
	Grade 6 Mill
1973	3.00	94%
1974	3.30	94%
1976	3.96	95%
1979	5.12	98%
1981	6.15	98%

Table 4—Continued

Charlotte Lower Grades

February	Reconstructed Wage	% of AHE
	Charlotte Upper Grades
	7 RF and Mill
1973	3.17	99%
1974	3.69	105%
1976	4.63	111%
1979	6.32	121%
1981	7.74	124%
	15 Mill
1973	4.71	147%
1974	4.96	142%
1976	5.90	142%
1979	7.59	145%
1981	9.01	144%

Table 5A

Comparison of Tampa Wage Rate Reconstruction with Actual Tampa Rates

Labor Grade	4/76		7/76		10/76		5/77		4/78		4/79		4/80
	Predicted	Actual	Predicted	Actual	Predicted	Actual	Predicted	Actual	Predicted	Actual	Predicted	Actual	Predicted[1]	Actual
1	$4.01	$3.97	$4.06	$4.04	$4.18	$4.14	$4.39	$4.37	$4.77	$4.86	$5.31	$5.44	$5.92	$6.08
2	4.23	4.19	4.28	4.26	4.40	4.36	4.61	4.59	4.99	5.08	5.53	5.66	6.14	6.30
3	4.49	4.46	4.54	4.53	4.66	4.63	4.87	4.86	5.25	5.35	5.79	5.93	6.40	6.57
4	4.71	4.68	4.76	4.75	4.88	4.85	5.09	5.08	5.47	5.57	6.01	6.15	6.62	6.79
5	4.98	4.95	5.03	5.02	5.15	5.12	5.36	5.35	5.74	5.84	6.28	6.42	6.89	7.06
6	5.84	5.82	5.89	5.89	6.01	5.99	6.21	6.22	6.60	6.71	7.14	7.29	7.75	7.93
7	6.21	6.20	6.26	6.27	6.38	6.37	6.59	6.60	6.97	7.09	7.51	7.67	8.12	8.31
8	6.42	6.41	6.47	6.48	6.59	6.58	6.80	6.81	7.18	7.30	7.72	7.88	8.33	8.52
9	6.64	6.63	6.69	6.70	6.81	6.80	7.01	7.03	7.40	7.52	7.91	8.10	8.52	8.74
10	6.85	6.85	6.90	6.92	7.02	7.02	7.23	7.25	7.61	N/R	8.15	N/R	8.76	N/R

[1] Based on the preliminary AHE figure for April 1980.

Table 5B

Reconstructed FSC Charlotte Wages, Illustrative Grades and Years

	FSC Regression Model	General Counsel Models
Labor Grade 1 (RF and Mill)
1974	$2.86	$2.93
1980	4.36	5.07
Labor Grade 14 (Mill)
1974	$4.83	$4.78
1980	7.20	7.86

Table 6

	5/69	5/70	5/71	1/72	2/73
AHE, Primary Metals, Charlotte SMSA Moving Average	2.57	2.72	2.85	2.99	3.20
Average FSC Charlotte Wage, All Grades	2.65	2.84	2.99	3.21	3.57
Dollar Difference Between Average Charlotte Wage and AHE	$ .08	$ .12	$ .14 $ .22 $ .37
Average Charlotte Wage as % of AHE	103.1%	104.4%	104.9%	107.4%	111.6%

Table 7

Reconstructed Charlotte Wage Rates, 1980

	Grade 1	Grade 9
FSC Proportional Index	$4.79	$7.90
FSC Combination Index	5.12	7.55
FSC Across-the-Bd-Index	5.28	7.38
FSC Regression Model	4.36	7.60

Table 8

Base Period Wages at FSC's Indiantown Plant

Labor Grade	Sept. 1970	Dec. 1971	Oct. 1972	Feb. 1973	Dec. 1973 [a]
1	$2.29	$2.50	$2.75	$3.10	$3.50
2	2.59	2.80	3.00	3.40	3.80
3	2.88	3.11	3.32	3.60	4.00
4	3.17	3.39	3.63	3.90	4.30
5	3.47	3.70	3.95	4.30	4.70
6	3.76	3.99	4.25	4.75	5.15
7	4.06	4.30	4.60	5.35	5.75
8	•	•	•	•	•
9	4.37	4.61	4.93	5.75	6.15
	Average Hourly Wage, All Grades
	3.31	3.54	3.78	4.21	4.61

[a] This wage increase was agreed to during April 1974 but it was made retroactive to December 1973.

Table 9

General Counsel's Indiantown Model

December	Reconstructed Wage	Reconstructed Wage As Percent of AHE
	Grade 1
1973	$3.50	101%
1974	3.96	105%
1976	4.90	112%
1979	6.66	122%
	Grade 5
1973	$4.70	136%
1974	5.16	137%
1976	6.10	140%
1979	7.86	143%
	Grade 9
1973	$6.15	178%
1974	6.61	176%
1976	7.55	173%
1979	9.31	170%

Table 10

Reconstructed Indiantown Wage Rates

	FSC Regression Model	General Counsel Regression
	Labor Grade 1
Dec. 1974	$3.69	$3.96
Dec. 1980	4.86	7.44
	Labor Grade 4
Dec. 1974	$4.65	$4.76
Dec. 1980	6.76	8.24
	Labor Grade 9
Dec. 1974	$6.60	$ 6.61
Dec. 1980	9.30	10.09

Table 11

	Sept. 1970	Dec. 1971	Oct. 1972	Feb. 1973	Dec. 1973
AHE All Manufacturing Florida Statewide Moving Average	2.83	3.04	3.16	3.23	3.45
AVERAGE FSC Indiantown Wage, All Grades	3.31	3.54	3.78	4.21	4.61
Difference Between Average Indiantown Wage And AHE	$ .48	$ .50	$ .62	$ .98	$1.16
Average Indiantown Wages as % of AHE	117%	116%	120%	130%	134%

Table 12

Reconstructed Indiantown Wage Rates for 1980

	Grade 1	Grade 9
FSC Percentage Index	$5.21	$9.57
FSC Combination Index	6.12	9.34
FSC Across-the-Board Index	6.57	9.22
FSC Regression	4.86	9.30
General Counsel Regression	7.44	10.09

Table 13

Spread Between Charlotte Grade 1

(RF and Mill) and Charlotte Grade 6 (RF)

	1969	1970	1971	1972	1973
Grade 1 Wage	2.01	2.14	2.24	2.35	2.60
Grade 6 Wage	2.31	2.47	2.59	2.75	3.00
Dollar Spread	.30	.33	.35	.40	.40
Percent Spread	14.9%	15.4%	15.6%	17.0%	15.4%
Grade 7 Wage	2.42	2.60	2.72	2.84	3.17
Grade 15 Wage	3.59	3.73	3.98	4.17	4.17

Table 13—Continued

Spread Between Charlotte Grade 1 (RF and Mill) and Charlotte Grade 6 (RF)

	1969	1970	1971	1972	1973
Dollar Spread	1.17	1.13	1.26	1.33	1.54
Percent Spread	48.3%	43.5%	46.3%	46.8%	48.6%

Table 14

Year	Average CPI Grade 9 as a Percent of Average CPI Grade 1
1970	166%
1971	172%
1972	182%
1973	181%

Table 15

Year	Average CPI Grade 9 as a Percent of Average CPI Grade 1
1974	191%
1975	180%
1976	203%
1977	191%
1978	184%
1979	181%
1980	172%

Table 16

Reconstructed Charlotte Wage Rates,

	Gr. 1 (RF)	Gr. 7 (RF & Mill)	Gr. 14 (Mill)
February 1974
As Adopted by this Decision	$2.84	$3.47	$4.91
General Counsel's Regression Models	2.93	3.69	4.78
FSC's Regression Model	2.86	3.42	4.83
February 1980
As Adopted by this Decision	$4.55	$5.55	$7.86
General Counsel's Regression Models	5.07	6.77	8.04

Table 16—Continued

Reconstructed Charlotte Wage Rates,

	Gr. 1 (RF)	Gr. 7 (RF & Mill)	Gr. 14 (Mill)
FSC's Regression Model	4.36	5.17	7.20

Table 17

Base Period Relationships between FSC Indiantown Grades 9 and 1

Year	Percentage Difference Between Grades 9 and 1	Dollar Difference Between Grades 9 and 1
1970	91%	$2.08
1971	84%	2.11
1972	79%	2.18
1973 (Feb.)	85%	2.65
1973 (Dec.)	76%	2.65

Table 18

Year	Grade 9 as a Percentage of Grade 1, Indiantown Survey
1970	149%
1971	216%
1973	191%
1980	200%

Table 19

Reconstructed Indiantown Wage Rates

December 1974
As Recommended by this Decision	$3.81	$5.12	$6.70
General Counsel's Regression Models	3.96	5.16	6.61
FSC's Regression Model	3.69	5.09	6.60
December 1980
As Recommended by this Decision	$6.06	$8.14	$10.66
General Counsel's Regression Models	7.44	8.64	10.09
FSC's Regression Model	4.86	7.40	9.30

Amalgamated Jewelry, Diamond and Watchcase Workers Union, Local 1-J, SEIU, AFL-CIO and The I. Shor Company, Inc.

Jewelry Manufacturers Association, Local 1-J, Welfare Fund[1] and The I. Shor Company, Inc.

Amalgamated Jewelry, Diamond and Watchcase Workers Union, Local No. 1-J, SEIU, AFL-CIO and Jewelry Manufacturers Association, Local 1-J Welfare Fund and Joan Maffettone

The I. Shor Company, Inc. and Joan Maffettone, Petitioner and Amalgamated Jewelry, Diamond and Watchcase Workers Union, Local 1-J, SEIU, AFL-CIO. Cases 2-CB-9557, 2-CB-9557-2, 2-CB-9580, and 2-RD-1073

14 December 1984

DECISION, ORDER, AND DIRECTION OF SECOND ELECTION

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND DENNIS

On 6 June 1984 Administrative Law Judge Thomas T. Trunkes issued the attached decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed cross-exceptions and a supporting brief. The General Counsel and the Employer filed answering briefs to the Respondent's exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions as modified[2] and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.

The judge found, and we agree, that the Respondent, Amalgamated Jewelry, Diamond and Watchcase Workers Union, Local 1-J, SEIU, AFL-CIO (the Union) violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) by threatening to terminate and Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) by suspending Joan Maffettone's health and welfare benefits because she filed a decertification petition. Contrary to the judge, however, we find the Respondent, Jewelry Manufacturers Association, Local 1-J, Welfare Fund (Fund), as agent of the Union, also violated the Act.

In fall 1982, approximately 20 employees of I. Shor Company, Inc. (Employer) met to discuss decertifying the Union. A decertification petition was circulated among the employees and on 1 October 1982[3] bookkeeper Joan Maffettone filed the petition with the Regional Office.

On 25 October Maffettone received a letter at work on Fund stationery dated 12 October from Joseph Tarantola, union president and Fund administrator, stating, inter alia, that it had come to "[the Fund's] attention through the Union that you may not be a member of the bargaining unit" and that "commencing November 14, 1982, you shall no longer be covered under this plan."

Maffettone, who was being treated for cancer at the time, testified she became extremely upset upon receiving the letter and showed it to five or six fellow employees. According to her credited testimony, several employees voiced the fear they would lose their medical benefits as they had also signed the decertification petition.

Maffettone wrote to Tarantola on 28 October objecting to the cancellation of her benefits and requesting a detailed explanation for the suspension. She also retained an attorney, who wrote to Tarantola on 4 November.

On 22 November union organizer Pedro Ortiz spoke with Maffettone while visiting the Employer's place of business. When she requested that he not speak to her but with her attorney, Ortiz asked her approximately five or six times whether she was "throwing [him] out as an official of this company." Maffettone reported the matter to Supervisor Pete Shor, who requested Ortiz to leave.

On 30 November, Tarantola, again in his capacity as Fund administrator, wrote Maffettone and Nat Shor, president of the Employer, to invite them to participate in the investigation of Maffettone's status. In the meantime, the Employer's attorneys had protested Tarantola's threatened cancellation of Maffettone's benefits and assured Tarantola that she was a unit employee. Finally, on 20 December, Tarantola wrote Maffettone and advised her, without explanation, that the Fund was reinstating her benefits.

As stated, the judge found the Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) by threatening to terminate and Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) by suspending Maffettone's Fund benefits between 14 November and 20 December for filing the decertification petition.[4]

[1] We grant the General Counsel's motion to correct the caption for the name of the Fund to read, "Jewelry Manufacturers Association, Local 1-J, Welfare Fund."

[2] An election was held 10 March 1983 in Case 2-RD-1073 pursuant to a Decision and Direction of Election. The tally of ballots shows 14 for, and 11 against, Amalgamated Jewelry, Diamond and Watchcase Workers Union, Local 1-J, SEIU, AFL-CIO, with 1 nondeterminative challenged ballot.

Absent exceptions, we adopt pro forma the judge's recommendations that Employer's Objections 1(a), (c), (e), 2, 4(a), (b), (c), and 6 to the election be sustained, and that Employer's Objections 1(b), (d), 3, 4(d), (e), and 5 be overruled, and that the election held 10 March 1983 be set aside and a second election conducted.

[3] All dates are in 1982 unless otherwise noted.

[4] The General Counsel alleges Tarantola "terminated" Maffettone's Fund benefits, while the Union argues Tarantola merely "suspended" her

Continued

He found Maffettone had been an employee of the Employer and a member in good standing of the Union for more than 20 years, and that, prior to October, there was no suspicion by the Union or credible evidence that she was not included in the bargaining unit. The judge further found Tarantola harbored animosity toward Maffettone for instigating and filing the decertification petition. The judge noted Tarantola admitted at the hearing that, upon learning Maffettone had filed the petition, "he became very angry."

The judge also found insufficient evidence existed to support sending the 12 October letter to Maffettone. He noted the sole evidence presented to Tarantola consisted of statements by Pedro Ortiz, union organizer, and Oswald Gutierrez, union vice president, that Maffettone was a supervisor. However, the judge found Ortiz did not conduct his investigation in good faith. While Gutierrez testified he had no problem speaking with employees at the facility, Ortiz stated he was unable to verify Maffettone's supervisory status because she constantly followed him around the plant. The judge noted, however, that Ortiz made no effort to contact employees at their home or somewhere outside the Employer's premises.[5]

The judge found Tarantola at no time prior to the 12 October letter attempted to obtain Maffettone's position on the planned suspension of benefits, and it was not until 30 November that Tarantola wrote to either Maffettone or the Employer requesting their assistance in investigating her alleged supervisory status. The judge also found the Union chose not to participate in the hearing following the filing of the decertification petition, although Maffettone's eligibility to vote in the election was at issue. Finally, the judge observed that Tarantola offered no explanation for his "change of heart" in reinstating Maffettone's coverage in the 20 December letter.

Based on his analysis of the above facts, the judge concluded Maffettone's benefits were suspended because of her filing of the decertification petition. As stated above, we agree.

We next examine the relationship between the Union and the Fund. The Union and the Fund are located in the same office at 133 West 44th Street in New York City. The Fund was established pursuant to a collective-bargaining agreement between the Union and the Jewelry Manufacturers Association, of which the Employer is a member. The trust agreement, as amended, provides that the plan be jointly administered; four trustees are designated by the Union and four are designated by the Employer participants. The four union trustees of the Fund, Joseph Tarantola, Oswald Gutierrez, Herbert Johnson Jr., and Pedro Ortiz, are, respectively, president, vice president, secretary-treasurer, and organizer of the Union. All four use their own offices to conduct all union and Fund business. In addition, Joseph Tarantola serves as president of the Union, administrator of the Fund, and chairman of the board of trustees of the Fund.

In his capacity as Fund administrator, Tarantola decides whether or not a participant of the welfare plan is entitled to its benefits, and has authority temporarily to suspend benefits while investigating claims. Tarantola testified that, as union president, he could order an investigation by union agents into participant eligibility, but that he acted as Fund administrator in making decisions based on the information supplied. We agree with the judge, therefore, that it is "difficult to separate one function from the other."

The judge found Tarantola represented the Union's "principal interests" in regard to Maffettone and his actions as administrator were therefore imputed to the Union. The judge found, however, that the Fund was not an agent of the Union because the board of trustees of the Fund, including the employer-appointed trustees, "never was afforded an opportunity to either confirm or refute Tarantola's actions with respect to Maffettone." We reverse the judge and find that, because Tarantola had actual authority to suspend and to threaten to terminate fund benefits, the Fund is responsible for his conduct.

Tarantola has served as Fund administrator for nearly 15 years. His duties include, inter alia, directing the work of claims processors, corresponding with individual participants, doctors, hospital administrators, and attorneys, and, finally, investigating and suspending participants ineligible to receive benefits. He testified his power to perform these duties is derived from past practice, directions of the board of trustees of the Fund, and the agreement and declaration of trust, as amended. While Tarantola had the power to suspend participant benefits, only the board of trustees could terminate participation. Thus, according to Tarantola, the procedure in a typical case involved suspending coverage either before or during an investigation into a participant's eligibility, and, if appropriate, recommending to the board of trustees to terminate participation. Tarantola testified over the last 2

Fund benefits. The judge found that Maffettone's health and welfare benefits were suspended between 14 November and 20 December 1982. We agree. The uncontradicted evidence indicates that a vote before the full board of trustees is required to terminate a participant's benefits. The board took no such action concerning Maffettone.

[5] The judge further discounted the affidavit of union shop steward Jacquline Gross, asserting Maffettone's supervisory status, because it was obtained subsequent to the 12 October letter.

years a "number of participants" suspected of supervisory status had been terminated under this procedure. In the instant case, Tarantola testified Maffettone's coverage was merely suspended not terminated. These facts clearly indicate the Fund vested Tarantola with actual authority to suspend participant eligibility, as well as to threaten termination based on his responsibility to make such recommendations to the Board.[6]

We now turn to the question of whether Tarantola's actions as Fund administrator made the Fund a union agent. The language of Section 8(b) specifically limits our jurisdiction to unfair labor practices committed by a "labor organization or its agents." In determining whether fund actions can be attributed to a union, the courts[7] have identified at least three factual situations:[8]

1. Where provisions of a collective-bargaining agreement remove the discretion to administer the funds solely for the benefit of the employees.

2. Where the trustees' actions were in fact directed by union officials.

3. Where the trustees' acts were undertaken in their capacities as union officials rather than as trustees.

Here, the facts demonstrate that, on learning Maffettone might be a supervisor, Tarantola immediately notified her that her coverage would no longer be in effect. The judge found that Tarantola, as Fund administrator, would have no reason "for his hastiness in writing the letter without further evidence." Moreover, Tarantola testified that, under normal circumstances, a benefit claim took 6 to 12 months to process. Here, however, it is undisputed that Maffettone's benefit coverage was suspended only 2 weeks after the decertification petition was filed. As the judge correctly found, therefore, the Fund had no interest in such unusually expeditious action.

In this case, the trustees delegated certain authority to Tarantola, which he exercised to further the interests of the Union in his capacity as union president, thus bringing the facts within the third set of circumstances under which a fund may be deemed a union agent. Tarantola's action constituted a transparently pretextual retaliation against an employee for filing a decertification petition, not a good-faith effort to preserve Fund assets.[9]

AMENDED CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Substitute the following for Conclusions of Law 3 and 4.

"3. By threatening to terminate the health and welfare benefits of Joan Maffettone through its agent, Jewelry Manufacturers Association, Local 1-J, Welfare Fund, because she filed a decertification petition with the Board, the Union has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

"4. By suspending the health and welfare benefits of Joan Maffettone between 14 November and 20 December 1982 through its agent, Jewelry Manufacturers Association, Local 1-J, Welfare Fund, the Union has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act."

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondents, Amalgamated Jewelry, Diamond and Watchcase Workers Union, Local 1-J, SEIU, AFL-CIO, New York, New York, and Jewelry Manufacturers Association, Local 1-J, Welfare Fund, New York, New York, their officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the Order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the election conducted 10 March 1983 in Case 2-RD-1073 is set aside and that a new election be held as directed below.

[Direction of Second Election omitted from publication.]

---

[6] Restatement 2d, Agency § 212, 215, 229 (1958). See Longshoremen ILWU Local 61 (Sunset Line), 79 NLRB 1487, 1509 (1948) (Board has clear statutory mandate to apply ordinary law of agency).

[7] See NLRB v. Teamsters Local 449, 728 F.2d 80, 89 (2d Cir. 1984); Griffin Corp. v. NLRB, 660 F.2d 406, 410 (9th Cir. 1981). See also NLRB v. Laborers Local 1140, 577 F.2d 16, 21 (8th Cir. 1978), cert. denied 439 U.S. 1070 (1979).

[8] Teamsters Local 449, above, 728 F.2d at 89.

[9] In finding the Fund to be the Union's agent when Tarantola threatened to terminate and suspended Maffettone's benefits, we emphasize our holding does not subject trustees to "conflicting duties imposed by the National Labor Relations Act and ERISA." NLRB v. Amax Coal Co., 453 U.S. 322, 337 fn. 21 (1981). In Amax, the Supreme Court held employer-selected trustees of a jointly administered trust fund, such as the one involved in this proceeding, are not agents of the employer but fiduciaries "whose duty to the trust beneficiaries must overcome any loyalty to the interest of the party that appointed [them]." The Court found ERISA vested exclusive authority to manage and control fund assets in the trustees alone, and not the employer or the union. By contrast, Tarantola, as Fund administrator, had actual authority from the trustees to take the actions he did and did so on the Union's behalf.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

THOMAS T. TRUNKES, Administrative Law Judge. This proceeding,[1] under Section 10(b) and Section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act, was heard pursuant to due notice on September 29 and 30, 1983, and January 11 and 12, 1984, in New York, New York, based on an order consolidating cases, consolidated complaint, and notice of hearing, dated April 15, 1983, issued in Cases 2–CB–9557, 2–CB–9557–2, and 2–CB–9580, and an order consolidating the above-captioned cases with a notice of hearing on objections in Case 2–RD–1073, dated April 28, 1983.

The issues presented at the hearing were as follows:

1. Whether Joseph Tarantola, for the purposes of the instant case, should be considered an agent of Respondent/Union, Respondent Fund, or both?

2. Whether Respondent Union, Respondent Fund, or both, through Tarantola, violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by threatening to suspend Joan S. Maffettone from her participation in Respondent Fund and by suspending her participation in said fund because of her protected concerted activity, namely, the filing of a decertification petition?

3. Whether or not the conduct of agents of the Union, including, inter alia, the acts of Tarantola as described in paragraph 2, constitute objectionable conduct sufficient to overturn the results of a Board-conducted election?

All parties were afforded a full opportunity to participate at the hearing. Briefs were filed by the General Counsel and the Charging Party/Employer. A joint brief was filed by Respondent Union and Respondent Fund.

On the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The I. Shor Company, Inc. (the Employer), a New York corporation, with an office and place of business located in New York, New York (the Employer's facility) is engaged in the business of selling and servicing machines and factory supplies for the manufacture of jewelry. Annually, the Employer, in the course and conduct of its business operation, derives gross revenues in excess of $500,000 and purchases and receives at its facility goods and supplies valued in excess of $50,000 directly from suppliers located outside the State of New York. Respondents admit, and I find, that the Employer is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Amalgamated Jewelry, Diamond and Watchcase Workers Union, Local 1–J, SEIU, AFL–CIO (Respondent Union or Local 1–J) is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act, as admitted by Respondent Union and Respondent Fund.

Jewelry Manufacturers Association, Local 1–J Welfare Fund (Respondent Fund), a jointly administered welfare plan, exists for the purpose of administering various health and welfare plans maintained under one or more collective-bargaining agreements that Respondent Union has with various employers, as admitted by Respondents.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Operations of the Employer and Its Relationship with Respondent Union

As stated above, the Employer is engaged in the business of selling and servicing machines and factory supplies used for the manufacture of jewelry, with its principal place of business located in New York, New York. It employs approximately 30 employees who are supervised by Nat and Peter Shor. Nat is president of the Employer. The record does not indicate Peter's title, if any.

For many years, Respondent Union has been the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees of the Employer in the following unit:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees of the Employer, including office clerical employees, sales persons, repairmen, and shipping and receiving employees, excluding all outside sales help, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

The Employer has recognized the Union and has negotiated successive collective-bargaining agreements with it, the most recent of which was effective for the period September 12, 1981, to September 12, 1982. Pursuant to article XIV of this agreement, the Employer maintained and provided group insurance for the benefit of its employees covered by the agreement by making contributions on their behalf to Respondent Fund. The payment and receipt of the contributions continued for all unit employees, including Maffettone, subsequent to the expiration of the agreement.

Pursuant to article VII of the agreement, the Employer withheld union dues from unit employees, including Maffettone, and forwarded these dues to Respondent Union on a monthly basis. This practice also continued subsequent to the expiration of the most recent collective-bargaining agreement.

The undisputed evidence established that the Employer has permitted union representatives to enter the working area of its facility and to speak to various unit employees during working hours.

B. Status of Maffettone

In his Decision and Direction of Election, dated February 10, 1983, in Case 2–RD–1073, one of the consolidated cases in the present proceeding, the Regional Director for Region 2 of the National Labor Relations Board made the following finding:

> The evidence presented at the hearing reveals that Maffettone has worked for the Employer for [1] Andrew J. Schaffran replaced Respondent's original attorney after 2 days of hearing.

21 years and has been a member of the Union throughout her employment. As of the date of the filing of the petition, on October 1, 1982, Maffettone occupied the position of bookkeeper. The evidence reveals that the Employer employs approximately 25 bargaining unit employees including five employees in the bookkeeping department. Maffettone's job duties include making deposits, making cash disbursements, calling customers concerning overdue bills, filing, preparing the payroll, and answering the telephone. The record reveals that the other employees in the bookkeeping department perform similar functions, and that on occasion, these employees assist each other. The evidence presented at the hearing further revealed that Maffettone does not have the authority to hire, fire, discipline, promote, transfer, lay off, recall, reward, reprimand, or grant overtime to employes, nor does she have the authority to effectively recommend such actions. She is paid on an hourly rate, as are the other unit employees, receives no sick leave, and receives vacation time and hospital benefits pursuant to the collective-bargaining agreement between the Union and the Employer. The supervisory personnel of the Employer are paid a weekly salary and receive paid sick leave. The bookkeepers are supervised by Nathan Shor, the sales manager, who interviews all job applicants. If the applicant is acceptable to Shor, he will then have the applicant meet the employees who perform the office work, to assure that these employees will be able to work together. There was no evidence presented at the hearing that Maffettone or anyone else in the bookkeeping department has the authority to recommend the hire of any job applicant, but Shor will solicit the opinions of these employees and take these opinions into account as well as his view of the appplicant's abilities in making his determination of whether to hire an applicant.

Section 2(11) of the Act defines a supervisor as an "individual having authority, in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibly to direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action . . . ." While Maffettone may participate, along with other employees, in discussions with job applicants, I find that the evidence presented reveals that these discussions are for the purpose of describing the job duties and assuring that there will be a harmonious working relationship among the office staff, and thus does not rise to the level of recommending the hire of employees. See Willis Shaw Frozen Food Express, 173 NLRB 487, 488 (1968).

As there is no evidence that Maffettone possesses any of the indicia of supervisory authority enumerated in Section 2(11) of the Act, I find that she is not a supervisor and thus shall be included in the unit. In view of my finding that Maffettone, the Petitioner, is not a supervisor within the meaning of the Act, I shall direct an election in a bargaining unit coextensive with the contractual unit.

During the hearing in which the evidence was presented on which the Regional Director made his decision, a representative of Respondent Union made an appearance but did not take part in the hearing. Respondent Fund, not being a party to that proceeding in any respect, did not participate at the hearing. The Regional Director's decision was not appealed by anyone to higher authority. Accordingly, I shall accept this finding that Maffettone was not a supervisor of the Employer on October 1, 1982.

C. Filing of the Decertification Petition

Maffettone testified, without contradiction, that during the summer or fall of 1982,[2] approximately 20 employes held a meeting at the facility of the Employer to discuss the decertification of Respondent Union. Subsequent to the meeting, Maffettone was informed by agents of Region 2 of the Board what steps were to be taken in order to effectuate a decertification of Respondent Union. Thereafter, a petition was circulated among the employees requesting a decertification, and after obtaining a sufficient amount of signatures Maffettone presented the document to Region 2 on October 1 at which time a formal petition for a decertification election was filed.

D. Relationship of Respondent Union and Respondent Fund

Respondent Union's offices are located at 133 West 44th Street, New York, New York, on the third floor. Its president is Joseph Tarantola; the vice president is Oswald Gutierrez; the secretary-treasurer is Herbert Johnson Jr.; and Pedro (Pete) Ortiz is an organizer.

Respondent Fund also has an office located at the same address on the third floor. Four trustees are appointed by the Employer and four are appointed by Respondent Union. Tarantola is chairman of the board of trustees. The three other trustees appointed by the Union are Gutierrez, Johnson, and Ortiz. None of the trustees receives any payment from the Fund for work performed on the Fund's behalf. The four union trustees do not have a separate office to perform work for the Fund.

E. Status of Joseph Tarantola

Tarantola has been president of Respondent Union since June 1968. As such, he is a salaried employee. In addition to being a trustee and chairman of the board of trustees of Respondent Fund, he has been the administrator of the Fund since approximately the end of 1968. Both his positions as trustee and as administrator of the Fund are unsalaried.

As administrator of the Fund, Tarantola directs the work of the Fund, which included directing the work of the claims processors and handling all correspondence and communications. He is in communication with doctors, hospital administrators, insurance actuaries, and attorneys of the Fund. Further, he corresponds with other attorneys and with individual participants of the Fund. Additionally, he helps the claims department "draw up different forms for the development and expediting of the claims and the processing routines." As administrator, Tarantola decides whether or not a participant of the welfare plan is entitled to its benefits.

[2] Unless otherwise indicated, all dates refer to 1982.

F. The Alleged Violations of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act

Maffettone testified that about October 25 she received a letter, dated October 12, addressed to her from Tarantola. The body of the letter, in its entirety, is as follows:

> It has come to our attention through the Union that you may not be a member of the bargaining unit. Therefore, pursuant to the Trust Agreement of the Welfare Fund and the Plan, you are not entitled to receive health and welfare benefits until this matter is clarified.
>
> Please be advised that commencing November 14, 1982, you shall no longer be covered under this Plan. We suggest that you use this grace period to obtain individual coverage.
>
> A question has arisen with respect to your and/or I. Shor's responsibility in advising us of your non-bargaining unit status while receiving benefits. Therefore, we are commencing an investigation to determine whether a fraud has been perpetrated upon the Fund. If so, we may hold you and/or I. Shor's liable for any claims paid to you during your period of non-bargaining unit status.

Although the letter also revealed that Tarantola was aware of Maffettone's home address, the letter was sent and received by Maffettone at the office of the Employer. The letter was signed by Tarantola as administrator of Respondent Fund.

On receipt of the letter, Maffettone testified that she "panicked, cried, cursed, screamed. I was devastated." She contended that she reacted this way because at the time she was being treated for cancer and could not afford to be without benefits. She further asserted that five or six fellow employees who occupied desks in the same room where she sat were present at the time she received the letter. On being asked what the problem was, she showed the employees the letter in question. According to Maffettone, several employees voiced the fear that they would lose their medical benefits because they had also signed the decertification petition.

Thereafter, by letter dated October 28, Maffettone wrote to Tarantola, acknowledging receipt of his letter on Monday, October 25. She objected to the cancellation of her benefits and requested a detailed explanation from Tarantola for the reason for his planned action. In addition, Maffettone retained an attorney, Robin Woodrow, who further wrote to Tarantola, as administrator of Respondent Fund, on November 4, threatening to institute legal action should Maffettone be denied coverage or benefits under the welfare plan. Woodrow further advised Tarantola that any further correspondence with Maffettone be directed to her.

Maffettone further testified that on November 22 union organizer Ortiz visited the premises of the Employer, and stood by her desk looking down on her. She requested that he not speak to her but speak to her attorney. He asked her if she was "throwing me out as an official of this company" to which she replied, "No." He repeated his question approximately five or six times. When Ortiz refused to leave, Maffettone reported the matter to Peter Shor, who, on ascertaining that none of the employees wished to speak to Ortiz, requested Ortiz to leave. Ortiz complied with this request.

On November 30, Tarantola, again in his capacity as administrator of Respondent Fund, wrote to Maffettone, requesting her presence at the Fund office to continue the investigation concerning her status as a bargaining unit member. Maffettone did not comply with this request.

Meanwhile, by letter dated October 27 to Tarantola as Fund administrator, attorneys for the Employer also protested the threatened cancellation of benefits of Maffettone, and assured the Fund that she was a unit employee. By letter dated November 4, Tarantola, as administrator of the Fund, replied to the letter of October 27. By letter dated November 30, Tarantola, as administrator of the Fund, invited Nat Shor, president of the Employer, to participate in the investigation of Maffettone's status with the Employer. By letter dated December 7, the Employer, through its attorney, notified Tarantola, as administrator of the Fund, that as the Board had already found Maffettone not to be a supervisor, Tarantola should reinstate Maffettone to full coverage under the plan. By letter dated December 20, Tarantola advised Maffettone that on consideration, Respondent Fund had reinstated her coverage. Maffettone testified that at no time did anyone from Respondent Fund or Respondent Union explain to her why her benefits had been reinstated.

G. Defense of Respondents

In their defense, Respondents did not dispute that Tarantola took the actions recited above; rather, they attempted to show that the reasons behind these actions were lawful Tarantola, the principal witness of Respondents, testified that he received information from his union agents, Ortiz and Gutierrez, that Maffettone might be a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act, in which case she would be ineligible to participate in the Fund's benefits. Accordingly, Tarantola sent Maffettone the October 12 letter and suspended her benefits. He further testified that, as administrator of the Fund, he had full authority to suspend a participant as he did to Maffettone between November 14 and December 20, but the final authority for termination of coverage could only be made by the full board of trustees of the Fund. His principal concern in suspending Maffettone was to execute his duty as Fund administrator by ensuring that Fund moneys were not depleted through payment to ineligible parties. Specifically, when asked why he did not terminate Maffettone from participating in the Fund, he stated:

> Because I don't think that you handle those things lightly. You have got to be careful about people's rights, individual's rights, and the obligation to the fund. As well as the fact that I certainly wouldn't want the fund to be accused of improper action. So, I instituted an investigation. Rather than terminate benefits, I suspended them.

When asked why the letter of October 12, although addressed to Maffettone's residence in Brooklyn, was mailed to the Employer's facility in Manhattan, Tarantola replied:

> It was sent certified, and we wanted to make sure that Ms. Maffettone got the letter. It was supposed to be a return receipt requested letter, and figure [sic] that if she were working, she would not be able to get it at home and sign for it. The letter may have lain in the post office for some period of time before she got to the post office, because all they would have done, they would have left a notice. We therefore felt that she would have gotten it sooner had it been sent to her place of work.

When asked the reason for sending the letter of December 20, which reinstated Maffettone to the plan, Tarantola responded:

> From the evidence that had been presented to me from the information that I received during the investigation, it seemed to me that her status had changed with the company. That she was no longer functioning as a supervisor.

Tarantola continued by stating that he had obtained this information from Ortiz and Gutierrez who, in turn, had heard of it during their investigation at the Employer's facility.

Ortiz testified that, as an organizer for Respondent Union, he serviced the Employer's facility. Some time at the beginning of October, at one of his visits to the Employer's facility, he observed Jacquline Gross, who at the time was the shop steward, crying. Although Gross had given the Employer a 2-week notice that she was resigning from her job, a fact of which Ortiz was aware, Gross told Ortiz that Maffettone had fired her that day, and that Maffettone was the Employer's comptroller. Ortiz reported this matter to Tarantola, who instructed him to investigate the matter further. Ortiz testified that he returned to the Employer's facility a number of times in an attempt to ascertain Maffettone's alleged supervisory status. He stated that he was unable to do so because every time he entered the facility he was followed by Maffettone who stood within hearing distance each time he attempted to speak to an employee. He thereafter reported to Tarantola that he could obtain no further information with respect to Maffettone's status as a supervisor.

On cross-examination by the General Counsel, Ortiz conceded that he made no attempt to contact any of the employees of the Employer outside the Employer's facility or outside their working hours.

On redirect examination Ortiz recalls having spoken to several employees at the Employer's facility who informed him that Maffettone marked their timecards and would grant them permission to leave the facility early without speaking to anyone else. Ortiz asserted that none of the employees was prepared to submit an affidavit detailing this information. Ortiz also reported this information to Tarantola.

Gutierrez testified that in early October Gross came to his office and related to him that she had been discharged by the Employer, through Maffettone, who had hired her in the first place 6 months earlier. Gross related further information to indicate to Gutierrez that Maffettone actually was a supervisor. He passed on this information to Tarantola. Tarantola instructed him to investigate the matter further, which he did by speaking to several workers at the Employer's facility without any interference or obstruction by Maffettone. Several employees furnished information on which one might conclude Maffettone was a supervisor. However, no one was prepared to submit an affidavit to document this fact.

Under examination by counsel for the Fund, Gutierrez acknowledged that following his conversation with Gross he did obtain an affidavit, dated October 21, from her in which she stated, among other things, that Maffettone was the only person who had interviewed her before her employment and that Maffettone informed her "that she does the hiring and firing for the Company."

On the same day that Gross furnished the affidavit to him, Gutierrez filed an unfair labor practice charge against the Employer, alleging violations of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act, which were eventually dismissed by the Regional Director.[3]

H. Discussion and Analysis—The Alleged Violations

The complaint alleges that Respondents violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by threatening to terminate and thereafter terminating Maffettone's fund coverage effective November 14. The General Counsel contends that the latter action violates Section 8(b)(2) of the Act, which forbids a union, except in limited circumstances, from taking action which causes or attempts to cause the employer to discriminate against its employees. Thus, the General Counsel urges, by causing or attempting to cause the Employer to cease making fund contributions, and by causing the Fund to cancel Maffettone's coverage, Respondents clearly violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act.

Agreeing with the contentions of the General Counsel, the Employer further contends that Respondents' actions against Maffettone were clearly designed to restrain and coerce her and fellow unit employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights and to encourage membership in the Union by causing the Employer to discriminate against her.

[3] This was a second amended charge, the original charge having been filed in September.

Respondents contend that they acted in good faith in their actions and did not engage in any discriminatory conduct against Maffettone in violation of the Act.

Before one can judicially make findings and conclusions as to whether any of the alleged violations did occur as contended by the General Counsel, it is necessary to make credibility findings with respect to the testimony of the various witnesses presented at the hearing. In addition to considering the demeanor of the witnesses, the Board has stated, "It is abundantly clear that the ultimate choice between conflicting testimony also rests on the weight of the evidence, established or admitted facts, inherent probabilities, reasonable inferences drawn from the record, and, in sum, all of the other variant factors which the trier of fact must consider in resolving credibility." Northridge Knitting Mills, 223 NLRB 230, 235 (1976).

At the hearing, I emphasized that the credibility of Maffettone was not an issue for two reasons: (1) There was no dispute as to what Maffettone said or did which led to the instant conflict; and (2) essentially, there was no conflict with respect to relevant testimony offered by Maffettone. However, I made it clear that the credibility of Respondents' witnesses was at stake, especially that of Tarantola, the key person who performed the various acts which led to the instant complaint.

After listening to the testimony, I found it difficult to make a finding based on the demeanor of Tarantola that he undertook his actions for other than legitimate motives. He appeared extremely sincere as a witness, and I left the hearing with a visceral reaction that he truly believed that the actions he undertook, considering the evidence that was presented to him, were just and proper. Notwithstanding my initial thoughts, after a careful study of the transcript and an evaluation of the totality of the evidence, I have concluded that there is merit in the General Counsel's position for the following reasons.

1. Timing of the actions of Tarantola

Had Maffettone not filed a petition for a decertification of the Union on October 1, there would be no basis for a charge or a complaint in this case. At the time, Maffettone had been an employee of the Employer and a member in good standing of the Union for more than 20 years. There was no suspicion at any time prior to October that she was a supervisor of the Employer. Nevertheless, shop steward Gross, following her termination of employment, informed agents of the Union, according to the undisputed testimony of Ortiz and Gutierrez, that Maffettone had certain indicia of supervisory status under Section 2(11) of the Act. Her affidavit, presented later to the Union, states that she was interviewed and hired by Maffettone 6 months earlier. Despite this alleged occurrence, this information was not presented to the Union before the filing of the decertification petition by Maffettone.

2. Animosity toward Maffettone

Tarantola frankly admitted without hesitation that, on hearing that Maffettone was responsible for the filing of the decertification petition, he became very angry. This, of course, would be a natural reaction of any agent of a union which represented a group of employees. Although under similar circumstances, other union representatives may react in a very calm and placid manner on hearing such news, even they would not appreciate Maffettone's actions.

3. Insufficient evidence to support the sending of the October 12 letter to Maffettone

The General Counsel argues that the October 12 letter advised Maffettone of the termination of her health and welfare benefits. Respondents, on the other hand, argue that the letter merely signified a suspension of benefits which eventually was restored. A reading of the letter reveals that neither the word "termination" nor "suspension" was used. The first paragraph appears to indicate that the benefits would be suspended "until this matter is clarified." However, in the second paragraph, the letter also states, "you shall no longer be covered under this plan," and further suggests that Maffettone obtain individual coverage. Although Maffettone's coverage was reinstated at a later date, for at least the period from November 14 to December 20 she was not covered by the plan, and therefore suffered potential harm. Inasmuch as the record revealed that Maffettone had a serious medical problem at the time, at minimum the receipt of the letter had a chilling effect on her.

Although he may have believed he was acting in good faith, Tarantola had insufficient evidence as of October 12 to warrant the issuance of the letter. The sole evidence presented to Tarantola consisted of statements by his two agents, Ortiz and Gutierrez, that they had heard from employees in the unit that Maffettone was a supervisor. Respondent argues that the affidavit of Gross substantiates in detail these allegations. However, as the General Counsel and the Employer correctly point out, the affidavit of Gross was obtained subsequent to the issuance of the October 12 letter. Although Ortiz and Gutierrez were requested by Tarantola to obtain evidence of Maffettone's supervisory status, the record revealed that, as of October 12, no further evidence had been obtained.

4. Failure to contact Maffettone prior to the issuance of the letter

The record is clear that it was not until November 30 that Tarantola wrote to both Maffettone and the Employer requesting their assistance in the investigation of her alleged supervisory status. It is further clear that at no time prior to the issuance of the October 12 letter, although Maffettone had been a union member and in the appropriate unit for many years, did Respondents obtain Maffettone's position with respect to the problem at hand. No explanation was offered at the hearing for this failure to contact Maffettone.

5. Failure to respond to communications from Maffettone and the Employer

It is undisputed that following the receipt of the October 12 letter both Maffettone and the Employer wrote letters to Tarantola protesting the threat of termination of benefits. Tarantola did not respond to these communications. In addition, although Maffettone's attorney advised him that any further correspondence to Maffettone should be directed to her, Tarantola ignored this request and continued to deal with Maffettone directly.

6. Conflict between Ortiz and Gutierrez

Ortiz testified that he was unable to obtain verification of Maffettone's supervisory status from unit employees because Maffettone followed him around the facility while he was attempting to speak to employees. On the other hand, Gutierrez testified that he had no problem in speaking to other employees at the facility. Ortiz was unable to explain why he did not diligently pursue the matter further by contacting employees either at their homes or somewhere outside the Employer's premises where Maffettone could not interfere. Whether he was negligent, had no time, or was aware that no evidence was forthcoming to support the allegations furnished to him earlier is of no consequence. I conclude that the evidence presented at the hearing is sufficient to warrant a finding that Ortiz did not act in good faith.

7. Failure to contest the status of Maffettone

The evidence is undisputed that, following the filing of the decertification petition, a hearing was held to determine, among other matters, the eligibility of Maffettone to vote in a Board-conducted election. Although aware that this representation hearing was taking place, Respondent Union chose not to participtate at the hearing. Had Respondent Union reason to believe that Maffettone was a supervisor, which belief warranted the suspension of her benefits, logic dictates that it would have participated at the hearing in an effort to prove this point. Yet, no effort was made by Respondent Union to contest the supervisory status of Maffettone at the hearing.

8. The letter of December 20 reinstating Maffettone's benefits

In his letter to Maffettone reinstating her coverage, Tarantola offered no explanation for his change of heart. The record is bare of any evidence indicating that any further investigation was conducted following the refusal of Maffettone and the Employer to cooperate in the investigation of her supervisory status. Had Tarantola acted in good faith, on being advised by Ortiz and Gutierrez that employees would not cooperate with them, he could have advised Maffettone immediately thereafter, by telephone or telegram if necessary, of the reinstatement of her benefits. Surely by November 14, the date that the coverage was suspended, Tarantola was aware that he would be unable to obtain any concrete evidence to justify the suspension as indicated in his October 12 letter.

Although the General Counsel argues that the addressing of the October 12 letter to the employer's establishment is further evidence of Respondents' wrongdoing, I do not adopt this argument. Tarantola's explanation for the reason he sent the letter to the workplace rather than to the residence of Maffettone is most reasonable. As the letter was sent certified, and as Tarantola was aware that Maffettone was at work, it is logical that the letter be sent there, rather than to her home where she would not be able to retrieve the letter until a Saturday morning. However, her reaction on receipt of the letter, including the fact that she showed it to other employees, many of whom, according to Maffettone's undisputed testimony, expressed fears that their own benefits would be terminated, is a consequence for which Respondents must be held accountable. I do not accept Respondents' contention that Maffettone, with authority from the Employer, deliberately circulated the October 12 letter in order to instill a sense of fear in employees. As evidence is lacking that Maffettone is an agent of the Employer, I do not hold the Employer liable. Maffettone's reaction was one of anger and fear and moreover, it was quite natural that her coworkers would inquire about her apparent agitation, thus leading to the disclosure of the October 12 letter.

Respondents further contend that the General Counsel has failed to prove that, but for Maffettone's filing of the decertification petition, Tarantola would not have undertaken the actions he did. I find no merit in this argument.

In Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 989 (1982), the Board enunciated a test in all cases alleging violations of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act or violations of Section 8(a)(1) turning on employer motivation: (1) The General Counsel must make a prima facie showing sufficient to support an inference that the protected conduct was a motivating factor in an employer's decision; and (2) on such a showing, the burden of proof then shifts to the employer to demonstrate that even in the absence of the protected conduct, the same action would have been undertaken by him.

In subsequent decisions, the Board's analysis of Wright Line has been applied to cases involving the motivation of respondent unions under Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (B) and (2) of the Act. Plumbers Local 669 (American Fire Protection), 268 NLRB 515 (1984).

Based on my analysis of the evidence as detailed above, I conclude that the benefits enjoyed by Maffettone under the health and welfare plan would not have been suspended but for her filing of the decertification petition. I reject Respondents' argument that in two other instances employees' benefits had been suspended pending investigation of charges against them. The facts of those cases are unlike the facts of the instant case. Here, Maffettone was attempting to decertify the Union and Respondents' actions were in retaliation for her attempt.

Respondents further argue that Tarantola acted within the provisions of Section 302(c)(5) of the Labor Management Relations Act and Sections 404, 405, and 502 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA). I find both these laws inapplicable to the instant matter. In the first place, for the reasons as detailed above, there is insufficient evidence on which anyone could have accused Tarantola of any violation of any other law had no action been taken against Maffettone until such time as sufficient probative evidence had been obtained to establish her supervisory status, which, of course, never occurred. Furthermore, as detailed below, I find that Tarantola acted as president of Respondent Union, rather than as a trustee or administrator of Respondent Fund.

In conclusion, although standing by itself, each and every one of the specific points explained above may not be sufficient to warrant a conclusion that a violation occurred, the totality of the evidence has convinced me that Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act.

I. Relationship of Respondent Fund and Respondent Union

Having found that Tarantola violated the Act, the next questions are in what capacity did he violate the Act, and whether or not the Fund should be held liable for Tarantola's acts.

In Hospital Employees (Sinai Hospital), 248 NLRB 631, 633 (1980), the Board found that a union's collective-bargaining representative, who was also a trustee of a fund, collaborated with other fund trustees in denying an employer's request for certain specific information. The Board held that the union representative violated the Act as a trustee of the fund by his action, and thereby violated his "affirmative obligation to make a reasonable effort to obtain the information, or to investigate reasonable alternative means for obtaining it or to truthfully explain or document the reasons for its unavailability."

The Board's decision in Sinai preceded a Supreme Court decision in which the Court held that employer-designated trustees of a trust fund are not representatives of the employer "for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances" within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act. NLRB v. Amax Coal Co., 453 U.S. 322, 337 (1981).

In light of the Supreme Court decision in Amax, in a recent decision the Board modified its holding in Sinai and concluded that "our decision in Sinai continues to be valid only where a collective-bargaining representative demonstrates that it is in de facto control of a nominally independent trust fund." Food & Commercial Workers Local 1439 (Layman's Market), 268 NLRB 780, 781 (1984).

The General Counsel contends that the evidence is clear that Respondent Union made Respondent Fund its agent "when it had the Fund threaten Maffettone with civil suit, threatened to terminate her coverage, and terminated her benefit coverage because she filed a decertification petition."

Respondent contends that the record does not contain any direct evidence to support the General Counsel's position. Moreover, it argues, citing Amax, that Tarantola's actions as Fund administrator were not only lawful but mandatory under ERISA, which provides that trustees owe their primary loyalty not to those protected under Section 7 of the Act but to those defined as trust beneficiaries, namely, all the participants and their dependents. Respondent further argues that if the matter is dismissed against Respondent Fund, then Respondent Union also must be found innocent of any wrongdoing.

As related above, the facts are not in dispute. The four union-appointed trustees of the fund are Tarantola, Gutierrez, Johnson, and Ortiz, who are respectively the president, vice president, secretary-treasurer, and organizer of Respondent Union. The offices of the Fund are located in the same building and on the same floor as the offices of the Union. The union agents perform their duties as Fund trustees from their union offices. Although Tarantola attempted to demonstrate that he performed certain functions as a union officer, and other functions as the administrator of the Fund, I find it difficult to separate one function from the other.

As the General Counsel correctly pointed out in her brief, on hearing from the union agents of the possibility that Maffettone was a supervisor, Tarantola, without much deliberation or hesitation, immediately notified her that her coverage would no longer be in effect. As administrator of the Fund, there would be no reason for his hastiness in writing the letter without further evidence. Although Respondent Fund asserts that it was Tarantola's duty as Fund administrator to protect the beneficiaries of the Fund, it was also his duty as union official and collective-bargaining agent of Maffettone to protect her rights. As I find that there was no reason for the Fund to act as quickly as Tarantola did, I conclude that his action in writing to Maffettone was for the benefit of the Union and that, although he characterized his action as that of the Fund administrator, in reality it was an action of an agent of Respondent Union.

Another factor which militates against Respondents' claim that Tarantola was acting for the Fund was the fact that, before benefits of beneficiaries of the Fund could be terminated, the matter had to be considered and voted on by the entire board of trustees of the Fund. In this case, however, Tarantola made his decision unilaterally, without consultation with anyone. Although Respondent may contend that as administrator of the Fund Tarantola had the right to act as he did, again, I conclude that his actions cannot be attributed to the Fund but to Respondent Union whose principal interests Tarnatola represented at the time he committed his actions.

Accordingly, in applying the Board ruling enunciated in Food & Commercial Workers, supra, I am constrained to draw the conclusion that, as Tarantola had de facto control of the Fund, all actions by him, as related above, are imputed to Respondent Union. I further find that the board of trustees of Respondent Fund, which included the employer-appointed trustees, never was afforded an opportunity to either confirm or refute Tarantola's actions with respect to Maffettone. Therefore, I do not find, as the General Counsel contends, that the Fund was an agent of Respondent Union. Having found that the actions of Tarantola were performed in his capacity as the agent of Respondent Union, I shall recommend that the complaint against Respondent Fund be dismissed in its entirety.

IV. REPORT ON OBJECTIONS TO THE ELECTIONS

The record establishes that a petition for decertification of Respondent Union in Case 2–RD–1073 was filed on October 1. Pursuant to a Decision and Direction of Election issued by the Regional Director on February 10, 1983, an election was held on March 10, 1983. The tally of ballots revealed that 14 votes were cast for Respondent Union and 11 were cast against it, with 1 challenged ballot insufficient to affect the results of the election. A majority of the valid votes counted plus the challenged ballot were cast for Respondent Union. On March 17, 1983, the Employer filed timely objections to the conduct of the election. The objections, verbatim, were as follows:

> 1. On or about October 12, 1982, and continuously thereafter, the Amalgamated Jewelry, Diamond and Watchcase Workers' Union, Local 1-J, S.E.I.U., AFL-CIO [hereinafter the "Union"] by its officers, agents, representatives, and others acting in concert with them, restrained and coerced the decertification petitioner and other eligible voters and is restraining and coercing the decertification petitioner and other eligible voters in the exercise of their Section 7 rights, by: > a. threatening to terminate the decertification petitioner's welfare benefits;
>
>
> b. threatening to commence legal action against the decertification petitioner;
>
> c. terminating the decertification petitioner's welfare plan coverage on or about November 14, 1982;
>
> d. failing and refusing to pay claims submitted to the Union and its Welfare Fund in behalf of the decertification petitioner;
>
> e. creating an atmosphere of fear of retaliation among the eligible voters that any who opposed or voted against the Union would risk imminent loss of insurance coverage and other Welfare Fund benefits.
>
> The above-specified acts and other related actions or inaction by the Union within the critical preelection period so impaired voter free choice that the election should be set aside on these grounds alone and a new election should be conducted.
>
> 2. On or about October 12, 1982, and continuously thereafter, the Jewelry Manufacturers Association/Local 1-J Welfare Fund, a labor organization or, an agent of the Union, by its officers, agents, representatives and others acting in concert with them, restrained and coerced the decertification petitioner and other eligible voters and is restraining and coercing the decertification petitioner and other eligible voters in the exercise of their Section 7 rights by engaging in the acts specified in Count 1 (a-e) and other related actions or inactions. Such actions within the critical pre-election period so impaired voter free choice that the election should be set aside on these grounds alone and a new election should be conducted.
>
> 3. Threats of violence and retaliation against employees during the critical period so permeated the atmosphere of the election as to impair voter free choice and destroy the laboratory condiditions required in Board elections.
>
> 4. During the critical period preceding the election, the Union, by its officers, agents, representatives, and others acting in concert with them coerced and intimidated eligible voters by entering the Employer's premises and committing the following acts:
>
> a. threatening employees with loss of employment, if they voted against the Union;
>
> b. threatening employees with loss of wages, hours, benefits and working conditions, if they voted against the Union;
>
> c. coercing, harassing and intimidating workers at their work station;
>
> d. stopping production at the Employer's facility without notice to or permission by the Employer;
>
> e. disrupting and interfering with the Employer's business by engaging in boisterous harangues of employees in the middle of the production area.
>
> By this and other related conduct, the Union created fear of retaliation in the minds of voters, which impaired voter free choice and affected the results of the election
>
> 5. During the 24-hour period immediately preceding the election, the Union, by its officers, agents, and representatives made campaign speeches to assembled groups of employees on Company time. Peerless Plywood Co., 107 NLRB 427, 333 LRRM 1151 (1953).
>
> 6. By this and other conduct, the Union interfered with the election and destroyed the laboratory conditions required in Board elections.

An analysis of each objection reveals the following:

1(a) Threatening to Terminate the Decertification Petitioner's Welfare Benefits: The facts and conclusions relating to this specific objection have been detailed above under the section "Unfair Labor Practices." Having found that the conduct of the Union constituted a violation of the Act, a fortiori I find that the Employer has sustained its burden of proof with respect to this objection.

(b) Threatening to Commence Legal Action Against the Decertification Petitioner: Apparently, the Employer bases this objection on language in the third paragraph of the October 12 letter which states, "Therefore, we are commencing an investigation to determine whether a fraud has been perpetrated upon the Fund. If so, we may hold you and/or I. Shor liable for any claims paid to you during your period of non-bargaining unit status."

Although the General Counsel and the Employer have concluded that a threat of legal action was being made to Maffettone by Tarantola, I do not find that this conclusion is warranted. Nowhere in the letter is there any language stating that legal action would be commenced against Maffettone. To hold Maffettone or the Employer liable for any claims paid to her can be construed in many ways. Tarantola had options of collecting the moneys paid, if warranted, through various means, including threatening to expel Maffettone from the Union. Accordingly, I find that the Employer has not sustained its burden of proof with respect to this objection.

(c) Terminating the Decertification Petitioner's Welfare Plan Coverage about November 14, 1982: For the same reasons as stated in 1(a), I find that the Employer has sustained its burden of proof with respect to this objection.

(d) Failing and Refusing to Pay Claims Submitted to the Union and Its Welfare Fund in Behalf of the Decertification Petitioner: Tarantola testified, without contradiction, that no claims to the Fund were submitted by Maffettone between November 14 and December 20. Accordingly, I find that the Employer has not sustained its burden of proof with respect to this objection.

(e) Creating an Atmosphere of Fear of Retaliation among the Eligible Voters that Any Who Opposed or Voted Against the Union Would Risk Imminent Loss of Insurance Coverage and Other Welfare Fund Benefits: The undisputed evidence as submitted by Maffettone that fellow employees reacted in fear on reading the letter of October 12, as detailed above in the unfair labor practices section of this decision, supports the objection. Accordingly, I find that the Employer has sustained its burden of proof with respect to this objection.

2. The objection contained in paragraph 2 is substantially identical to the objection raised in paragraph 1. Thus, for the reasons stated above, I find that the Petitioner has sustained its burden of proof with respect to this objection.

3. Threats of Violence and Retaliation Against Employees During the Critical Period so Permeated the Atmosphere of the Election as to Impair Voter Free Choice and Destroy the Laboratory Conditions Required in Board Elections: I find no evidence in the record of any threats or violence against any employees by agents of the Union. Despite the hostility that Respondent Union may have had and demonstrated against Maffettone, I find no evidence that threats or actual violence were committed by any agent of Respondent Union. Accordingly, I find that the Employer has not sustained its burden of proof with respect to this objection.

4(a), (b), and (c). To support these objections, Respondent relied on the testimony of Maffettone who stated that, on March 8, 2 days prior to the scheduled election, union agents Ortiz and Johnson spoke with employees, including Maffettone, at their work stations during working hours. Ortiz warned employees that if they voted the Union out they would be out of a job the day after. Maffettone testified that Johnson yelled and screamed at her that "if we vote the Union on Thursday that we'd all be out of jobs on Friday, and he just was screaming at me and I don't remember everything he said." As neither Johnson nor Ortiz disputed that these statements were made by them, I find that the Employer has sustained its burden of proof with respect to these objections.

4(d) and (e). The undisputed evidence revealed that during the entire period that the collective-bargaining agreement was in effect, union agents were able to enter the Employer's premises and speak to employees at will. Nothing is contained in the record which establishes that specific permission from the Employer was necessary prior to their speaking to employees. No evidence was adduced that the union agents, either themselves or through other employees, stopped production and interfered with the Employer's business during their visits to the facility. Accordingly, I find that the Employer has not sustained its burden of proof with respect to 4(d) and (e).

5. Violation of the Peerless Plywood Rule: The Employer contends that on the morning of the election, March 10, 1983, Ortiz entered the Employer's premises and made campaign speeches lasting 5 to 15 minutes apiece to assembled groups of unit employees on company time and less than 1 hour before this scheduled election.

The evidence on which the Employer relied to support its objection is the testimony of Maffettone who asserted that on the morning of the election she observed Ortiz speaking to two unit employees from 5 to 15 minutes. She did not hear what he said. She then testified that she went to the receiving and shipping area in the back of the facility, remaining there about 10 minutes. No evidence was offered to indicate what, if anything, took place in the shipping and receiving area.

Under Peerless Plywood Co., 107 NLRB 427, 429 (1953), the Board established a rule banning campaign speeches of any kind by either unions or employers to assembled groups of employees on company time and property within 24 hours before a scheduled election. A violation of this rule automatically is grounds for setting aside the election. I do not conclude that a union agent speaking to two employees at the employer's premises approximately 45 minutes prior to the opening of the polls, in which no evidence was obtained as to what was said to these employees, constitutes a violation of the Peerless Plywood rule. Accordingly, I find that the Employer has not sustained its burden of proof with respect to this objection. Hudson Oxygen Therapy Co., 268 NLRB 1374 (1984).

6. Through the Conduct of Its Agents, the Union Interfered with the Election and Destroyed the Laboratory Conditions Required in Board Elections: Although there is insufficient evidence to sustain some of the objections raised by the Employer, I find that other objections do have merit. Accordingly, I recommend that the election held in Case 2–RD–1073 on March 10, 1983, be set aside and a second election be conducted following an appropriate posting period.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The I. Shor Company, Inc. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Respondent Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By threatening to terminate the insurance benefits of Joan Maffettone because she filed a decertification petition with the Board, Respondent Union has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

4. By suspending the insurance benefits of Joan Maffettone between November 14 and December 20, 1982, Respondent has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

6. Respondent Union's unlawful conduct interfered with the representation election conducted on March 10, 1983.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action, as provided for in the Order, to remedy and remove the effects of the unfair labor practices and to effectuate the purposes of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[4]

ORDER

The Respondent, Amalgamated Jewelry, Diamond and Watchcase Workers Union, Local 1-J, SEIU, AFL-CIO, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Threatening to terminate insurance benefits of Joan Maffettone or any other employee of the I. Shor Company, Inc. for filing a decertification petition with the Board, or engaging in any other protected concerted activity.

(b) Suspending the insurance benefits of Joan Maffettone, or any other employee of the I. Shor Company, Inc., for filing a decertification petition with the Board, or engaging in any other protected concerted activity.

(c) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees of the I. Shor Company, Inc. in the exercise of rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act, except to the extent that such rights may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment as authorized by Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Make whole Joan Maffettone for any loss of benefits suffered by her and for any expenses incurred by her as a result of the unfair labor practices of Respondent Union. Said pecuniary loss, with interest, is to be determined by the Regional Director for Region 2.

(b) Post copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" in conspicuous places in its business offices and meeting halls, and all places where notices to members are customarily posted.[5] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 2, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Local 1-J to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint be dismissed insofar as it alleges unfair labor practices committed by Jewelry Manufacturers Association, Local 1-J Welfare Fund.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the election in Case 2-RD-1073 conducted on March 10, 1983, is set aside and that, after an appropriate posting period, a new election be scheduled by the Regional Director for Region 2.

[4] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[5] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES AND MEMBERS
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT threaten to terminate insurance benefits of Joan Maffettone, or any other employee of the I. Shor Company, Inc., for filing a decertification petition with the National Labor Relations Board or engaging in any other protected concerted activity.

WE WILL NOT suspend insurance benefits of Joan Maffettone, or any other employee of the I. Shor Company, Inc., for filing a decertification petition with the National Labor Relations Board or engaging in any other protected concerted activity.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner restrain or coerce employees of the I. Shor Company, Inc., in the excercise of rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act, except to the extent that such rights may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment as authorized by Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

WE WILL make whole Joan Maffettone for any loss of benefits suffered by her and for all expenses incurred by her as a result of our unfair labor practices.

AMALGAMATED JEWELRY, DIAMOND AND WATCHCASE WORKERS UNION, LOCAL 1-J, SEIU, AFL-CIO

Continental Composition, Inc. and Linda Dziwak, Petitioner and Chicago Typographical Union, No. 16. Case 13–RD–1400

14 December 1984

DECISION AND CERTIFICATION OF RESULTS OF ELECTION

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND HUNTER

The National Labor Relations Board, by a three-member panel, has considered an objection to an election held 22 March 1984 and the Regional Director's report recommending disposition of it. The election was conducted pursuant to a Stipulated Election Agreement. The tally of ballots shows none for and 11 against the Union, with no challenged ballots.

The Board has reviewed the record in light of the exceptions and briefs, has adopted the Regional Director's findings[1] and recommendations, and finds that a certification of results of election should be issued.

CERTIFICATION OF RESULTS OF ELECTION

IT IS CERTIFIED that a majority of the valid ballots have not been cast for Chicago Typographical Union, No. 16, and that it is not the exclusive representative of these bargaining unit employees.

MEMBER HUNTER, dissenting.

Contrary to my colleagues in the majority, I would remand the instant case to the Regional Director for a hearing on the issue of whether, as alleged, Regional Office personnel advised bargaining unit employees that they were not required to abide by the union-security clause of the collective-bargaining agreement between the Union and the Employer.[1] In my view, this allegation raises a substantial and material issue of fact which should be resolved in a hearing.

The majority dismisses the allegations concerning Regional Office communications with employees on the grounds that the Board, considering this allegation in a representation proceeding, presumes the parties' union-security clause valid unless it has been found invalid in an unfair labor practice proceeding and that in Typographical Union 16 (Continental Composition), 268 NLRB 347 (1983), the Board found the union-security clause in question to be unlawful because it did not provide existing employees with the statutory 30-day grace period. The majority's reliance on Typographical Union is misplaced. In that case, the Board held that the Union violated Section 8(b)(2) of the Act by enforcing the union-security clause in the collective-bargaining agreement—the same bargaining agreement involved in the instant case—by requiring all bargaining unit employees who were on the payroll as of the date on which the contract was ratified to be members of the Union on that date. The Board found that this provision violated the requirement of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act that employees must be given a 30-day grace period before being required to join a union pursuant to a union-security clause and ordered the Union, inter alia, to cease and desist from entering into, maintaining, or enforcing such a provision. The Board's decision did not address the more general provision of the parties' union-security clause requiring employees to join the union by the 45th day following commencement of employment. Indeed, there would appear to be no basis for invalidating that portion of the parties' agreement since it provides for more than the statutorily required minimum 30-day grace period. Consequently, there is no basis for inferring, as the majority implicitly does, that whatever Regional Office personnel may have said to employees about not being required to join the Union or pay dues in accordance with the union-security clause such statements were not objectionable because the clause had been invalidated.[2] Depending

[1] Two weeks after filing its objection, the Union filed a position statement which alleged that during the critical period "one or more Board representatives provided information and advice" to unit employees to the effect that they should not comply with the union-security clause until after the election. The Regional Director did not address this allegation. When considering this allegation in a representation proceeding, the Board presumes the union-security clause to be valid unless found otherwise in an unfair labor practice proceeding. In Typographical Union 16 (Continental Composition), 268 NLRB 347 (1983), the Board found that the union-security clause involved here violated Sec. 8(b)(2) of the Act because it did not provide present employees with the statutory 30-day grace period. The Union does not proffer evidence showing that the compliance stage of the earlier proceeding was completed before the election. We therefore find that the parties did not have a valid union-security clause in effect during the critical period. Consequently, we find no merit in the Union's allegation.

[1] Although this allegation was not specifically raised in an objection it should have been addressed by the Regional Director in his report, and is properly addressed by the Board on review, since it is a matter which came to the attention of the Regional Director during the course of his investigation of the objections and which raises an issue of possible election taint. See Thomas Products Co., 169 NLRB 706 (1968); American Safety Equipment Corp., 234 NLRB 501 (1978).

[2] Moreover, in view of the fact that the Board's decision in Chicago Typographical Union issued more than 100 days prior to the election, it is certainly possible that the Union had completed compliance with the Board's Order not only before the election but also before any comments by Board personnel to employees concerning their union-security obligations were made. This is another reason why I believe a hearing should be held in the present case. I cannot agree with the majority's implicit requirement that the Union was obligated to come forth with evidence as to whether or not compliance with the Board Order in the unfair labor practice proceeding had been completed prior to the election. This is especially so since completion of compliance is particularly within the on what the Regional Office personnel said to employees regarding their obligations under the clause, and the circumstances under which such statements were made, such statements may have affected employees' free choice in the election. For this reason, an evidentiary hearing should be held to determine what, if anything, Board personnel said to bargaining unit employees during the critical period concerning the employees' obligations under the union-security clause. Accordingly, I dissent.

Continued

knowledge of the Board's Regional Office personnel. Thus, requiring an objecting party in a representation case to come forward with such evidence as a precondition of obtaining a hearing on its objections is to require it to inform the Regional Office (and/or the Board) of the status of the Region's own proceedings in a related unfair labor practice case. In my view, an objecting party should not be required to present such evidence in order to obtain a hearing, so long as other requirements for ordering a hearing are met.

Glade Springs, Inc. and Carol McLaughlin and Mary Mayes and Shirley Walton and Lucy Ramieh and Ethel Edwards and Lilli Toney and Rebecca Gilkerson and Deborah Ledger and Emma Jane Genoble and Margaret Flynn. Cases 9-CA-18481, 9-CA-18761-1, 9-CA-18761-2, 9-CA-18761-3, 9-CA-18761-4, 9-CA-18975-1, 9-CA-18975-2, 9-CA-18975-3, 9-CA-18975-4, and 9-CA-18975-5

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND DENNIS

On 2 August 1983 Administrative Law Judge Thomas A. Ricci issued the attached decision. The Respondent and Charging Party Carol McLaughlin each filed exceptions and a supporting brief. The General Counsel filed a brief in answer to the Respondent's exceptions and in support of the judge's decision.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings,[1] findings,[2] and conclusions, as modified below, and to adopt the recommended Order as modified.

1. As a partial ground for finding that the Respondent unlawfully refused to recall employee Lucy Ramieh, the judge surmised that the Respondent recalled her during the recess in the hearing merely to reduce its backpay liability. The Board has previously ruled that a respondent's interim remedial actions are not conclusive proof of an unlawful motivation.[3] Accordingly, we rely only on those sections of the judge's analysis which do not rest on his inference regarding the timing of the Respondent's recall of Ramieh.

2. The judge properly found that the Respondent unlawfully failed to recall nine employees on their unconditional offers to return. However, he found that the violation commenced 5 days after the date of the Respondent's receipt of each offer. We disagree with this finding and amend the remedy to mark the commencement of backpay as the date of the Respondent's receipt of each offer.[4] Because the record does not disclose the dates the Respondent received the offer letters, we leave that determination to the compliance proceedings. This includes the dates of the Respondent's receipt of Edwards' and Walton's offers, which the judge, without record support, described as the date the letters were sent.

3. In determining whether employee Lilli Toney had engaged in picket line misconduct sufficiently egregious to deprive her of her right to recall as an economic striker who had made an unconditional offer to return, the judge considered the testimony of three witnesses. One employee witness testified that Toney along with several other employees yelled abusive and obscene language. Another witness testified that during the picketing Toney came up to him and threatened to kick his wife, an employee, if she continued to come to work and threw coke on him twice. Toney denied all the alleged misconduct, explaining that she had accidentally spilled coke on the second witness. The judge declined to make a credibility resolution and considered that the picket line misconduct was "halfway" between the two versions. He then found all that emerges is "the usual picture of disagreement that by the nature of things characterizes all enthusiastic picket lines." He concluded that the Respondent's attempt to single out one picket from an animated group did not justify the refusal to reinstate the picket. On this basis, he found that the Respondent's refusal to recall Toney violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

The judge's failure to resolve the conflicting testimony concerning Toney's misconduct precludes us from determining whether any misconduct Toney engaged in was sufficiently egregious to deprive her of the protection of the Act. In addition, Clear Pine Mouldings,[5] in which the Board recently revised its standard for determining where strike misconduct justifies denying an employee's reinstatement, issued subsequent to the judge's decision.[6] We therefore sever this portion of the pro-

[1] The Respondent and Charging Party Carol McLaughlin have excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[2] In finding violations concerning the reinstatement of employees Ethel Edwards and Shirley Walton, the judge relied on Laidlaw Corp., a case for which he gave no citation. The citation for that case is 171 NLRB 1366 (1968), enfd. 414 F.2d 99 (7th Cir. 1969), cert. denied 397 U.S. 920 (1970).

The judge made the overly broad statement that economic strikers are entitled to recall on demand. As the judge correctly acknowledged elsewhere in his decision, this right is subject to the limitations of an unconditional offer to return to work by the striking employee and the absence of replacements or other legitimate and substantial business considerations. E.g., Laidlaw Corp., above.

[3] See, e.g., Allied Maintenance Corp., 261 NLRB 1145, 1147 fn. 2 (1982).

[4] See, e.g., Cutting, Inc., 255 NLRB 534, 544 (1981), enf. denied on other grounds 701 F.2d 659 (7th Cir. 1983); Routh Packing Co., 247 NLRB 274, 281-282 (1980). See also Adams Book Co., 203 NLRB 761, 769 fn. 39 (1973) (date of offer by letter is date it is received).

[5] 268 NLRB 1044 (1984).

[6] That standard is to be applied retroactively. Id. at fn. 14.

ceeding and remand it to the judge to make definite credibility findings on the alleged strike misconduct[7] and to apply the revised standard of Clear Pine Moldings.

4. The judge similarly found the alleged picket line misconduct of employee Mary Mayes was not sufficiently egregious to deprive her of her right to recall as an economic striker who had made an unconditional offer to return. In making this finding the judge referred to the testimony of employee Rebecca Ramsey that on 1 June many pickets, including Mayes, yelled at her on her way to work and threatened her with the loss of her job, and to the admissions by strikers that they had engaged in rough talk on the picket line. Relying on this evidence and his findings that Mayes was only one of many participants and that a strike is not "a tea party," the judge concluded that Mayes' conduct did not justify the Respondent's refusal to recall her. He therefore found that the Respondent's refusal to recall Mayes violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

However, the judge neither credited nor discredited the further testimony of Ramsey that on another date, in the midst of similar shouting, four employees blocked her egress to work at the direction of Mayes, which resulted in Ramsey calling into the plant for assistance in making her way into the facility.

The judge's failure to make specific findings on this testimony deprives us of the necessary factual basis on which to decide whether any misconduct Mayes engaged in was sufficiently egregious to deprive her of the protection of the Act. We therefore also sever this portion of the proceeding and remand it to the judge to make definite credibility findings on all the alleged strike misconduct by Mayes and to apply the revised standard of Clear Pine Mouldings.[8]

5. The judge recommended that a broad cease-and-desist order issue against the Respondent. However, we have considered this case in light of the standard set forth in Hickmott Foods, 242 NLRB 1357 (1979), and have concluded that a narrow cease-and-desist order is appropriate. We shall modify the judge's recommended Order accordingly.[9]

A corrected Order and notice have been included to conform with the judge's recommended remedy, as amended.

AMENDED CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Conclusions of Law shall be amended as follows:

Substitute the following for Conclusion of Law 1:

"1. By refusing to reinstate economic strikers Ethel Edwards, Shirley Walton, and Lucy Ramieh, on receipt of each employee's unconditional offer to return to work, by reducing the hourly pay of Ramieh, and by changing the conditions of employment for Emma Genoble, Rebecca Gilkerson, Debbie Ledger, and Margaret Flynn, including by reducing their hourly pay, because they had engaged in protected concerted activity, the Respondent has violated and is violating Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act."

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, Glade Springs, Inc., Daniels, West Virginia, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to reinstate economic strikers on unconditional offers to return to work.

(b) Refusing to credit recalled economic strikers with seniority for prior service.

(c) Reducing the pay scale of recalled economic strikers because they have engaged in protected concerted activities.

(d) Threatening to close its business in retaliation for the union activities of its employees.

(e) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Make whole Ethel Edwards, Shirley Walton, and Lucy Ramieh for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, with interest thereon to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[10]

(b) Credit economic strikers with seniority for prior service after they have been recalled to work.

(c) Pay Emma Genoble, Rebecca Gilkerson, Debbie Ledger, and Margaret Flynn for any vacation benefits and medical insurance benefits, includ-

[7] See, e.g., Deauville Hotel, 256 NLRB 561 (1981).

[8] Member Zimmerman disagrees with his colleagues that it is necessary to remand the issue of the alleged strike misconduct of employee Mary Mayes. Even crediting the testimony described above which the judge did not mention, he does not consider that Mayes' conduct on the picket line was sufficiently egregious to deprive her of her right to reinstatement. In reaching this conclusion, he has applied the standard for strike misconduct expressed in his concurrence in Clear Pine Mouldings, above.

[9] Member Zimmerman agrees with the judge's recommendation that a broad cease-and-desist order should issue.

[10] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

ing the cost of any premium payments made in order to retain equivalent insurance coverage, to which they would have been entitled but for the Respondent's discrimination against them, plus interest.

(d) Restore the pay scale of all reinstated strikers whose pay has been reduced because of their strike activities to the scale which they were being paid before the strike, and make each of them whole for any loss of pay resulting from the interim reductions in their wage scale, plus interest.

(e) Post at its facility in Daniels, West Virginia, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[11] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Case 9–CA–18975–1 which contains the allegations that the Respondent unlawfully failed to recall employees Lilli Toney and Mary Mayes be severed from the instant proceeding and that proceeding be remanded to Judge Thomas A. Ricci for the purpose of making credibility resolutions on all testimony concerning the alleged picket line misconduct by these employees and recommendations as to whether the conduct they each engaged in was such as to require the forfeiture of either's rights as an economic striker who had made an unconditional offer to return to work. In making this recommendation, the judge is further ordered to apply the standard for strike misconduct recently enunciated in Clear Pine Mouldings, 268 NLRB 1044 (1984).

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the judge shall prepare and serve on the parties a supplemental decision setting forth the resolution of such credibility issues and findings and conclusions with respect thereto. Copies of such supplemental decision shall be served on all the parties, after which the provisions of Section 102.46 of the Board's Rules shall be applicable.

[11] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to reinstate economic strikers on unconditional offers to return to work.

WE WILL NOT refuse to credit recalled economic strikers with the seniority previously enjoyed.

WE WILL NOT reduce the pay scale of recalled economic strikers because they have engaged in protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT threaten to close the business down in retaliation for the union activities of other employees.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL credit returned economic strikers with seniority acquired before the strike.

WE WILL make whole Ethel Edwards, Shirley Walton, and Lucy Ramieh for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, plus interest.

WE WILL pay Emma Genoble, Rebecca Gilkerson, Debbie Ledger, and Margaret Flynn for any vacation benefits and medical insurance benefits, including the cost of any premium payments made in order to retain equivalent insurance coverage, to which they would have been entitled except for our discrimination against them, plus interest.

WE WILL restore the pay scale of all reinstated strikers whose pay has been reduced because of their union activity to the scale to which they were being paid before the strike, and WE WILL make them whole for any loss of pay resulting from the interim reduction of their pay scale, plus interest.

GLADE SPRINGS, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

THOMAS A. RICCI, Administrative Law Judge. A hearing in this proceeding was held at Beckley, West Virginia, on February 28 and 29, March 1, and May 24 and 25, 1983, on complaint of the General Counsel against Glade Springs, Inc. (the Respondent or the Company). The complaint issued on January 12, 1983, based on separate charges filed on various dates between June 29, 1982, and December 17, 1982, by 10 individuals as Charging Parties. A number of issues are presented: (1) Was a prounion activist discharged in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act, or was she in fact a supervisor who could be dismissed with impunity? (2) Was the strike which took place at the time of the events an unfair labor practice strike, or was it an economic one? (3) Was the Respondent justified in denying reinstatement to two strikers who offered to return to work on the ground that they had engaged in improper picket line activity? (4) And, were seven other strikers who offered to return to work illegally denied "full" reinstatement, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act? Briefs were filed by the General Counsel and the Respondent.

On the entire record and from my observation of the witnesses, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE RESPONDENT

This Company, a Delaware corporation, is engaged in the operation of a resort in Daniels, West Virginia, providing food, beverages, lodgings, and recreational activities for guests. During the 12-month period preceding issuance of the complaint, in the course of its business it derived gross revenues in excess of $500,000. During the same period it purchased and received products and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from out-of-state sources. I find that the Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

I find that Hotel and Restaurant Employees' Local Union No. 863, affiliated with Hotel and Restaurant Employees' and Bartenders International Union, AFL–CIO (the Union), is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Case in Brief

At its resort location in West Virginia the Respondent employs people in many categories. The only ones involved in this case worked in the food and beverage department, where they were cooks, food and cocktail waitresses, and cleanup people, a total of about 30 employees. During May 1982 a move towards joining the Union developed among them; Carol McLaughlin, the head cook, was among the principal activists toward that end. She called the Union's business agent, brought cards to the work location, and assisted in obtaining a number of signatures to authorization cards. She was discharged on May 25. The complaint alleges McLaughlin was discharged because of her union activities, and that thereby the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

On May 29 the employees of the food and beverage department struck, and many of them quit work and went on the picket line. A number of the strikers testified that their reason for striking was twofold: to protest many undesirable conditions of employment and to protest McLaughlin's discharge. If in fact the discharge of the head cook was an unfair labor practice, it follows the work stoppage was an unfair labor practice strike. If her dismissal was lawful, the strike was a purely economic one. Roma Baking Co., 263 NLRB 24 (1982).

The Company hired a number of replacements and work went on as usual. Three months later the picketing ceased and nine of the strikers offered to return to work. Two were refused employment on the grounds that they had misbehaved toward employees who came to work during the strike. Some were reinstated, but paid a lesser hourly rate than they had been earning before the strike, and some were taken back as new employees and denied their previously acquired seniority.

B. The Discharge of McLaughlin

I find that McLaughlin was a supervisor within the meaning of the Act when she was discharged, and that therefore by releasing her the Respondent did not commit an unfair labor practice. Were I to find she was not a supervisor, as contended by the General Counsel, I would dismiss the complaint as to her in any event because the record as a whole fails to prove a prima facie case against the Company. When discharged she was told it was because of listed failings on her part at work. It is true she had never been warned about delinquencies, either orally or in writing, so that the sudden dismissal would appear suspect. But it is also a fact, as McLaughlin admitted, no one in management had ever told her she might be fired because of her union activities, or threatened her in any manner. I am not sure why she was fired, although a possible explanation does appear. A man named DuPriest had been hired shortly before, and put in charge of the department, over her. The Company probably did not need her any more. Moreover, when, in August, McLaughlin filed a charge against the Company with the West Virginia Department of Human Resources, she told the investigator that the reason for her dismissal was "because of sex . . . I have been replaced by a male who was hired one week prior to my termination." But whatever this aspect of the case, dismissal here rests solely on the fact she was a supervisor.

(1) McLaughlin was the only salaried employee in the department, and the only one who did not punch a timecard. During February 1982, her annual salary was $16,800. The next highest below her was the bartender, who received a salary of $9600. All the rest were hourly paid, the highest getting $4.50 per hour. In March the Respondent gave almost all employees in the department a raise. The resulting picture shows McLaughlin being paid $26,000 per year, the bartender $10,000 and, again, the highest hourly paid employee receiving $6.76 per hour.

(2) With so many employees hourly paid there were many times when errors appeared on their timecards. Joyce Meadows, the personnel director, testified only McLaughlin was authorized to correct the timecards, always placing her initials on the cards. McLaughlin, and a number of employees testifying for the General Counsel, kept saying other ordinary employees were also authorized to initial timecards to correct errors of fellow employees and in fact did so. The Respondent placed into evidence 90 separate timecards, covering a period of 3 or 4 months, each showing McLaughlin's initials authorizing corrections. It was then stipulated that, pursuant to subpoena, the Respondent had produced for the General Counsel's inspection all the timecards for the period February 1982 to the day of McLaughlin's discharge. None was offered into evidence by the General Counsel. This means that there are no timecards showing any other person having corrected errors. The General Counsel's witnesses were not telling the truth on this point.

(3) The Respondent makes it a practice to evaluate the employees periodically—annually, after the probationary period, etc. The form it uses is a four-page document listing 14 separate aspects of employment, such as quantity of work, attendance, dependability, creativity, etc. Seven such evaluations were placed in evidence, all dated during March 1982. Each of them shows McLaughlin's signature at the end, with the word "supervisor" written in her hand as to the "title" she held. Immediately below her signature appears the typed statement, "A copy of this Report has been given to me and has been discussed with me," followed by the employee's signature. On their face these exhibits constitute evidence that McLaughlin was authorized and in fact did evaluate all the employees, proof positive of her supervisory status.

She testified that when Meadows gave her those forms for evaluation of all the employees in her department, the personnel director told her to have each employee evaluate herself, or himself, and a number of the employees who testified as to this very form received in evidence said they put the check marks on the various appraisals themselves, i.e., that they evaluated themselves! Meadows, to the contrary, said it was McLaughlin's duty to evaluate the employees, and that McLaughlin in fact did so, because she was the supervisor.

As to who made these evaluations, resolution of credibility is easy. On every one of the exhibits the 14 checks—one for each of the various aspects of the job—are in red ink. McLaughlin's signature and the words "supervisor, kitchen and dining" are also in red ink. At the bottom of each form the signature of the employee appears in blue ink. Am I to believe that in each instance the employee borrowed McLaughlin's pen to place the appropriate checks, and then returned it to her and signed her own name in blue with her own pen? Or am I to believe each did whatever she did with a single pen? And why should any employer have the employee evaluate herself? McLaughlin even said she signed these forms only because Meadows asked her to do so. She even referred to other forms received in evidence, disciplinary and layoff forms—which she signed, as supervisor—by saying she only signed them because Meadows told her to. Asked why did Meadows tell her to do that, she answered: "Because I was the longest there and knew the people."[1] But this is exactly why supervisors evaluate their subordinates.

[1] All the forms in which McLaughlin evaluated employees received in evidence are dated March 1982. The first contact with the Union was made in May, as McLaughlin herself testified. With this, the General Counsel's assertion, in her brief, that all the evaluation forms were filled in by the supervisor "to be used at the trial herein" merits no comment.

(4) Repeatedly the witnesses on both sides spoke in conclusionary terms, that McLaughlin was or was not a supervisor. These statements are not evidence to me. But time and again, over the years, the General Counsel has relied on formal documents to prove supervisory status. There was another document placed in evidence that puts to rest this question here with finality. As set out above, McLaughlin, 3 months after her discharge, and after she had filed her charge with the Board, signed an affidavit for the Department of Human Resources in West Virginia. The body of the affidavit, its very essence, reads as follows:

> 1. On May 25, 1982, I was terminated from my employment as Supervisor of Food Services.
>
> 2. Bob McLean, president, and Ron DuPriest, Food and Beverages Manager, alleged that I handled my supervisory responsibilities poorly and that I was unable to control money.
>
> 3. I believe that I have been discriminated against because of sex, female, in that:
>
> (a) I have been replaced by a male who was hired one week prior to my termination.

Called as a witness in rebuttal at the close of the hearing, McLaughlin said, under oath, that when she swore to the truth of the affidavit the Human Resources investigator prepared during her interview, all that was set out on the affidavit now was not written on it at all, that the document consisted of no more than the formal, printed parts. Did the investigator have McLaughlin sign a blank affidavit so she could run to the Respondent and obtain a statement that would hurt McLaughlin in a proceeding that had nothing to do with the investigation she was interested in at all? Without further comment, in my judgment McLaughlin stands as a completely discredited witness in this case wherever she is contradicted by any other witness.

Because McLaughlin was a supervisor I shall recommend dismissal of the complaint as to her.

C. The Returning Strikers

It was an economic strike. In August nine of the strikers made unequivocal offers to return to work. Seven of them were accepted as new employees and under conditions of employment different from the past and to the material disadvantage of all seven. Two who offered to return were refused outright.

1. Mayes

Mary Mayes, a striker, wrote to Baker, the general manager, on August 5, offering to return to work unconditionally. She never received an answer from anyone in the Company. The only witness who spoke about the Respondent's failure to reinstate Mayes at the hearing was Meadows, who worked in the office. She admitted she was not the one who made the decision not to rehire Mayes, but merely said what she thought was the reason for Baker's refusal to rehire that girl. On this record, therefore, it can well be said the Respondent has not come forth with any explanation for its failure to reinstate the striker, to say nothing of not having given her an articulated reason at the time of the act. With the law being, clearly, that a returning economic striker is entitled to reinstatement on demand, this means the prima facie case in support of the unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint as to this woman has not really been rebutted.

The Respondent called Brenda Black, an employee who had signed a union card but did not join in the strike. She testified that sometime in June or July she met Mayes in the parking lot of a fast food place some distance from the plant, where Mayes asked her why she was crossing the picket line. When Black answered it was because she needed the money, still according to her testimony, Mayes patted her purse on the seat next to her and said she had a gun and was not afraid to use it. It was this threat of physical violence that, the Respondent now contends, justified its refusal to rehire Mayes.

Mayes' version of that talk between the two at the parking lot is that Black asked her why she was being harassed when crossing the picket line, and that Mayes' answer was they were not picking on Black but simply wanted to know why she had "reneged" after signing a card for the Union. Mayes said she never owned a gun and denied ever having threatened the other woman at all. I credit her against Black. There were young women in Mayes' car, her daughter and another girl. Black said she thought she had told DuPriest, the kitchen manager, about the incident, but DuPriest was not called as a witness. Black also said she herself used to carry a gun, and "it didn't upset me that much." She closed by saying she really did not recall who she told about the incident within the Company.

Another witness, Rebecca Ramsey, testified that she worked at the start of the strike. She said that on June 1 a "bunch" of pickets were "screaming and hollering at me and threatening me," "calling me names and stuff," and saying that when they returned she would not have a job. As she continued the witness listed no less than four different strikers by name as having participated in whatever happened to her that day. An example of her generalized testimony: "I think it happened the very next day, like some—like they'd go weeks without saying nothing to you and then there all of a sudden they would just start saying stuff for a couple of days and then they would stop again."

The strikers who testified admitted there was rough talk on the picket line, but then, as the Board has often said, industrial strife of this kind is not to be likened to a tea party. Machinists District 34 (Wolf Machine Co.), 254 NLRB 282, 286 (1981).

I find the Respondent has not come forth with sufficient evidence of wrongdoing on the part of Mary Mayes to justify its refusal to reinstate her when she asked to abandon the strike, and that therefore by denying her reinstatement it violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

2. Lilli Toney

Like Mayes, Toney wrote a letter to the Company on September 21, 1982, offering to return unconditionally. She never received an answer. It was only at the hearing that the Respondent first advanced, as a reason for not reinstating her, that she had misconducted herself during the strike. Again, insofar as this record shows, it was Baker who made that decision. At one point in her testimony Meadows, for the Respondent, said, "I guess it was a mutual decision" not to rehire Mayes and Toney. But there is also the following:

> Q. Did you decide not to hire her?
>
> A. Well, no. Not actually, no.
>
> Q. Well, how do you know why—who decided not to take her?
>
> A. I was in the . . . Bud Baker's office, the general manager, when the decision was made.

What this means is that it is questionable, at the outset, whether the Respondent really gave any thought to Toney's or Mayes' behavior on the picket line as a reason for not returning them to work. Baker was a witness for the Respondent in this case, but never once referred to the issue as to the refusal to rehire either Mayes or Toney.

In any event, there is more testimony by the witness Ramsey, who chose to work during the strike. She said that on June 1, at the start of the strike, when she arrived at the plant Toney "was yelling at me 'Fuck you, bitch.' And just calling me names and stuff like that." Ramsey several times described the incident, and some others like it, each time repeating herself generally and painting a picture of bad words exchanged back and forth, with people "yelling and screaming" on the picket line. She said there were many other pickets involved, doing the same thing. It was the same old story of people not liking one another when one group chooses to improve conditions of employment by striking and the other chooses not to do so. It is in the nature of human beings to become very vociferous, even dirty mouthed, at such times. But such course of conduct, to be expected, is hardly reason for denying reinstatement to a returning striker.

Another witness for the Respondent, Dennis Blackwell, used to drive his wife and another woman to work across the picket line. He spoke of an incident when he was bothered by the pickets:

> Q. Did anything unusual happen when you were transporting them to work?
>
> A. Yes, sir, a bit of an altercation when we came in . . . . In a nutshell, as we came off 3 strikers strung themselves across the mouth of Glade out by the highway and in order to get by them, the strikers, with the car, I had to nudge them aside with the Toyota. Somebody kicked the back of the car as we were driving through. I didn't see who it was. I just heard the thumps.

Blackwell continued that when he was leaving the premises:

> I went through the guard house. I came out to the highway. And Lilli Toney, a big, heavy blond girl, ran over and I was waiting for traffic. I couldn't get > out. So I stopped there. And she said . . . "we're going to kick your wife's ass when we catch her." And I looked away for a second. I looked back and she threw some fluid in my face out of a can, pop or beer . . . . And I said, "Listen, Lilli." And she threw something in my face again. I turned off the car and got out of the car. I started to walk over to her and tell her not to threaten my wife, and the next thing I knew I was surrounded by the strikers. The strikers were screaming and yelling and for just a few minutes I tried to talk to them . . . and all of a sudden somebody pushed me from behind. Put their hands in the small of my back and pushed me. I turned around to see who it was and it was just more faces. I said, . . . I better get back in my car. I walked back to my car. Nobody touched me. They were all just screaming and yelling . . . I waited for traffic to clear and all of a sudden I heard a loud thump on the back of my car. I leaned out of my window and looked back. I would see over my left shoulder and a couple of people had sticks, clubs if you want to call them that, with knobs on one end and sharp stakes on the other.

The witness' testimony continued in this general fashion, and then he started to speak of another person, one Robert Flynn, who he said struck his car, put a crease in it, etc. His testimony ended at that point. Before closing, he explained that he was held up "probably" about a minute "so just very slowly in first gear pushed them aside with my car."

> Q. And this time you stopped the car because the traffic was built up?
>
> A. Correct.

Blackwell closed his testimony by first saying he told Baker about what happened, and then saying "I don't know" whether he told him or not.

Toney, called to rebut all this, later recalled seeing Blackwell drive his car into work once or twice, but denied ever touching his car, or telling him she would kick his wife. She did say she once approached his car to tell him not to bring his wife in to work across the picket line; she even added that when she did that he pointed his finger at her face and called her a "bitch," and that when he opened his car door to get out, a pop bottle in her hand spilled and some of it fell on Blackwell.

These differing versions of picket line stress, typical of the start of any strike, told long after the events, are to be expected. There is an understandable tendency on each side to exaggerate in both directions. If I decide the issue halfway between the two, all that emerges is the usual picture of disagreement that by the nature of things characterizes all enthusiastic picket lines. Clearly there was a crowd there, and the attempt to single out one picket as a special culprit will not do to justify the outright refusal to reinstate a particular striker much later.

On this whole record I find that the refusal to reinstate Toney was an unfair labor practice in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

D. Refusals to Offer Proper Reinstatement

Seven other strikers made unqualified offers to return to work in writing: five on August 5, 1982, one on August 6, and one on August 12. During the early part of the hearing, in March 1982, all seven of these employees testified for the General Counsel, where four said they had been reinstated late in August or early in September. The other three—Ethel Edwards, Shirley Walton, and Lucy Ramieh—were still waiting for their jobs. Meadows, the office comptroller, testifying later for the Respondent in May when the hearing was resumed, said, as to Ramieh, that she "is employed with Glade now," as to Walton, that she was "recently . . . called back," and as to Edwards, that "she was hired back as a cook recently." Of the three, only Ramieh was called in rebuttal after Meadows' testimony, and she said she was recalled to work in April 1983. I have no reason not to accept Meadows' statement that Walton and Edwards have also been given jobs.

1. The four waitresses

Emma Genoble, Deborah Ledger, Rebecca Gilkerson, and Margaret Flynn were waitresses; they were paid in part an hourly rate by the Respondent and in part by tips from the customers. For some time before the strike Genoble had been paid $4.50 per hour, Ledger $3.25 per hour, Gilkerson $3 per hour, and Flynn $2.60 per hour. When offered reinstatement, which they accepted, they were told they were being relegated to the status of "new" employees, on 90-day probation, and that for each of them the hourly rate would be reduced to $2.10 per hour. In consequence each lady lost her accumulated seniority, varying from 3 to 7 years, and the accumulated vacation benefits flowing from seniority; each lady also lost the previously enjoyed medical insurance for a period of 3 months, the newly established probationary period.

The law is clear. To condition the reinstatement of economic strikers as new hires, with deprivation of previously enjoyed economic benefits, is a straight discrimination in retaliation for protected concerted activities, and a violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act. NLRB v. Fleetwood Trailer Co., 389 U.S. 375 (1967); NLRB v. Great Dane Trailers, 388 U.S. 26 (1967). The Respondent here did not even suggest any justification for striping these particular employees of their accumulated vacation benefits and company seniority. I find that with respect to Genoble, Gilkerson, Ledger, and Flynn the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) when it accepted their unconditional offer to abandon the strike by taking them on as new employees.

As to the reduction in pay, which the Respondent also imposed on them as a condition of reinstatement, the Company contends that it had decided, for economic reasons, to lower the hourly rate of all its waitresses before the strike started, and that therefore it had a right to reduce their pay also. The contention is belied by the facts, as the record clearly shows. Whatever the Company may have decided about the hourly rate for newly hired, or inexperienced waitresses, the fact is it did not reduce the hourly rate of these four before the strike. It does appear that one or two waitresses were hired before the strike and paid at $2.10 an hour. Whatever the reason—probably because of their seniority and therefore greater skill on the job, these four continued to receive their established pay scale. In the circumstances, the only explanation for the reduced pay given them on return was the fact the Company considered them new hires, which it may not do to returning economic strikers. They were more deserving than new hires before the strike, and they remained more deserving at the higher rate of pay when they returned.

The collateral defense to this reduction in pay in the reinstatement of these strikers—that business considerations required the reduction—is equally unconvincing. The business continued as usual during the strike, and there was need for waitresses, as proven by the fact the women were in fact put to work. Conclusionary statements by a defense witness will not do to offset a clear and direct discriminatory treatment of economic strikers on their abandonment of the strike. Meadows testified the decision to reduce the hourly rate was made previously by General Manager Baker. But Baker, as a witness, never talked about it at the hearing. At the hearing Meadows said the new policy was to pay food waitresses only $2.10 and to continue to pay cocktail waitresses $2.60. Flynn, one of the returning strikers, was a cocktail waitress, but she too was reduced to $2.10. Moreover, Meadows' pretrial affidavit says the new policy was to pay all waitresses only $2.10, including cocktail waitresses. She was not a very convincing witness.

I find that the reduction in pay imposed on these four returning strikers was but another aspect of the impermissible conduct of treating them as new hires, instead of returning them to their established, prestrike status.

2. Ethel Edwards and Shirley Walton

Edwards, also a striker, was a cook. On August 5, 1982, she wrote a letter to Baker, saying she wanted to return to work. She never received any response. She was recalled, according to Meadows, as of May 24, 1983, "recently." The only explanation for this lady waiting 11 months for any answer to her offer is a statement by Meadows at the hearing. Asked "Were there any cooks hired prior to her coming back?" she answered: "We promoted within. If we had a dishwasher or a utility person and, you know, we train them to be cooks and then at that time they would perform cooking duties."

Shirley Walton, another striker, was a janitor-housekeeper. She wrote a letter to Baker on August 5, saying she "will be happy to return to my job." Not hearing from anyone she called in, still during August, and was told to talk to one Lisa Williams. All she was told is "they wasn't hiring any housekeepers." On September 20 she went to the company office and filed a regular employment application. No one from the Company ever contacted her thereafter. At the resumed hearing in May 1983 Meadows said only—with respect to this employee—"We had no position in that field until recently when a position did come open, and she was the one that was called back to that."

I do not consider these passing phrases by one company witness sufficient basis to explain the failure to reinstate these two women for over 10 months. The Respondent's brief does not add anything to Meadows' brief comment. The Respondent offered nothing tangible, no records of any kind, that might conceivably support a contention that these two women had been replaced by permanent employees when they applied for jobs, or that during that long interval there were no openings to which they could have been reinstated. Rather, elsewhere in her testimony, Meadows gave herself away.

> Q. [By Respondent's counsel] Were there any employees who offered to come to work after the strike was over and who had been on strike who were not returned to their jobs they were capable and able to do before someone outside the facility was hired to take their places?
>
> A. To the best of my knowledge there were two employees.
>
> Q. And those were who? . . .
>
> A. Shirley Walton and Ethel Edwards.

The duty is on the employer to come forth with some persuasive evidence that its refusal to take back an economic striker was because she had in fact been replaced. The Respondent has not done that. In NLRB v. Fleetwood Trailer, supra, a lead case, the Court said: "[U]nless the employer who refuses to reinstate strikers can show that his action was due to legitimate and substantial business justification, he is guilty of an unfair labor practice." Certainly the same logic applies where the employer refuses to reinstate a striker on the ground he has been permanently replaced; he has to show that the assertion has a reasonable basis. Furthermore, see Laidlaw, supra, where the Board said "that the right to the job does not depend on its availability at the precise moment of application . . . and that strikers retain their status as employees who are entitled to reinstatement absent substantial business justification, and regardless of union animus." "[T]he burden of proving such justification was on the employer." The Board's final holding in Laidlaw, I think, determines the question here.

I find that on August 12, 1982 (I will set the date one week after receipt of the two strikers' letters offering to return to work) the Respondent refused to reinstate Edwards and Walton because they had engaged in an economic strike and thereby violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

3. Lucy Ramieh

Ramieh was a cook, and her letter, offering to return to work forthwith, is also dated August 5. She heard from no one until Meadows telephoned her on September 14 and told her to come to talk to a Mr. Finch "about my return to the job." She did. Finch asked her how much she was paid when she went on strike, and she told him, correctly, it was $6 per hour. He came back with "I can get young boys for $3.25." When to this Ramieh said that might be true but they would not be experienced, Finch offered to pay her $5 an hour instead of the $6 she had been receiving. Ramieh agreed to return at that rate, and Finch closed the conversation with saying he would let her know. Between that date and April 1983, when she was recalled and paid only $4.25 per hour, she heard nothing from the Company.

I believe every word Ramieh gave as a witness in this case. Finch was not called to testify. And again, Meadows was offered instead as an offset to the case in support of the 8(a)(3) allegation as to this returning striker. She spoke of what Finch told her was the reason why he did not rehire Ramieh that day. If ever there was a situation where the hearsay rule of evidence absolutely applies, this is it. In place of Finch, Meadows contradicted Ramieh, and said the reason Finch did not rehire Ramieh that day was because she insisted on being paid $5 an hour, while the Company was paying other cooks $3.75 and $4 an hour. I do not accept her story as true about what happened between Finch and Ramieh.

There were jobs available when Ramieh offered to return to work. That is why Finch called her in to talk to her. He quarreled with her as to price; why would he do that if he did not have a job for her to do then and there? Although I do not know it for a fact, the chances are he counted on her refusing to work for less than her established rate of pay, and when she surprised him by saying she was willing to work for less, he avoided hiring her at the lesser rate by stalling, just saying he would get in touch with her later. This just proves the Respondent did not want to reinstate her. And I can suppose the Respondent took her back, during the recess in the hearing in this proceeding, simply in order to reduce its backpay liability in the event it lost the case.

I find that by refusing to reinstate Ramieh, again, on August 12, 1982, 1 week after she wrote her August 5 letter to return, the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act. And when she was recalled to work in April of 1983, she was paid only $4.25 per hour instead of the $6-per-hour rate she received before the strike. I therefore also find that by reducing her pay because of her having joined the strike, the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

On June 1, 1982, the Respondent sought a court injunction limiting the number of pickets in front of its property. After a conference in the judge's chamber, when the number of pickets was limited by court order, the parties emerged into the corridor of the building where many strikers were gathered. Three of them who were then present, and who testified at the hearing, said they heard Robert McLean, the president of the Respondent, exclaim he would close the plant before having a union represent his employees. By McLaughlin: "He said, 'they're will not be no—Mother fucking Union in here. He would close it down first.'" By Mayes: "I'll close the mother fucking place down before I let a union come inside." By Ledger: "He said he would close the m–'fer down before it went union." Genevive Sphinx, the union organizer, was also present. From her testimony: "McLean made the statement . . . he would close the mother fucking place before he'd see a union come in."

There was no denial of this damaging antiunion threat by McLean; he did not appear as a witness. Dennis Adkins, a maintenance supervisor, and Plant Manager Baker were also present in the corridor that day. They testified they did not hear the president say anything to the witnesses about closing the plant or disliking the Union at all. Maybe they did not hear it, but, in the circumstances, I do credit the employees and the union organizer, and I find that by the Respondent's statement in the presence of the employees that it would close the business if the organizational campaign succeeded, the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

The Respondent must be ordered to cease and desist from again committing the unfair labor practices found herein. Mary Mayes and Lilli Toney must be reinstated to their former positions, under the same conditions of employment they enjoyed at the start of the strike, and they must be made whole for any loss of earnings they suffered in consequence of the illegal discrimination against them. Shirley Walton, Ethel Edwards, and Lucy Ramieh must be made whole for any loss of earnings they suffered in consequence of the Respondent's refusal to reinstate them from August 12, 1982 (1 week after their letters offering to return to work), to the day they were in fact fully reinstated to their proper positions. In the event Walton and Edwards have not been reinstated, they must be restored to the same positions they held before the strike and given backpay to the day of adequate reinstatement.

As to the four waitresses—Genoble, Gilkerson, Ledger, and Flynn—they must be restored to the seniority status they held at the start of the strike, they must be compensated for any loss of vacation benefits and medical insurance they suffered in consequence of the illegal reinstatement, and their hourly rate of pay must be returned to the level they enjoyed at the start of the strike. These four employees must also be paid the difference between their current hourly rate and their old rate, for the entire period from the date of their return to work to the day the Respondent correctly adjusts their hourly rate in accordance with this Order. Like the waitresses, Ramieh, the cook, who is being paid much less than she earned before the strike, must also be raised to the $6 per hour which was her pay before striking, and be made whole for the difference in her pay from the time of her recall until the Respondent conforms with this Order.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of the Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with the operations of the Respondent described in section I, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States, and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. By refusing to reinstate economic strikers Mary Mayes and Lilli Toney, on August 12, 1982, and on September 28, 1982, respectively, by refusing to reinstate economic strikers Walton, Edwards, and Ramieh when they made unconditional offers to return to work, by changing the conditions of employment of Ethel Edwards, Rebecca Gilkerson, Debbie Ledger, and Emma Genoble upon their return to work as economic strikers, and by reducing their hourly pay because they had engaged in concerted protected activity, the Respondent has violated and is violating Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

2. By the foregoing conduct, and by threatening to discontinue its business in retaliation for the employees' union activities, the Respondent has violated and is violating Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

3. The above-described unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

[Recommended Order omitted from publication.]

Burner Systems International, Inc. and Allied Industrial Workers of America, AFL-CIO, Local No. 613. Case 10-CA-18558

14 December 1984

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN, HUNTER, AND DENNIS

On 8 September 1983 Administrative Law Judge Robert A. Gritta issued the attached decision. The General Counsel and the Charging Party filed exceptions and supporting briefs, the Respondent filed cross-exceptions and a supporting brief, and all parties filed answering briefs.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions and to adopt the recommended Order.[2]

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended Order of the administrative law judge and orders that the Respondent, Burner Systems International, Inc., Rossville, Georgia, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the administrative law judge.

MEMBER ZIMMERMAN, concurring and dissenting.

I agree with the judge and my colleagues that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) by refusing to allow the Union to see the Respondent's financial records and by withdrawing recognition from the Union, and violated Section 8(a)(3) by refusing to reinstate six striking employees. However, contrary to the judge and my colleagues, I find that the strike which commenced on 3 August 1982 was an unfair labor practice strike.

It is undisputed that on 20 July or 30 July 1982 the Union asked to see the Respondent's books following the Respondent's negotiating proposal of no wage increases during the first year of the new contract, and the Respondent refused. The judge found, and my colleagues and I agree, that this refusal constituted an unfair labor practice.

It is also undisputed that on 2 August 1982 the Union held a membership meeting at which Union President Brogdon read to the membership the Respondent's proposal and informed them of the Respondent's alleged financial inability to pay a wage increase during the first year of the contract. Brogdon also stated that the Respondent had refused the Union's request to see the Respondent's financial records. The membership then voted to reject the Respondent's proposal and to strike the next day.

Under these circumstances, I find that the 3 August strike was initiated at least in part in response to the Respondent's unlawful refusal to allow the Union to examine its financial records. Having claimed financial inability to increase wages while at the same time refusing to substantiate the claim, the Respondent unlawfully left the employees the alternatives of accepting the Respondent's contract offer without any justification or to reject the offer and to strike. In this posture, it is apparent that the Respondent's unlawful refusal to give the Union the information necessary to evaluate its offer played a part in the employees' decision to reject the offer and to strike. As the employees were notified of the Respondent's unfair labor practice immediately prior to their vote to strike, my colleagues' position that the strike bore no relationship to the unfair labor practice is untenable. See C & E Stores, Inc., 221 NLRB 1321 (1976); I. W. Corp., 239 NLRB 478 (1978). Accordingly, I find the strike to be an unfair labor practice

[1] The undisputed evidence reveals that 53 employees—new hires plus those returning from layoff or abandoning the strike—worked during the strike, and 54 employees—strikers plus those on layoff—refrained from working during the strike. Thus, under any view of the law, we agree with the judge that the Respondent's withdrawal of recognition from the Union on 24 August 1982 violated Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

Contrary to our dissenting colleague, there is no evidence to show that the employees' decision to strike was motivated by anything other than a dissatisfaction with the terms of the Respondent's contract proposal.

At the membership meeting of 2 August 1982 during which the strike vote was taken, there was only passing reference to the fact that the Respondent was claiming financial inability to pay, but refusing to permit the Union to examine its books and records. The discussion at this meeting centered around the Respondent's final contract proposal and, in particular, the Respondent's wage offer, which was for no wage increase the first year of the contract and for increases of 25 cents and 30 cents an hour in the second and third years, respectively. Union representative Smith explained the Respondent's proposal to those at the meeting and suggested that no action be taken for 20 days in the hope that "things" could be worked out between the Respondent and the Union. However, those in attendance at the meeting voted to reject the Respondent's final offer and to strike immediately. The strike commenced the next day with signs reading: "Local 613, AIW, AFL-CIO, on strike for fair wages."

As indicated, the Respondent's refusal to make its financial records available to the Union was given only the briefest mention at the meeting, and it prompted no questions or discussion. When the time came to vote on whether to go on strike, the question was framed in terms of whether to accept or reject the Respondent's last contract proposal, and nothing else. Thus, it seems clear that those in attendance at the meeting were voting on the Respondent's economic proposals, and this conclusion is reinforced by the language which appeared on their picket signs the next day protesting the Respondent's failure to pay "fair wages."

Accordingly, we adopt the judge's finding that the strike was economic from its inception and that the Respondent's refusal to permit the Union to examine its financial records was not a direct or contributing cause of the strike.

[2] We shall revise the notice to conform to the judge's recommended Order.

strike from its inception and dissent from my colleagues' dismissal of that complaint allegation.[1]

[1] In light of this finding and the judge's finding, with which my colleagues and I agree, that the Respondent refused to bargain with the Union by unlawfully withdrawing recognition from the Union, I find it unnecessary to pass on whether the Respondent refused to bargain with the Union 2 August 1982.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively with the Union by refusing its request to see our financial records and by withdrawing our recognition from the Union.

WE WILL NOT refuse to reinstate striking employees following their unconditional application to return to work.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, recognize and bargain collectively in good faith with the Allied Industrial Workers of America, AFL–CIO, Local No. 613, and will disclose to them our financial records to further this bargaining obligation.

WE WILL offer to reinstate striking employees Margaret Brogdon, Henry Percy, Wanda Creekmore, Edna Watt, Lamar Scott, and Renee Wyatt to their prestrike positions and will make each whole for any loss of earnings suffered as a result of our unlawful discrimination against them, plus interest.

WE WILL remove from our files any references to the failure to reinstate, and the reasons therefor, for each of the above-named employees and notify each in writing that this has been done and that evidence of the failure to reinstate or the reasons therefor will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against them.

BURNER SYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

ROBERT A. GRITTA, Administrative Law Judge. This case was tried before me on February 22 and 23, 1983, in Chattanooga, Tennessee, based on a charge filed by Allied Industrial Workers of America, AFL–CIO, Local No. 613 (the Union) on September 22, 1982, and a complaint issued by the Regional Director for Region 10 of the National Labor Relations Board on November 2, 1982.[1] The complaint alleged that Burner Systems International, Inc. (Respondent) violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act by refusing to cooperate with the Union during negotiations culminating in withdrawal of recognition and refusal to bargain further. The General Counsel also alleged that Respondent refused to reinstate employees who engaged in an interim strike and permanently replaced its employees without regard for the alleged unfair labor practice nature of the strike. Respondent's timely answer denied the commission of any unfair labor practices.

All parties hereto were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence, and to argue orally. Briefs were submitted by the General Counsel, Respondent, and the Charging Party. All briefs were duly considered.

On the entire record[2] in this case and from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor on the witness stand, and on substantive, reliable evidence considered along with the consistency and inherent probability of testimony, I make the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION AND STATUS OF LABOR ORGANIZATION—PRELIMINARY CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that Burner Systems International, Inc. is a Georgia corporation engaged in the manufacture of heating products in Rossville, Georgia. Jurisdiction is not in issue. Burner Systems International, Inc., in the past 12 months, in the course and conduct of its business operations shipped products from its Rossville facility, valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points located outside the State of Georgia. I conclude and find that Burner Systems International, Inc. is an employer engaged in commerce and in operations affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I conclude and find that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

[1] All dates herein are in 1982 unless otherwise specified.

[2] The General Counsel filed a posttrial motion to admit certain evidence which was not available at the close. G.C. Exh. 13 was reserved for such later submission. Neither Respondent nor Charging Party opposed the General Counsel's motion and therefore, I shall receive the evidence into the record as G.C. Exh. 13. At the trial I rejected Respondent's offer of Exh. 8. I now reverse that ruling and receive into evidence R. Exh. 8.

II. BACKGROUND

Respondent operates a plant in Rossville, Georgia, where it manufactures burner elements for suppliers of heating products. The plant operates one shift from 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. with a probationary period of 60 days for all employees. During 1982, the maximum complement of employees was 60-odd with approximately 13 employees being laid off prior to August. On December 28, 1971, the Board certified the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all the production and maintenance employees employed by Respondent at its Rossville, Georgia plant. Office clerical, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act were excluded from representation. Thenceforth, the parties have negotiated successive collective-bargaining contracts with the latest terminating August 2. Negotiations began in mid-July prior to expiration of the contract. Proposals from both parties were tendered in writing during the three meetings held. The Union went on strike August 3 when the work force numbered 53 employees. Although some violence occurred on the picket line, Respondent could not assess culpability to any individual striker for such misconduct. Indeed, Respondent stated at trial that such violence was not considered in its procedure for recalling striking employees. Replacement employees were hired during the strike and no dispute exists between the parties as to the permanent status of those replacements when hired. Respondent admitted and the parties stipulated that recognition of the Union as representative of the employees in the bargaining unit was withdrawn by Respondent on August 24 following the return to work, across the picket line, of 5 striking employees and the hiring of some 32 replacement employees. Two days later on August 26 the Union made an unconditional offer to return to work for all striking employees. Respondent, based on the Union's failure to give proper notice to the Georgia Department of Labor of its intent to strike, assumed that all striking employees lost their status as employees under the Act but at strike's end disciplined only six of the strikers by refusing them their reinstatement rights. All other strikers were reinstated. The negotiations, the strike, and the reinstatement of strikers give rise to the issues to be determined herein. Supervisory and rank-and-file employees testified at the trial, and the pertinent portions of their testimony are detailed below.[3]

III. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

Charles H. Dickas, owner and president of Respondent, testified that the most recent contract with the Union was dated August 2, 1979, and terminating August 2, 1982. Just prior to termination the parties met to negotiate a new contract. Three such meetings were held beginning July 13 with the last occurring on July 30. Respondent's representatives at all three meetings were Dickas, Executive Vice President Joe Ferguson, and Plant Manager Jim Coogler. (The parties stipulated to the supervisory capacity of Ferguson and Coogler.) The Union was represented by Bill Smith, International representative; Margaret Brogdon, employee president of the local union; and employees Ann Allen, Sue Pollard, and Greg Gilstrap. The Union submitted written proposals at the first meeting. The parties discussed the union proposals then adjourned. At the second meeting on July 20 Respondent submitted written counterproposals to the Union. Included in Respondent's proposals were specified rejections of each of the Union's prior economic proposals. Dickas stated that he told the union negotiating committee in each meeting that there was no possible way the Company could economically make any concessions this year. The Company was not in a position to make any monetary concessions or give the Union what it was asking for. Dickas explained to the Union that anything that was going to cost the Company money was out of the question because the Company was engaged in a life-and-death struggle to stay alive.

At the second meeting, Smith asked Dickas if the Union could look at the company books. Dickas replied that the Company was private with him owning practically all the stock. Since he was a very personal person, he did not see where it would do any good for the Union to see the books, especially in view of the Company's prior explanation of its financial condition and position in the market place. Dickas told the Union that "Coogler doesn't get to see the books." Only the CPA and the officers of the Company see the books. The Company did not show the books to anybody. Smith did not repeat his request nor was the request discussed any further. Dickas stated that had he known that he could avoid a strike by showing the company books to the Union he would have done so.

Dickas learned of the strike vote from Brogdon on the evening of August 2. After Brogdon told him the employees voted to strike Dickas told her, "If y'all struck, I guess that's it then." Brogdon said she would like to talk. Dickas asked, "What is there to talk about?" He then stated, "You all have struck, apparently you're through." Some 42 employees did go on strike with several employees continuing to work. About 3 of the 13 employees who had been on layoff or on leave returned to work during the strike.

Several days after the strike started Tipple, from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, called to verify that employees were on strike. He said he had no official information of a strike. Later, Tipple called and asked Dickas if the Company was willing to meet with the Union. Dickas informed Tipple to work through the Company's lawyers. A third call from Tipple informed Dickas that the Union wanted to meet. Again Dickas told Tipple to call the lawyer and make arrangements. Dickas could not recall the dates of the three calls from Tipple.

On August 14, Respondent sent a letter to all strikers asking them to return to work and setting a deadline of August 18. After August 18, Respondent advertised for and hired some 34 replacement employees between August 23 and 25. On August 26, Respondent received from the Union an unconditional offer for all strikers to return to work. As needs increased or vacancies occurred, the striking employees were returned to work. Eventually all but six employees were returned to work. The six employees not reinstated are: Margaret Brogdon, Edna Watts, Wanda Creekmore, Henry Percy, Lamar Scott, and Renee Wyatt.

[3] The above comes from admissions in pleadings, stipulations on the record, or the uncontroverted testimony of credible witnesses.

Dickas testified that during the strike several employees phoned him at the plant indicating a willingness to return to work and a disenchantment with the Union. One employee, he recalled, stated that she did not want to go on strike in the first place.

Margaret Brogdon, president of the local union, testified that she was employed by Respondent from October 16, 1972, to August 2, 1982, as a porting machine operator. Brogdon represented the Union at all three negotiating sessions held July 13, 20, and 30. Each of the Union's proposals on economic matters sought some kind of increase. In each instance Respondent replied that the Company could not afford any increased cost. Specifically, on the wage proposals of $1 an hour for each of the 3 years the Company said they could not give any more wages for the first year in view of the bad economy. Business had been bad with orders reduced from past years so the Company just did not have the money to give. The Union proposed extending the present contract, as is, with no wage increase the first year and a wage reopener for the second and third years. The Company rejected any extension stating that the Company needed fixed costs to project ahead and commit to future orders.

The Company's final proposal on wages at the last meeting was for no increase the first year and 25 cents and 30 cents for each of the next 2 years. During the discussion of wages the Company again stated that it did not have the money for the first year but was willing to take a gamble on the second and third years. Although the Union did not distrust the Company they asked to see the company books. Brogdon testified, "We needed to see some proof for our people, and we could understand if they didn't, but we needed something to see." Dickas responded, "Nobody sees his books." Ferguson said, "Absolutely not." Dickas added, "Jim Coogler there don't even get to see our books." The meeting then ended. There was no contact between the parties concerning another meeting.

On August 2, after work hours, the Union held a membership meeting with approximately 45 employees attending. Brogdon read the entire proposals to the employees word-for-word. She reported the financial condition as expressed by the Company during negotiations and told the employees that the Company had refused a request to see the financial records of the Company. Smith then suggested to the members that they work for 30 days to see if things could be worked out. Smith said it was a bad time to strike. Following this the employees had two votes. One, whether to accept or reject the Company's final offer and two, whether to strike now or not. The employees voted to reject the final offer and to strike now. Later that evening Dickas called Brogdon and asked what the membership had decided to do. Brogdon told Dickas that the employees voted to strike but the Union was still willing to bargain. Dickas replied, "No, we're through and you're through." The Union did not at this time offer or suggest that the strike could be averted if the Union was allowed to see the books. The first day of the strike Brogdon told Dickas that anytime the Company wanted to talk, the Union would do so. Dickas responded, "Okay." Of the 51 employees in the plant prior to the strike about 45 were union members and of that number 34 went out on strike August 3. The picket signs carried by strikers read, "Local 613, AIW, AFL–CIO, on strike for fair wages." During the strike the Union did not contact the Company to set up any additional negotiating meetings. However, after replacements started going in to work, the union committee through Representative Smith, did discuss future meetings with Federal Mediator Tipple. The striking union members did not discuss the filing of unfair labor practice charges against the Company during the course of the strike. The strike continued until August 26 at which time the union members still on strike voted to accept the Company's last offer and abandon the strike. The Union notified the Company of its willingness to accept the Company's last offer and submitted a written unconditional offer for all striking employees to return to work. Sometime later the Union filed an unfair labor practice charge against Respondent.

Lynda Childress testified that she has been employed by Respondent for 3-1/2 years. Childress attended the union meeting of August 2 sitting in the front row. Smith and Brogdon spoke to the assembled employees. Brogdon read the content of each proposal from the Union and the Company. She stated that the Company was standing firm on its last proposal. Brogdon also stated that the committee had asked to see the books but the Company rejected the request and said under no circumstances would they show anyone the books. Childress did not recall any employees asking any questions during the meeting. Smith asked the employees to give him more time to negotiate by delaying any strike action. Smith suggested that the employees give the Company time to think about it, partly because it was a bad time to strike with poor economic conditions everywhere. Childress did recall that, following the presentation, the employees voted whether to accept or reject the Company's last offer and to strike. The vote on the Company's last offer was by a show of hands with a majority voting to reject. Smith then said to Brogdon, loud enough for the employees to hear, "Let's just vote, Margaret. These people have their minds made up." Paper ballots were distributed and the vote was taken in secret. A majority voted "yes" to go on strike. Smith told the group he would call to get the strike sanctioned and the meeting ended.

Pamela Waters testified that she is a reporter for "The Busy Shopper." She authored the article admitted into the record. Waters stated that the only sources for the article were Brogdon and several strikers present at the time. Brogdon told her about the strike including the employees' reasons for striking. Waters recorded what Brogdon told her and included "all" in the article. Brogdon also gave Waters copies of the union proposals and company responses to those proposals. Waters stated that the article, as written, accurately reported what Brogdon told her. When quoting a person for inclusion in an article Waters takes it word for word in her notes and places quotes around the substance. In addition, Waters stated that the contents of the article were not questioned by Brogdon or the Union nor was any retraction demanded by either.

Joe Ferguson testified that he is executive vice president of Respondent and has been with it for 4-1/2 years. He served on Respondent's negotiating committee for all three meetings. Respondent's economic condition was presented to the union committee at the start of the first meeting. The Union then presented its contract proposal containing a $1-an-hour increase for each of the 3 years. At the second meeting Respondent presented its response to the Union's contract demands. The general response was that economic demands could not be entertained. The company committee stated to the union committee that this was the second year of declining sales and the plant was not making any money. The Union then proposed a 1-year extension of the current contract. The Company rejected the proposal explaining to the Union the need for firm costs when quoting prices to customers over a period of production time which could possibly consume several years. Ferguson specifically mentioned Lennox and Singer as examples of large gas appliance manufacturers that require several years to consummate an order for Respondent's product. Ferguson also mentioned that the customers were constantly seeking a price reduction in the burners. At the third meeting the Company submitted its proposal of no wage increase the first year, 25 cents the second year, and 30 cents the third year. Other, partially economic, proposals made by the Union were accepted by the Company. The meeting lasted only 15 minutes with very little discussion by either side. The last thing the Union said, through Smith, was "Let us talk about this, and I'll get back to you." Smith never contacted the Company after that meeting.

Ferguson could not remember in which meeting it occurred that Smith asked if the Union could take a look at the company books. The Company responded basically that it was a private company and did not make its records available to outside sources. No further request for access to the books was made by the Union.

The Union did contact the Company on August 26 by letter. The letter offered the striking employees return to work and indicated acceptance of the Company's last contract offer. At that time the plant manning level had been attained by new hires. When vacancies occurred or production required more employees, the striking employees were recalled by classification and seniority. With the exception of the three laid-off employees recalled early in the strike, no other employees in laid-off status have been recalled to work. All vacancies were filled by recalling striking employees until all striking employees had been returned to work, excepting six. The six employees have not been reinstated and they were not considered for reinstatement without regard to their classification or seniority position. The six employees were not taken back because they had obviously and deliberately flouted the state judge's order on picket line procedure. Several striking employees were recalled but they declined to return to work.[4]

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

A. Union Request to See Financial Records

Although some confusion exists as to which of the three meetings generated a union request to "see the company books," it is undisputed that Union Representative Smith did ask to "see the books." Further, there is no dispute that the request immediately followed Respondent's proposal of no wage increases during the first year of a 3-year contract. Respondent's response to the request is equally undisputed and considerably more than a terse "no." All witnesses testifying agreed that the response to the Union was "This is a private company. We don't even show our books to the bank. Jim Coogler, plant manager, doesn't get to see the books. Only the officers of the company can see the books. No one can see our books."

Respondent contends that Smith's request was casual and, therefore, did not require an affirmative response and the Union failed to continue its request or in some way communicate to Respondent the gravity of its negative response. Such a contention presumes several factors that do not exist. A union's request to see the company books following a position of inability to pay need not be formal. So long as the intent behind the request is clear it must be honored. Nor does it have to be repeated or in some way kept viable particularly in the circumstance where the Company's response leaves no room for movement in the direction of "seeing the books" which is precisely the circumstance herein.

Respondent's alternative contention is that the request need not be honored because the Union was treated to a substantial discourse on the national economy and the financial status of Respondent supported by the obvious loss of purchase orders and the impending loss of its "patented burner" within a year. It argues that the Company's financial condition was thus otherwise substantiated, leaving Respondent free to deny the Union's request. Counsel asserts, and the record evinces, that the union bargaining committee agreed to and accepted Respondent's appraisal of the general economic conditions extant during negotiations precluding the need for further discussion or disclosure. In my view, even if the union committee did accept Respondent's appraisal it was still entitled to "see the books" upon its request. Respondent's disclosure was too general in nature and containing nothing specific of Respondent's then financial condition. Respondent could have produced records of declining orders, records of lost customers, records of unusual attrition of employees, and records of declining sales but it chose only to allude to such. I conclude that Respondent did not otherwise substantiate its poor financial condition and, therefore, its denial to the Union to "see the books" was unfounded, more particularly, since the Union's request immediately followed Respondent's contract proposal of no wage increase in the first year of a 3-year contract.

[4] Diane Stewart, Joyce Medaris, and Rick Paqleno.

Contrary to Respondent's further argument, there is no obligation on the Union to attempt any voluntary re dress of a prior refusal to see the books. Moreover, whether or not the Union presses such request further, upon abandonment of a subsequent strike, can have no bearing on the consideration of the refusal of the Union's prior request. Respondent's refusal of the request stands alone.

I find Respondent's self-serving testimony of its president that, to avoid a strike, he would have shown the books to the Union instructive of Respondent's intent to exercise its control over negotiations without regard for the statutory language of Section 8(d).

Based on the above, I conclude and find that Respondent's professed privacy of its Company precluded the Union from "seeing the books" no matter what the economic circumstance. Such an adamant stance by an employer in collective-bargaining negotiations is completely without the language of Section 8(d) of the Act and falls squarely within the law of the cases wherein the Board holds an employer's refusal to allow the union access to its books is bad-faith bargaining violative of the Act and I so find.[5]

Since the time lapse before filing a charge is subject to several inferences and the probative value of each is questionable, I do not draw any negative inferences from the Union's choice of when to file its charge. Further, I do not draw any negative inferences from the General Counsel's failure to produce notes of bargaining sessions kept by Brogdon or the minutes of the Union's strike-vote meeting prepared by the Union's secretary-treasurer. I am satisfied that the affirmative evidence in the record, both corroborated and uncontroverted, is substantial without the introduction of the notes or minutes.

B. Alleged Refusal to Bargain—August 2

The General Counsel argues that Respondent when it learned of the Union's strike vote on August 2, refused to negotiate further with the Union, constituting an unlawful refusal to bargain. Although there is little dispute over the substance of the conversation between Dickas and Brogdon, an ambiguity does exist as to what was said by the parties at the last meeting on July 30 pertaining to further negotiations. Respondent claims that the Union on July 30 stated it would consider the last offer and get back to the Company but never did. The contention is the ball was in the Union's court. The General Counsel claims that Respondent's response to the union strike vote was a flat refusal to meet further, placing the Union in a "wait and see" posture. Neither contention is completely supported in the record. Collective bargaining is a two-way street. Both parties must exhibit the volition to bargain. In this case neither party affirmatively moved to negotiate further. The Union did not after July 30 and Respondent did not after August 2. When final offers are made and strike votes are taken emotions run high on both sides. In such an atmosphere, parties' intents are best evidenced by actions not words. If the Union truly wanted bargaining to continue during the strike, more than "We are ready to talk when you are" would have been offered. The record evidence of the Union's strike vote meeting is somewhat meaningful to evince the Union's stance on August 2. Smith at the meeting recognized the preconceived notion of the members to strike and in effect was voted down when he asked for more time to bargain. It is not unreasonable to conceive that Smith simply decided to let the employees have their strike and then later proceed in a more reasonable fashion at the bargaining table. The General Counsel relies on Dickas' statement to Brogdon during the phone conversation of August 2 to show Respondent's negative attitude toward further bargaining. However, the following day, while pickets were in place, Brogdon again told Dickas that the Union "is ready to talk when the Company is." Dickas' response to Brogdon was "okay." When the Union did make an affirmative move to set further negotiation meetings they did so through Federal Mediator Tipple, not directly to Respondent. In my view each party exhibited an identical attitude of "wait and see," not an unusual circumstance in such an atmosphere and certainly not one in which culpability can be assessed against only one party. As I view the record evidence in light of the language of Section 8(d) and the Board's reasoning in refusal-to-bargain cases, I am unable to conclude that Respondent refused to meet further with a union that was demanding further bargaining without regard for the strike in progress. Accordingly, I find that Respondent did not refuse to bargain with the Union as of August 2.

Respondent's argument that Dickas could presume an impasse, precluding further bargaining, existed on August 2 when Smith failed to get back to the Company is not only premature in point of time but misses the mark as a legal conclusion. Impasses are not presumed but rather have a factual existence. The facts relied on by Respondent in this case completely negate the existence of an impasse at any time and in the last analysis a strike by employees breaks an impasse setting the stage for further negotiations.

C. Unfair Labor Practice or Economic Strike

The strike which began on August 3 is alleged to be an unfair labor practice strike. The General Counsel relies on the uncontroverted testimony of several employees present at the union meeting when the strike vote was taken. It is crystal clear that the employees had two votes. The first was to decide whether to accept the employer's last offer and the second was to decide whether to strike or not. There was no preliminary explanation of the voting question nor was there any discussion of the factors to consider before casting a ballot. The evidence does show that the employees heard the complete proposals made by both sides during bargaining and that the union negotiating committee had requested to inspect the company books but the request was denied. There was no further explanation of the bargaining circumstances or their relationship to the employees about to cast ballots. In particular, there were no questions nor discussions relating to the status of prospective strikers, if and when the employer hired new employees, assuming a strike was called for. As noted earlier, the questions put to the voting membership were simple and direct. The members voted to reject the Company's last offer and to go on strike as of midnight August 2. The picket signs carried during the strike read simply, "AIW, AFL–CIO, On Strike for Fair Wages." The legend on the signs never changed during the course of the strike.

[5] My determination as well as the arguments of all three parties is based on NLRB v. Truitt Mfg. Co., 351 U.S. 149 (1956).

The General Counsel argues sufficiency of the evidence to support her allegation that the strike was caused, at least in part, by Respondent's unfair labor practices. Respondent, of course, argues the contrary. I conclude and find that the strike was economic in nature from its inception. The mere disclosure to the union membership of circumstances that may constitute a prior unfair labor practice, without more, even though just prior to the membership's vote on the question of "strike" is insufficient to establish that the resultant strike was caused by the unfair labor practices. There must be a causal relationship between the commission of the unfair labor practices and the incidence of the strike. The Board has held repeatedly that the occurrence of prior unfair labor practices, standing alone, is not sufficient to establish an unfair labor practice strike. Here, the facts evince nothing more to me. Brogdon's verbal revelation to the union members was simply a report of an occurrence. No assessment, discussion, or characterization of the event ensued. As Smith put it to Brogdon, "Let's vote, they already have their minds made up." I place no more emphasis on the reported occurrence than Smith did and apparently the union membership did. I, therefore, conclude and find that Respondent's refusal to allow the union negotiating committee to see the books during negotiations was not a direct cause of the strike nor was it a contributing cause to the employees' decision to go out on strike. Thus, the strike called for by the union membership on August 2 was an economic strike.[6]

1. Threat to permanently replace strikers

The General Counsel alleges further that Respondent's letter of August 14, circulated to striking employees during the strike, constituted an unlawful threat to permenantly replace the strikers, and prolonged the strike beyond its reasonable endurance. Further, the General Counsel alleges that the resultant hiring of replacement employees, subsequent to the letter and while the strike ensued, was an unlawful act and contributed to and additionally prolonged the strike.

The letter on its face does not state that any replacement employee will be a permanent replacement nor does it describe or characterize the status of those employees failing to respond to the letter's plea. The letter is couched in terms of Respondent's rights during a strike. The strike was 2 weeks old by the time the employees received the letter and replacements were not actually hired until 10 days to 2 weeks after the letter was sent. Respondent's actions were not hurried nor equivocal. I cannot, on the basis of all the facts, conclude that the language of Respondent's letter contained a threat to the striking employees. In my view, Respondent did what it has a legal right to do. Granted, whenever employers communicate with striking employees they may do so at their peril and the General Counsel is correct in restating case law that employers may not permenantly replace unfair labor practice strikers nor threaten to do so. But the record shows that, excepting six strikers, all strikers were returned to work after the strike. Therefore, Respondent did not permanently replace strikers no matter what the nature of the strike. I find Respondent's subsequent actions partially instructive of its prior intent when issuing the letter and probative of the implicit nature of the letter. I find some difficulty in following the General Counsel's argument of prolongation in that the strike, rather than being continued, was abruptly abandoned as a result of Respondent's hiring of replacement employees. The inconsistency is fatal in my view. Accordingly, I conclude and find that Respondent's letter of August 14 was not a threat to permanently replace striking employees and did not, standing alone or in conjunction with the actual hiring of replacement employees, contribute to the length of the strike.

2. Withdrawal of recognition and refusal to reinstate strikers

Owing to Respondent's proffered defense at the trial in conjunction with arguments in brief and the rather short chronology of the events, I shall consider the withdrawing of recognition and the refusal to reinstate strikers together. As previously noted, the record is unclear on the actual date that Respondent withdrew recognition but the parties were able to stipulate and Respondent did admit to the "on or about" date alleged by the General Counsel.

The General Counsel contends, correctly so, that upon the expiration of the certification year there exists a rebuttable presumption of the Union's continued majority status; Respondent may only rebut this presumption by establishing that the Union, in fact, lost its majority status on the date that it withdrew recognition. She relies on Pennco, Inc., 242 NLRB 467 (1979),[7] and Burlington Homes, 246 NLRB 1029 (1979) (citing National Car Rental System,[8]) for support of her restatement of the law. With regard to the reinstatement-of-strikers issue, the General Counsel is only contending that the six named strikers were refused reinstatement as returning strikers. There is no issue of reinstatement to the prestrike position of those strikers previously reinstated. Neither is there an issue of replacement of economic strikers at the time of the application to return to work on behalf of all strikers. The uncontroverted testimony in the record establishes that following the Union's application for all strikers to return to work, each returning striker was recalled to his prestrike position, immediately if the position was available, or whenever a vacancy occurred which required filling. Without a doubt, all vacancies existing were filled by seniority and classification of the strikers alone, excepting the six named strikers who were denied reinstatement.

[6] See Capital Rubber & Specialty Co., 198 NLRB 260 fn. 1 (1972); Respondent's 8(d) defense is considered infra.

[7] Reconsidered and affirmed by the Board in a Supplemental Decision, Pennco, Inc., 250 NLRB 716 (1980).

[8] Infra.

Respondent's defenses are contained in objective evidence in the record, representations of counsel at trial, and arguments in brief. To recap, the objective evidence discloses the employees on the payroll prior to the strike; the employees not reporting for work the day of the strike; the new hires and returning strikers during the strike; what employees, if any, were in a status other than working or striking at the time and a statement of position submitted to the Regional Office on September 30, 1982.

The earliest date of Respondent's proffer of evidence to support its objective considerations forming a good-faith doubt of the Union's continued majority status is September 30, 1982. In that statement of position Respondent explicates that on August 18 it was in possession of facts that led it to doubt the Union's majority status under the doctrines expressed in Titan Metal Mfg. Co., 135 NLRB 196 (1962), and National Car Rental System v. NLRB, 594 F.2d 1203 (1979). The position paper then details the facts: 37 of the 51 hourly employees are permanent striker replacements; 10 employees did not go on strike but continued working; 7 employees were either strikers who returned to work across the picket line or were in layoff status and reported back to work during the strike; all employees crossed the picket line each day in the face of harassment and abuse and many employees employed during the strike voluntarily expressed no support for the Union. The position paper was directed to the withdrawal of recognition and Respondent's subsequent refusal to bargain. Striker reinstatement was not broached.[9]

At trial and in brief Respondent augmented its defense to withdrawal of recognition, labeling the strike in progress at the time of withdrawal as unlawful and unprotected. The attack on the strike's validity was based on the Union's alleged failure to notify the state mediation agency as required in Section 8(d) of the Act. Additionally, Respondent contends that the striking employees have lost their status as employees due to the notice failure of Section 8(d) and, therefore, Respondent is not obligated to reinstate the striking employees.

Respondent's National Car Rental defense is bottomed upon the circuit court's refusal to enforce the Board order. The court disallowed the Board's use of its presumption that new employees support the union in the same ratio as those employees replaced, because all strikers were replaced. The court stated that the Board-created presumption does not rise to the level of substantial evidence. The two Board cases cited by the General Counsel were decided subsequent to the court decision in National Car Rental and reaffirm the Board's use of its presumptions and what proof is required to rebut those presumptions. The Board test of proof remains the same and I am bound by the Board law. The Board requires affirmative evidence that is not subjective or speculative. Thus, if Respondent is relying on the fact that replacements do not support the Union there must be more than the mere employment during a strike. Likewise, strikers who abandon the strike and cross the picket line to return to work or employees who chose to remain on the job evince only disdain for the strike rather than nonsupport for the bargaining representative. (There is always a minority of union employees who disfavor a strike but the strike is called because a majority favors striking.) Also, employees in layoff status at the time of the strike and who apparently took no part in the strike action cannot be presumed by Respondent to no longer support the Union simply because they returned to work during the strike. Respondent contends that all employees who crossed the picket line to work endured harassment and abuse but the record does not contain any evidence that the conduct on the part of strikers was any different from that normally experienced in a strike situation. Respondent must show strike conduct inimical to the replacement employees' subsequent support for the Union. This, Respondent's evidence does not do. Moreover, the time period expressed in Respondent's position paper is in error. August 18 is not the date Respondent possesed its evidence. The objective evidence in the record shows prior to August 18 only seven employees returned to work across the picket line. Five abandoned the strike and two returned from leaves of absence. In addition, replacement employees were not hired until August 23 when 14 reported; August 24 when 18 reported; and August 25 when 2 reported. Of these 34 replacements, Dickas only recalled that 3 or 5 indicated to him that they did not support the Union and the recalled "indications" were less than specific. Such falls far short of the statement "many employees employed during the strike voluntarily expressed no support for the Union." Although not controlling, the fact that neither party can specifically place the date that Tipple was conversed with and thereby solidify the date that Respondent first voiced its withdrawal of recognition, it does cause an emphasis to be placed on the narrow chronology of events which influences the determination. E.g., from August 25, the last day that a replacement employee was hired and one day before the Union's unconditional offer to return, the ranks of the replacement employees began a steady decline resulting in only 14 replacement employees remaining on the payroll.

As previously noted the position paper did not include any 8(d) defense. Indeed, the alleged notice failure was not known to Respondent at the time it withdrew recognition from the Union nor was it known at the time the Union made application to return the strikers to work or when the majority of the strikers was actually reinstated. Although the date that Respondent did suspect the notice failure is not specifically found in the record, it is clear that Respondent had no awareness until just before the state proceeding on unemployment benefits very late in 1982 or in early 1983. As Respondent states in its brief, 'It turns out, however, that the Union had been derelict in its compliance with Section 8(d)." The only direct evidence to establish a date is Respondent's affidavit exhibit dated February 16, 1983. However, counsel did represent that the exhibit was the second of two affidavits secured from the state offices. In any event, Respondent cannot now be heard to defend its act of withdrawal of recognition from the Union with a circumstance unknown to it at the time it acted. To even consider such a defense would make a mockery of the "objective considerations" required by the Board. Albeit Respondent expressly denied any reliance on the picket line conduct of some strikers, it is interesting to note that the temporary restraining order obtained on August 5 was implemented by interlocutory order on August 20 and 4 days later the court found several strikers in contempt of its order and fined and/or jailed several. Approximate to this day Respondent informed the Federal mediator that it was withdrawing recognition from the Union. In fact, Ferguson testified that the reason the six named strikers were not reinstated was their picket line conduct resulting in their contempt citation by the state court. Further chronological and substantive inconsistency is found in the fact that, notwithstanding admitted withdrawal of recognition from the Union on August 24, Respondent did, 2 days later, honor the Union's application to return the strikers to work and ceased hiring new employees. All but the six strikers named were returned to their prestrike position. I, therefore, conclude that the record facts do not sustain Respondent's defenses to the alleged unlawful withdrawal of recognition nor its refusal to reinstate the six named strikers following the Union's unconditional offer to return all strikers back to work. I further conclude and find that Respondent's reason for denying reinstatement to the six named strikers was impermissible under the statute. Accordingly, the General Counsel has sustained her burden of proof that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by withdrawing recognition from the Union on August 24 and further violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act by failing and refusing to reinstate the six named striking employees.

[9] There was a change of counsel between the statement of position and the trial.

Respondent's further reliance on the unknown circumstance of the suspected failure of the 8(d) notice to defend its refusal to reinstate the six named strikers succumbs as well. Such a defense applies to all employees engaged in the strike and their representatives. Respondent reinstated some 31 strikers before it knew of any notice failure prospect, which means that the notice failure was not a consideration for how and when the strikers returned. Since it was not a consideration at the time of the return it cannot be a consideration for the refusal to return. Such a generic defense must be a defense to all or none. Respondent cannot be allowed to pick and choose those strikers to whom it would apply such a defense and others to whom it would not. Only when Respondent's defense is the individual conduct of strikers may Respondent pick and choose, but even then Respondent must be uniform and nondiscriminatory in its discipline. There is evidence on the record to suggest that Respondent's real reason for refusing to reinstate the six named strikers was picket line conduct found contemptuous by the state court. Later, Respondent realized the futility of such a defense due to the lack of identification of known strikers with the known conduct and shifted its defense to Section 8(d). In my view, such a shift is fatal since Respondent's refusal must be based on facts it considered when its decision not to reinstate was made.

Moreover, Respondent's evidence to support the existence of its 8(d) defense is not completely adequate. As contended by the General Counsel and the Charging Party, the evidence does not establish that the search indicated by the affidavit was exhaustive nor does it establish that the use, if any, made of the notice forms was as envisioned by the Act's Section 8(d). The cases cited by all parties in support of their respective positions evince a more substantial proof than that offered by Respondent. Additionally, Respondent's defense relies heavily on several inferences which I am unable to draw from the facts proffered in the record. Further, the uncontroverted testimony from both sides shows that the Union did solicit the services of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and apparently with proper notice since no question was raised by any party or the FMCS. If I were to draw any inference from all the record facts it would simply be "propriety begets propriety." In view of the above, I reject Respondent's 8(d) defense on the two grounds. One, I conclude and find that Respondent's proof is insubstantial to verify the Union's failure to give notice to the State Labor Department; and two, even if Respondent's proof was substantial to prove failure of notice, Respondent's knowledge and use of such knowledge does not prevail within the necessary chronological sequence of availability of defenses.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. All production and maintenance employees employed by Respondent at its Rossville, Georgia plant, but excluding all office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitute a unit appropriate for purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

2. At all times since December 28, 1971, the Union has been, and is, the representative of a majority of the employees in the appropriate unit and by virtue of Section 9(a) of the Act has been, and is, the exclusive representative of all the employees in said unit for the purposes of collective bargaining.

3. By refusing the Union's request to see its books on July 30, Respondent has engaged in an unlawful refusal to bargain in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.

4. By withdrawing recognition from the Union about August 24, Respondent has engaged in an unlawful refusal to bargain in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.

5. By refusing to reinstate six of its striking employees, Respondent has engaged in unlawful discrimination against its striking employees in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

6. The General Counsel has not sustained her burden of proof for any other allegations in her complaint.

7. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find it necessary to [illegible]

spondent to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that Respondent discriminatorily refused to reinstate Margaret Brogdon, Henry Percy, Wanda Creekmore, Edna Watt, Lamar Scott, and Renee Wyatt, its striking employees, I find it necessary to order it to offer them full reinstatement to their former positions or, if those positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, with backpay computed on a quarterly basis and interest thereon to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977),[10] from the date they would have been reinstated by seniority and classification to the date of proper offer of reinstatement.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended[11]

ORDER

The Respondent, Burner Systems International, Inc., Rossvile, Georgia, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with the Union by refusing the Union's request to see the financial records of the Company and by withdrawing recognition from the Union.

(b) Refusing to reinstate its striking employees following their unconditional application to return to work.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request of the Union, bargain collectively with it as the exclusive representative of Respondent's employees in the unit described above and disclose to the Union its financial records to further the bargaining obligation.

(b) Offer to reinstate Margaret Brogdon, Henry Percy, Wanda Creekmore, Edna Watt, Lamar Scott, and Renee Wyatt to their prestrike positions and make each whole in the manner provided in the remedy section herein.

(c) Expunge from its files any references to the failure to reinstate and the reasons therefor, for each of the employees named above and notify each in writing that this has been done and that evidence of the failure to reinstate or the reasons therefor will not be used as a basis for future personnel actions against them.

(d) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(e) Post at its plant in Rossville, Georgia, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[12] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 10, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

IT IS ALSO ORDERED that the complaint be dismissed insofar as it alleges violations of the Act not specifically found.

[10] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[11] If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[12] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

A-1 Fire Protection, Inc., and Corcoran Automatic Sprinklers, Inc. and Road Sprinkler Fitters Local 669, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing & Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO. Case 7-CA-12659

14 December 1984

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN DOTSON AND MEMBERS ZIMMERMAN AND HUNTER

On 27 June 1980 the National Labor Relations Board, on remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia,[1] issued a Supplemental Decision and Order in this proceeding,[2] reaffirming its prior Decision and Order[3] finding, inter alia, that the Respondent, A-1 Fire Protection, Inc. (A-1) and Corcoran Automatic Sprinklers, Inc. (CAS), also referred to as "Corcoran," did not violate Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by refusing to apply the 1975–1977 collective-bargaining agreement between CAS and the Union to employees of A-1 and/or by transferring unit work from CAS to A-1.[4]

On 27 April 1982, on the Union's petition for review of the Board's Supplemental Decision and Order, the court of appeals again remanded the case to the Board, specifically "for explanation and application of the proper legal standard" on the transfer-of-work allegation.[5] On 4 August 1982 the Board accepted the court's remand and notified the parties that they could file statements of position on the issues raised by the remand. On 14 February 1983 the Board, after considering the statements of position, the court opinions, and the entire record, issued an Order remanding the proceeding for a further hearing before Administrative Law Judge Phil W. Saunders.[6] The Board's Order directed the judge to make findings of fact concerning, but not limited to, certain questions specified in the Order, and to issue a supplemental decision limited to findings of fact on the issues raised by the court's remand.

On 26 July 1982 Administrative Law Judge Phil W. Saunders issued the attached supplemental decision. The Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Union filed a brief in opposition to the Respondent's exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the supplemental decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the judge's rulings and findings.[7] Based on those findings, described below, the Board makes the following further findings and conclusions, and issues the following Supplemental Order.

As indicated above, the Board in its supplemental decision concluded that the Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by refusing to extend the CAS contract to A-1 or by transferring work from CAS to A-1. Regarding the transfer-of-work allegation, the Board, although noting that the work of CAS has decreased while that of A-1 had increased during 1975 and 1976, relied on its previous findings that the Union was aware of A-1's existence as early as January 1975 and had assented to the Respondent's use of CAS employees for A-1 jobs; and that no jobs bid for and performed by CAS were transferred to A-1.[8] Regarding the extension-of-contract allegation, the Board again relied on its previous findings that the Union had "assented, however grudgingly, to the Respondent's 'double-breasted' operations and that the Union had 'acquiesced' to the existing conditions during the negotiations for the 1975 CAS contract."[9] The Board thus found that there was a voluntary agreement on a bargaining unit limited in scope to the CAS employees and that the Union therefore did not have any statutory right to repre-

[1] Road Sprinkler Fitters Local 669 v. NLRB, 600 F.2d 918 (1979).

[2] 250 NLRB 217.

[3] 233 NLRB 38 (1977).

[4] The court of appeals had remanded the 8(a)(5) portion of the case for a fuller explication of the Board's rationale in dismissing the 8(a)(5) allegations. At the same time, however, the court affirmed the Board's finding that the Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(3) and (4) by discharging and/or refusing to hire Michael Nunn, and it enforced the Board's Order in that regard.

[5] 676 F.2d 826 (1982). Regarding the extension-of-contract allegation, the court found that the Board's supplemental decision stated satisfactory grounds for finding that the Union had no "independent" statutory right to have its contract with CAS extended to A-1. The court cautioned, however, that its affirmance of the Board on this issue "must be read narrowly" and that the extension of the CAS contract to A-1 might still be warranted as a "prophylactic remedy" for the Respondent's violation of another statutory obligation. Id. at 830.

[6] Not published in Board volumes.

[7] The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

[8] 250 NLRB at 219. The Board relied on the absence of evidence of deception or transfer of work to distinguish the instant case from Burgess Construction, 227 NLRB 765 (1977), enfd. 596 F.2d 378 (9th Cir. 1979), which was cited by the General Counsel.

[9] Id. at 221.

sent or otherwise have its contract extended to A-1 employees.[10]

Reviewing the Board's disposition of the transfer-of-work allegation, the court observed that the Board still had not confronted the central issues raised by the Union's claim, which the court set forth as follows: "[W]hether Corcoran changed the scope of CAS' activities or changed the method of allocating work between CAS and A-1 so as to have caused the CAS bargaining unit to lose work which, in light of Corcoran's past practices, CAS would otherwise have been expected to perform."[11] The court found, in this regard, that in neither of its decisions had the Board made any findings as to the actual practices by which the Respondent solicited work for CAS and A-1, nor had the Board "confronted the ALJ's conclusion, based in part on credibility determinations left undisturbed by the Board, that Corcoran did indeed disturb the status quo . . . by 'chang[ing] work arrangements' so as to divert work from CAS to A-1."[12]

Thus, in remanding the case to the Board for the second time, the court included the following specific instructions:

> The Board should determine whether Corcoran engaged in conduct that deprived CAS of work which, in light of Corcoran's past practice, CAS would otherwise have been expected to perform. If the Board finds that Corcoran did engage in such conduct, it should either apply the "clear and unmistakable" standard to test whether the union agreed to that conduct, or explain why a different standard is appropriate. If it concludes that there was an unwaived denial of the union's statutory rights, it should devise an appropriate remedy, which may, if warranted, include extension of the CAS collective-bargaining agreement to employees of A-1.[13]

The court made several additional points for the Board's consideration on remand. It stated that the absence of evidence that the Respondent engaged in deception or misrepresentation in obtaining work for A-1 should not be dispositive;[14] that the Board's reliance on the absence of evidence that the CAS unit ceased to exist was not consistent with precedent;[15] and that the transfer-of-work allegation was not so narrow as to encompass only work already awarded to CAS and later reassigned to A-1.[16]

As indicated above, after accepting the remand and receiving statements of position from all of the parties, the Board found that a further hearing was necessary to resolve the issues of fact raised by the court's remand. In its Order remanding the case to the judge, the Board included directions for the judge to make findings of fact concerning, but not limited to, the following:

> [W]hether CAS bid only on jobs requiring union labor or also bid on other jobs; if the latter, on what basis did Corcoran submit bids from CAS rather than from A-1; whether, during 1975, Corcoran stopped submitting bids from CAS or continued to submit bids but was no longer successful; whether A-1 performed any work originally bid from and awarded to CAS; and whether A-1's performance of work for former customers of CAS occurred at the suggestion of such customers or of Corcoran.

The Board also stated that the parties would be permitted to adduce evidence at the hearing about relevant events that occurred since the August 1976 hearing, including the alleged cessation of operations by CAS.[17]

In his supplemental decision the judge stated that he found nothing in the remand hearing to change his initial findings that the Respondent "changed work arrangements so as to reduce the amount of work for the employees of [CAS] and that since early 1975 George Corcoran operated A-1 with the apparent purpose of ultimately dissolving [CAS]." The judge reiterated his previous findings, which were based on credibility resolutions, that in the fall of 1975 Corcoran stated, inter alia, that he generally only laid off union members but that nonunion members of A-1 were never laid off; that he would shortly "phase out" CAS and that A-1 would take over the sprinkler work; and that in a 6-month period there would be less people working for CAS. The judge also reiterated his findings, inter alia, that in 1976 CAS obtained only one job; A-1 had begun performing installations for former customers of CAS; and the Alma College job, [10] Id. at 220. Then-Chairman Fanning, dissenting, found that the judge's factual findings—which were undisputed by the majority—supported the conclusion that the Respondent employed its double-breasted operations in a manner which unlawfully undermined the CAS bargaining unit. Thus relying, inter alia, on credited statements by the Respondent indicating an intent to "phase out" CAS, the former Chairman observed that although the Union may have consented—after the fact—to the Respondent's double-breasted operations, "it certainly did not consent to the one it got." 250 NLRB at 222.

[11] 676 F.2d at 831–832.

[12] Id. at 833–834.

[13] Id. at 834.

[14] Id. at 833.

[15] Id. at 834 fn. 21. The court also indicated, in this regard, that the Board was "free to decide in the first instance whether anything in our present opinion should cause it to allow the record to be reopened." Id. at 829 fn. 10.

[16] Id. at 833 fn. 19.

[17] See fn. 15 above.

which had been transferred from A-1 to CAS, was retransferred back to A-1 immediately after the Union filed the instant unfair labor practice charge. The judge further noted Corcoran's 15 November 1975 letter to the Union rejecting the Union's request that A-1 be covered by the contract, in which Corcoran stated that A-1 was performing "the small jobs that were being done by other company's then sprinklers company's [sic]."

The judge found, based on the new evidence adduced on remand, that the bidding process under which the Respondent obtained all of its sprinkler installation jobs was open to union and nonunion contractors alike; that union sprinkler contractors sometimes obtained jobs through direct subcontracting with nonunion general contractors; and that nonunion sprinkler contractors sometimes obtained jobs directly from union general contractors. The judge thus found that there were no market conditions requiring the Respondent to "phase out" CAS and no external economic circumstances mandating the takeover of work by A-1. The judge also found that after performing only two "significant" jobs in 1975 A-1 performed 24 jobs in 1976, 8 of which were for a substantial amount of money and 7 of which were for former customers of CAS, while CAS obtained only 1 or 2 small jobs in 1976 and by November 1976 was inactive.

The judge rejected each of the Respondent's explanations for ceasing to bid jobs for CAS in November 1976 and thereafter bidding solely for A-1. Regarding the asserted lack of employees, the judge found that CAS had no employees because the Respondent had laid them off and never called the Union or otherwise advertised for new CAS employees. Regarding the alleged "harassment" by the Union, the judge found that the Union peacefully picketed only A-1 jobs, not CAS jobs, and that the Union took internal disciplinary actions only against union members who worked with nonunion A-1 employees in violation of the Union's bylaws. The judge also found that the Respondent's reliance on A-1's lower labor costs was undermined by the fact that A-1 also performed "prevailing wage" jobs which required payment of the union wage scale.

The judge also made factual findings on the issue of whether the Union agreed to a diversion of unit work or waived its rights, if any, to protest the diversion of work from CAS to A-1. The judge found that the 1975 CAS contract did not reflect any such agreement or waiver inasmuch as it prohibited "any sale [or] transfer . . . to evade the terms of this agreement" and further prohibited signatory contractors from subcontracting unit work to nonsignatory contractors. The judge further found no evidence that the subject of transferring or diverting unit work was discussed during the 1975 or 1977 contract negotiations.

In answer to the specific questions contained in the Board's remand order, the judge found that until late 1975 CAS performed all jobs of significant size; that CAS did not bid on nonunion jobs; that in 1975 CAS still submitted numerous bids, but from about mid-1975 onward A-1 took over more and more of the Respondent's installation work until the Respondent completely stopped bidding for CAS in November 1976; that in addition to retransferring the Alma College job from CAS to A-1 the Respondent obtained another job for A-1 by submitting a lower bid than for CAS; and that there was no evidence that any CAS customers expressly requested bids from A-1.

Finally, regarding the Respondent's contention that it had not been shown that any work performed by A-1 would have been awarded to CAS if A-1 had not bid on it, the judge found that CAS would have obtained some jobs, at least from its former customers, had A-1 not bid. In so finding, the judge relied, inter alia, on the Respondent's statements and conduct, described above, as showing hostility toward the Union, and on evidence that other union contractors were successful in obtaining jobs in competition with nonunion contractors.

Applying the court's opinion as the law of the case, and based on the judge's factual findings, with which we agree, we find that the Respondent deliberately diverted unit work from CAS to A-1 in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1).[18] As formulated by the court, the allocation of work to a bargaining unit is a term or condition of employment which cannot be changed without bargaining with, or waiver by, the employees' collective-bargaining representative. We are now persuaded, based on the judge's factual findings, that the Respondent unilaterally changed its method of allocating work between CAS and A-1 so as to have caused the CAS unit to lose work which it otherwise would have performed.

We particularly rely on the judge's findings that the change in the relative economic fortunes of CAS and A-1 was not due to external economic circumstances, but rather was due to a change in the Respondent's bidding practices. As found by [18] Although we note that the 1973 collective-bargaining agreement between CAS and the Union was a "prehire" contract, for the purposes of this decision we find it unnecessary to pass on the effect of Sec. 8(f) on the Union's status as collective-bargaining representative at the time of the alleged unlawful diversion of unit work. We further note that the Board's previous disposition of this issue is not within the scope of the court's remand.

the judge, from its inception in 1973 to the fall of 1975, CAS was a successful union firm performing sprinkler installation jobs of significant size, while A-1 primarily was performing inspections, repairs, and some small installation jobs. From about mid-1975 onward, however, while it was still bidding jobs for CAS, the Respondent was now bidding and obtaining more and larger installation jobs for A-1, including from former customers of CAS, until it eventually stopped bidding altogether for CAS.

As the judge recognized, these changes in the Respondent's bidding practices must be considered in the context of the Respondent's statements and conduct in late 1975-early 1976 which indicate a deliberate intent to divert work from CAS to A-1. In this regard, we particularly note Corcoran's statements in November 1975 that he would "phase out" CAS and have A-1 take over the sprinkler work and that in 6 months there would be fewer employees working for CAS. We also rely on Corcoran's conduct in retransferring the Alma College job from CAS to A-1 after the instant charge was filed in January 1976.

Further, unlike in the Board's prior decisions in this proceeding, we view the Respondent's November 1975 letter to the Union as indicating an element of deception in the Respondent's use of A-1. In that letter the Respondent advised the Union that A-1 was performing small jobs other than those done by sprinkler companies, while at that time A-1 was beginning to perform more and more of the kinds of jobs previously performed only by CAS. Moreover, Corcoran's letter was in response to the Union's request that A-1 be covered by the CAS contract on the grounds that it was performing unit work. Thus, it appears that the Respondent deliberately was attempting to mislead the Union as to the true nature of A-1.[19]

Having found that the Union had a statutory right to bargain about the Respondent's diversion of unit work from CAS to A-1, we turn now to the question of whether the Union waived its bargaining rights. In Metropolitan Edison Co. v. NLRB,[20] the Supreme Court reaffirmed the longstanding principle that a waiver of statutory rights must be "clear and unmistakable."[21] The Court also recognized that assessing the clarity of a waiver required consideration of the specific circumstances of each case.[22] Considering the specific circumstances of the instant case, we find that the Union did not clearly and unmistakably waive its statutory right to bargain about the diversion of unit work from CAS to A-1.

In this regard, we particularly rely on the judge's finding that the 1975 collective-bargaining agreement between CAS and the Union explicitly prohibited "any transfer . . . to evade the terms of the agreement." Moreover, it is undisputed that the subject of diversion of work was not raised, let alone discussed, either at the 1975 negotiations which resulted in a contract or at the 1977 negotiations which did not. Finally, although the Union may have assented to Corcoran's January 1975 request that employees of CAS be allowed to work for A-1, there is no support in the record for finding that the Union agreed at that time, or at any other time, to what amounted to the wholesale diversion of unit work from CAS to A-1 until CAS ultimately became inactive.

Based on all of the above, we conclude that the Respondent's failure and refusal to bargain regarding the transfer or diversion of unit work from CAS to A-1 was violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1). Accordingly, we vacate our 27 June 1980 Order dismissing the 8(a)(5) and (1) allegations of the complaint, and we shall issue the appropriate remedy for the violation found herein.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by failing and refusing to bargain about the diversion of unit work, we shall order the Respondent to cease and desist from unilaterally diverting work without providing the Union an opportunity to bargain thereon.[23] In order to ensure that genuine bargaining takes place regarding any diversion of unit work, we shall order the Respondent to restore the status quo ante by resuming bidding jobs for CAS in the same manner as it bid jobs for CAS prior to the unlawful diversion of unit work. We also shall order the Respondent to make whole former CAS employees for any losses of earnings and other benefits resulting from the unlawful diversion of unit work.[24]

[19] We therefore find that the instant case is more akin to Burgess Construction, above, than we initially believed.

[20] 460 U.S. 693 (1983).

[21] Id. at 1477.

[22] Id. at 1478.

[23] We also find that the broad injunctive language "in any other manner" is appropriate in view of the court of appeals' affirmance of the Board's Order in 233 NLRB 38 insofar as it remedied the 8(a)(3) and (4) violation and included the same injunctive language.

[24] Any determinations necessitated by this remedy shall be left to compliance.

Member Hunter, however, would not provide a make-whole remedy in light of the evidence adduced on remand indicating that the CAS employees employed at the time of the diversion of work were not laid off but rather voluntarily quit their employment, and there is no allegation of unlawful constructive discharge.

Backpay shall be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), plus interest as computed in Florida Steel Corp., 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[25]

We, however, do not find it appropriate here to order the extension of the CAS collective-bargaining agreement to the employees of A-1 as a "prophylactic" remedy or otherwise. The 1975 collective-bargaining agreement expired in 1977 without a successor agreement having been reached. Moreover, as we previously have found, and the court of appeals has affirmed, CAS and A-1 did not constitute a single appropriate unit although they constituted a single employer.[26] In these circumstances, we find that the order provisions described above will adequately and fully remedy the violation found herein.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, A-1 Fire Protection, Inc., and Corcoran Automatic Sprinklers, Inc., Clio, Michigan, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with Road Sprinkler Fitters Local 669, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing & Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL–CIO by diverting unit work from Corcoran Automatic Sprinklers, Inc. (CAS) to A-1 Fire Protection, Inc. (A-1) without affording the Union an opportunity to bargain thereon.

(b) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) On request resume bidding jobs for CAS under bidding practices as they existed prior to the unlawful diversion of unit work.

(b) Make whole former CAS employees for any losses of earnings and other benefits resulting from the unlawful diversion of unit work, in the manner set forth in The Remedy section of this decision.

(c) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its facility in Clio, Michigan, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[27] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 7, after being signed by the Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt and maintained for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps the Respondent has taken to comply.

[25] See generally Isis Plumbing Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[26] Cf. Burgess Construction, 227 NLRB 765 (1977), in which the Board's remedy provided for the extension of a still-current collective-bargaining agreement to the nonunion side of a double-breasted operation which was found to constitute a single appropriate unit. Also cf. Appalachian Construction, 235 NLRB 685 (1978), in which a single employer/single appropriate unit finding provided support for the Board's extension-of-contract remedy.

[27] If this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively with Road Sprinkler Fitters Local 669, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing & Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL–CIO by diverting unit work from Corcoran Automatic Sprinklers, Inc. to A-1 Fire Protection, Inc. without affording the Union an opportunity to bargain thereon.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of the rights guaranteed you by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, on request, resume bidding jobs for CAS under bidding practices as they existed prior to the diversion of unit work from CAS to A-1.

WE WILL make whole former CAS employees for any losses of earnings and other benefits resulting from the diversion of unit work, less any net interim earnings, plus interest.

A-1 Fire Protection, Inc., and Corcoran Automatic Sprinklers, Inc.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION

Phil W. Saunders, Administrative Law Judge. This matter has considerable background and history and, therefore, I will outline below some of the major procedural and factual aspects of this prolonged dispute.

Based on an original charge filed on January 13, 1976, by Road Sprinkler Fitters Local 669, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing & Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO (Local 669, the Charging Party, or the Union) an amended complaint against Corcoran Automatic Sprinklers, Inc. (Respondent, Corcoran, or CAS), and A-1 Fire Protection Inc. (A-1), and collectively called Respondents or Employer, was issued on May 18, 1976, alleging violations of Section 8(a)(1), (3), (4), and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act.

In 1973, as the records, Board, and court decisions in this case duly reflect, George Corcoran formed two corporations, CAS and A-1, to install fire sprinklers. Corcoran intended to carry on a "double-breasted" operation, which would allow the nonunion company, A-1, to bid on installation jobs that did not require union contractors, and allows CAS to bid on jobs that required union contractors.[1] Soon after the corporations were formed, Corcoran, the owner and president of both corporations, entered into a contract with Local 669 covering CAS's employees who install and maintain fire protection systems. The Union was not aware of the existence of A-1 when it signed the CAS contract. Later that year, however, Roy Pantall, then Local 669's business agent, learned of A-1 and advised George Corcoran that A-1 could not bid on nonunion work because such work belonged to the Union and CAS.

In 1975, A-1 began hiring employees to install and maintain fire protection systems and, in January 1975, George Corcoran told Roy Pantall that he was forced to lay off CAS employees, but could hire them to work for A-1. After Pantall grudgingly assented to this arrangement, Corcoran employed a few men to work for A-1 and, although Corcoran paid them union scale wages, he did not compensate them for union benefits. Later in the same month, Pantall left his position as business agent for a new job with the Union.

In late April 1975, Michael Johnson became the new union business agent. On May 1, 1975, George Corcoran entered into a second contract with Local 669 covering CAS employees, but before signing the agreement, the Union did not request that the contract cover A-1 or its employees. Johnson later testified that Pantall had not told him that A-1 was only engaged in installation work. However, by late fall it was apparent that the Union had some knowledge that A-1 was operating as a nonunion company installing fire protection systems. In November 1975, the Union demanded that CAS and A-1 employees be treated as a single bargaining unit, and that the 1975 collective-bargaining agreement be applied to A-1.

Based on an original charge filed on January 13, 1976, as aforestated, a hearing was held before me on August 2 and 3, 1976, on 8(a)(1), (3), (4), and (5) allegations contained in the amended complaint. On December 28, 1976, I issued a decision holding that the refusal to recognize the Union as the collective-bargaining representative of all employees, and the transfer of work from CAS to A-1, violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act. I also found that CAS and A-1 formed a single employer for collective-bargaining purposes; that George Corcoran had changed work assignments to reduce the amount of work for CAS; and that the sprinkler fitters of CAS and A-1 together formed a single appropriate bargaining unit. I further held that the Union had not engaged in any actions that would, by estoppel or waiver theories, forestall a finding that the Employer violated Section 8(a)(5). Finally, I found that the Employer had violated Section 8(a)(3) and (4) of the Act by refusing to hire Michael Nunn in retaliation for the Union's filing of an unfair labor practice charge.

An appeal of this decision was then taken to the National Labor Relations Board, and on October 18, 1977, the Board issued its decision dismissing the 8(a)(5) violations, but affirming findings of 8(a)(3) and (4) violations.[2]

Timely appeals and cross-appeals were then filed with the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia by all parties. On April 11, 1979, the court of appeals' decision issued, 600 F.2d 918 (D.C. Cir. 1979), and the court's decision affirmed the finding of the 8(a)(3) and (4) violations, but remanded the 8(a)(5) violations back to the Board for further consideration on the questions of refusing to bargain and in the extension of the terms of the CAS contract with the Charging Party

[1] A "double-breasted" operation is one in which a contractor operates two companies, one unionized and the other nonunionized. Depending on how the companies are structured and operated, each may be a separate corporation or else both may be so interrelated that they constitute a single employer or one may be the alter ego of the other. A collective-bargaining contract signed by one of the companies would not bind the other if each were a separate corporation, but would bind the other if both constitute a single employer and the employees of both companies constitute a single appropriate bargaining unit or the nonsignatory company is an alter ego of the signatory company. Associated General Contractors of California, 242 NLRB 891, 892 fn. 5 (1979), enfd. as modified 633 F.2d 766 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied 452 U.S. 915 (1981); Burgess Construction, 227 NLRB 765, 770–771, 773–774 (1977), enfd. 596 F.2d 378 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied 444 U.S. 940 (1979); George C. Shearer Exhibitors Delivery, 262 NLRB 622, 623–624 (1982), enfd. mem. 714 F.2d 124 (3d Cir. 1983).

[2] The Board accepted my findings of fact and also affirmed the holding that the refusal to hire Michael Nunn violated Sec. 8(a)(3) and (4) of the Act. A-1 Fire Protection, 233 NLRB 39 fn. 2 (1977). The Board held, however, that the Employer did not violate Sec. 8(a)(5) either by refusing to extend the terms of the CAS collective-bargaining agreement to A-1 or by transferring work from CAS to A-1. The Board held that the Union had, by its prior actions, given up the right to demand that the CAS agreement apply to A-1 workers. Specifically, the Board decided that the parties had not intended the 1975 agreement to cover A-1 employees and that the Union, "at least inferentially, stipulated as to the appropriateness of the unit." With respect to my conclusion that Corcoran violated Sec. 8(a)(5) by transferring the work from CAS to A-1, the Board stated that Corcoran was free to use CAS or A-1 in any fashion he saw fit, and that the Union had accepted the "double-breasted" situation.

to cover and include A-1 and its employees and the transfer, bidding, and/or subcontracting of work or jobs from CAS to A-1 so as to reduce the amount of bargaining unit work under the contract.

On June 27, 1980, the Board, on remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, issued its Supplemental Decision and Order[3] reaffirming its prior Order in which it, inter alia, dismissed the allegations in the complaint that Respondents had violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by transferring work from CAS to A-1 and by refusing to apply the 1975 collective-bargaining agreement between CAS and the Union to employees of A-1.[4] Thereafter, the Charging Party petitioned the court of appeals for review of the Board's Supplemental Decision and Order, and on April 27, 1982, the court ordered a second remand limited to the transfer-of-work issue.

In its second opinion, dated April 27, 1982, the court of appeals found that the Board still had not "confronted the central issues raised by [the Union's] claim that [Respondent's owner] Corcoran unilaterally transferred work from CAS to A-1 without fulfilling his statutory duty to bargain.[5] The court further stated that under the traditional test of whether work has been transferred away from a bargaining unit, "the proper question in this case, leaving aside a possible 'waiver' by the union, would seem to be whether Corcoran changed the scope of CAS' activities or changed the method of allocating work between CAS and A-1 so as to have caused the CAS bargaining unit to lose work, which in light of Corcoran's past practices, CAS would otherwise have been expected to perform,"[6] and in this regard, the court of appeals found that the Board had not made any findings as to the actual practice by which work was solicited for, or assigned to, CAS and A-1. Furthermore, the court found that the Board had not "directly confronted the [Administrative Law Judge's] conclusion, based in part on the credibility determinations left undisturbed by the Board," that Corcoran had altered the status quo ""by chang[ing] work arrangements' so as to divert work from CAS to A-1 that CAS would otherwise have performed."[7] Further, concluding that a union may forgo its right to bargin about a transfer of unit work only by "waiver," and not by "acquiescence," the court found that the Board did not apply the traditional "clear and unmistakable" waiver standard or explain why a different standard was appropriate. In remanding this case for the second time to the Board, the court of appeals specifically directed the following:

> The Board should determine whether Corcoran engaged in conduct that deprived CAS of work which, in light of Corcoran's past practice, CAS would otherwise have been expected to perform. If the Board finds that Corcoran did engage in such conduct, it should either apply the "clear and unmistakable" standard to test whether the union agreed to that conduct, or explain why a different standard is appropriate. If it concludes that there was an unwaived denial of the union's statutory rights, it should devise an appropriate remedy, which may, if warranted, include the extension of the CAS collective-bargaining agreement to employees of A-1.[8]

The Board, having duly considered the court's second opinion, the parties' statement of position, and the entire record in this proceeding, found that its disposition of the instant case would be facilitated by further hearing with regard to the specific issues of fact raised by the court's second remand. Accordingly, by order dated February 14, 1983, the Board directed that this proceeding be reopened and that a further hearing be held before an administrative law judge for the limited purpose of receiving evidence as to the issues of fact raised by the court's remand and on which the administrative law judge shall make findings of fact concerning, but not limited to, the following: whether CAS bid only on jobs requiring union labor or also bid on other jobs—and if the latter on what basis did Corcoran submit bids from CAS rather than from A-1; whether, during 1975, George Corcoran stopped submitting bids from CAS or continued to submit bids but was no longer successful; whether A-1 performed any work originally bid from and awarded to CAS; and whether A-1's performance of work for former customers of CAS occurrred at the suggestion of such customers or of Corcoran. It was further ordered that upon conclusion of such hearing, the administrative law judge shall prepare and serve on the parties a supplemental decision limited to findings of fact with respect to the issues on remand.

In accordance with the above, the reopened hearing was held before me on February 22, 23, 24, and on March 21 and 22, 1984, and at the hearing considerable latitude was permitted in the introduction of testimony and exhibits for possible considerations by reviewing authorities, but for my purposes I will only consider related testimony and evidence pertaining to findings of fact on the five issues and questions specifically directed and outlined by the Board, as aforestated.[9]

[3] 250 NLRB 217.

[4] In finding that Respondents had not violated Sec. 8(a)(5) by transferring work from CAS to A-1, the Board, although noting that the work of CAS had decreased while that of A-1 had increased, again relied on the Union's knowledge of Respondent's double-breasted operations; on the absence of evidence that jobs "bid for and performed by CAS were transferred to A-1"; and on the absence of evidence that Respondent's use of the related companies involved deception or misrepresentation.

[5] 676 F.2d at 832.

[6] 676 F.2d at 831–832.

[7] 676 F.2d at 833–834.

[8] 676 F.2d at 834.

[9] The Board noted in its Order Remanding Proceeding to the Administrative Law Judge (fn. 8), the following:

> After the court's first remand, the Union filed a motion to reopen the record for the purpose of introducing evidence to show that, within three months of the close of the 1976 hearing, CAS' operations were totally discontinued and all of its unit employees were terminated. The Board denied the Union's motion as untimely in its Supplemental Decision and Order, 250 NLRB 217, fn. 3. Since we are reopening the record for further hearing as to the issues of fact raised by the court, and since the court has indicated that the Board has discretion in reopening the record, 676 F.2d at 829, fn. 10, we shall permit the parties to adduce evidence as to relevant events that occurred after the 1976 hearing, including the alleged cessation of operations by CAS. [Emphasis added.]

In the remand hearing the Charging Party called George Corcoran to the stand, and through him solicited testimony to the effect that in 1976 CAS was still a signatory to a bargaining agreement with the Union,[10] but that CAS, other than finishing a few remaining jobs, has not done any active work or business since November 1976; stated that during the period when both of his companies were active, he submitted the estimates and the competitive bids on all work, and did so for either company; testified that the kind of work that both performed is the same; that if a contractor asked him to bid nonunion, he bids nonunion, and frequently A-1 (the nonunion company) bids directly against union contractors or companies for sprinkler installation work and sometimes A-1 wins out, and at other times the union competition is successful as the low bidder.

Corcoran further testified that some of the work A-1 performs is subject to either Federal or state funds, and on those jobs he has to pay prevailing rates (equivalent to the union scale).[11] Corcoran agreed that Wares & Sons Plumbing and Heating Company is a union mechnical contractor, and he deals with them through A-1. Moreover, that he also dealt with union contractors Arms & Cole and ABI, Inc., and did business with them through A-1 on a nonunion basis.

The Charging Party introduced testimony through Robert Claflin to the effect that Claflin's employer, B. L. Harroun Company, sells, repairs, and installs sprinkler fire systems in the area and operates under a union contract with Local 669. Claflin testified that on occasions his employer also competed against nonunion companies including A-1—that one such job in mid-1983 involved an exhibition building at the Kalamazoo Fair Grounds and that B. L. Harroun Company was awarded this job as the party or builder involved wanted a union contractor. Claflin further testified that his employer also competed in 1981 and 1982 against A-1 on several other projects, but on these jobs lost the bids.[12] Claflin further testified that his employer has done repair work on a job initially installed by A-1—Welch Food in Lawton, Michigan.

Gordon Timm testified for the Charging Party that he works for Viking Fire Protection—a sprinkler contractor signatory to a bargaining agreement with Local 669, and that Viking competes for sprinkler jobs against A-1.

Timm testified that on the job for Meijer-Lansing, about 1983, 12 sprinkler contractors were involved in the bidding, and that A-1 was 1 of the 2 nonunion sprinkler companies submitting bids. Timm stated that on the Meijer Medical Center job, and also a project on which his company bid, A-1 was the low bidder among all the other union contractors.

Reference was made to a sprinkler job for Haworth, Inc. in 1983, and there was testimony by Timm that A-1 was also involved in this bidding, and the only other nonunion contractor bidding was Vander Wall Fire Protection, and that the same applies to a 1981 job in Grand Rapids involving Baker, Knapp & Tubbs, Inc.—where A-1 and Vander Wall were the only nonunion contractors bidding.[13]

Timm further testified as to a job or jobs relating to McCarthy Brothers Company and the bidders involved, and stated that A-1 was the only nonunion bidder.[14] He also testified that, on a Baker, Knapp & Tubbs' job, only A-1 and Vander Wall were nonunion bidders.[15]

The Charging Party also introduced testimony through Timm to the effect that if a management person (under a union contract) went out on a job and worked "with the tools" and installed a sprinkler system, that the bargaining agreement would then require fringe benefits contributions. Timm further stated that his company Viking Fire was asked in 1983 to inspect and repair a sprinkler system job (Hope College in Holland, Michigan) that had been installed by A-1.[16]

Jack Leadbetter testified that he is employed in the sprinkler business by Safeguard of Marquette, Inc. as its president, and that he has a bargaining relationship and contract with Local 669. Leadbetter stated that he subcontracts work from both union and nonunion contractors, and that sometimes his company, as the low bidder, is the only union trade on an otherwise nonunion contruction site. Leadbetter further testified that on several occasions within the last year his company has submitted bids against A-1—on Aircraft Organization Building at K.I. Sawyer Air Force Base; Douglas Hollis elderly facility in Houghton, Michigan; Houghton National Bank in Houghton; and also stated that some years ago his company bid on a Bayne City High School and Sheboygan Opera House remodeling job in competition with A-1. He testified that A-1 was the successful bidder on the Houghton National Bank job, but on some of the other jobs his company was the successful bidder. Leadbetter testified that quite often his company submits bids against both union and nonunion contractors for the same job.

The Employer maintains that George Corcoran had the right to bid jobs either as A-1 or CAS, and that there came a time in 1976 when CAS (the union company) was not allowed to use union fitters because the fitters were warned and harassed by Local 669 that if they went to work for A-1, they would not be able to work in the industry and, therefore, there came a point in time when CAS could not bid on any more jobs because it could not get union sprinkler fitters to work on their projects, and as a result CAS ceased bidding jobs at the end of 1976 (in November).

George Corcoran testified for Respondents that CAS is not presently active, but it is not out of business; that CAS and A-1 perform the same type of work; and that [10] The last contract between CAS and the Union was signed in 1975, but this was a 2-year contract which renewed itself automatically unless notice of cancellation was given.

[11] See C.P. Exh. 9.

[12] Planewall Paper, Charlevoix Hospital, Meadow Brook Medical Center, Welch Food, and Marianne Shops in Traverse City. He also stated that his company and A-1 bid on a Musaski job in Battle Creek, but that Midwest, a union contractor, was awarded this job.

[13] See C.P. Exh. 10(a).

[14] See C.P. Exhs. 10(b) and (c).

[15] See C.P. Exh. 10(d).

[16] Timm, who has many years of experience in this business, was unaware of any sprinkler contractor in the Jackson, Michigan area with a similar name to A-1 Fire Protection.

in early 1977 CAS gave written notice to terminate its contract with the Charging Party. In fact, this record reveals that negotiations took place with the Charging Party in 1977 and that at least three negotiation sessions took place between the parties. George Corcoran testified there was agreement and concurrence in most areas of the contract with the exception of wages, and at the last negotiation session the Employer made its final offer on those items that were remaining, but the Union did not accept the Employer's offer and no contract was signed.

George Corcoran testified that commencing with the latter part of 1975 and continuing through 1976 CAS and its employees were the constant recipients of harassment from the Charging Party. Corcoran testified that he employed several Local 669 journeymen fitters on a regular continuous basis, and identified these employee-members of Local 669 as Dan Boyce, Pete Ostrander, Phil Young, and Darrel Ochs, who was his superintendent, plus his son Francis Corcoran, but stated that once the harassment of CAS and its employees began, Dan Boyce, Phil Young, and Darrel Ochs all quit CAS's employ during the spring, summer, and fall of 1976. George Corcoran further testified that his son Francis Corcoran and Pete Ostrander were fined after the Union filed internal charges alleging that they were working the nonunion help.[17]

George Corcoran testified that there came a time when CAS was not allowed to have union fitters, aforementioned, and that it started in 1975 when Mike Johnson became the business agent. Corcoran stated that the Union harassed Dan Boyce while he was working for CAS on a job at Central High School in 1975 or 1976. Francis Corcoran testified that Business Agent Johnson appeared on the CAS job at the Grand Blanc High School job in Grand Blanc, Michigan, and also on the job involving Central High School. Employee Pete Ostrander also testified that he encountered Mike Johnson while working for CAS at Grand Blanc High School and that this instance was the basis for charges being brought against him, his being fined $500, and being expelled from the Union, as aforestated. Ostrander testified that his first harassment contact with Business Agent Mike Johnson occurred in late 1975 in Kalamazoo, Michigan, at an A & P job while he was working for CAS. He testified Johnson came onto the job and wanted to see his book, and then began asking him questions regarding his travel pay and travel allowance.[18]

George Corcoran testified he was made aware of threats to CAS and its employees made by the Charging Party during a union meeting in February 1976, and that after being made aware of these threats, he had to take the men off the job—the employees in question were working for CAS on the Cadillac Mercy Hospital job. George Corcoran further testified he bid on approximately 150 jobs for CAS in 1976. He continued bidding on jobs up until the time his union fitters quit. Corcoran testified that once the last fitter quit in 1976, he was unable to get union fitters from Local 669, and also was unable to hire journeymen off the street unless all members of Local 669 were working. As a result he did not bid CAS until after November or December 1976.[19]

Corcoran stated that he first began bidding A-1 in prevailing rate jobs in 1977, and the reason that he did not bid on prevailing jobs for CAS is because he could not get employees to do the work. Corcoran also testified that as far as he knew, his operations were the only two-company or double-breasted contractor working in the area of Mike Johnson's jurisdiction, in Michigan, when Johnson assumed the business agent position for the Charging Party, in the spring of 1975, but that nonunion companies during the 1973–1976 period were increasing and that the significance of the increase in the number of nonunion operations soon became very apparent to him in that they were able to operate at a less labor cost; their hands were not tied because of work rule limitations such as a restriction where the prefabricating work had to be done; the number and amount of fittings that are to be placed on the pipe; and the requirement that there must be two fitters on each job to do installation. He stated that the nonunion operations did not have to abide by these work rule restrictions and could operate their business as they saw fit. Additionally, George Corcoran explained other labor and cost-saving factors such as the truckdriver is able to unload the materials, where on a union operation fitters do it at a higher labor cost, and the nonunion company does all of his own work rather than having to have higher priced tradesmen to do it. George Corcoran also gave a few examples of the saving in labor cost between bidding an A-1 job and having to bid the union job, and stated the labor cost savings were substantial, and with the increased number of nonunion operations, the substantial labor cost savings, and the fact that he could no longer obtain union fitters, he ceased bidding CAS jobs, but continued to bid jobs A-1 Fire Protection.[20]

Corcoran further testified that from 1976 until 1979 Union Representative Michael Johnson showed up on 69 of his jobs, and on those 35 jobs where Corcoran was actually present, he observed Johnson talking to employees, to the general contractor and union contractors, and [17] It appears that Pete Ostrander was fined $500 and Francis Corcoran was fined $5000 and each of them was expelled from the Union. However, Francis Corcoran testified that in the end result the charges against him were dropped, and that he resigned his membership in the Union to eliminate all the hassle from Business Agent Johnson—R. Exhs. 17–20. Ostrander testified that he did not pay the fine against him, and that he also subsequently resigned from the Union. It further appears that the Union also filed internal charges aginst Dan Boyce under the allegation that he was working on a union job with nonunion help in violation of the bargaining agreement. Moreover, it was stipulated between the parties that several employees were disciplined by the Union for working for A-1, a nonsignatory contractor.

[18] Francis Corcoran testified that most of the regularly employed full-time CAS employees, previously mentioned herein, who were members of Local 669, quit CAS's employ in 1976 after either receiving threats by Local 669 or having charges filed against them, but some of these employees then went to work for A-1.

[19] While CAS did not bid nor do any work after November 1976, George Corcoran and his son Francis did complete jobs CAS previously had bid on and had not completed and as a result CAS may well have done some "wrap up work" on its jobs into 1977.

[20] Corcoran testified that in 1978 and 1979 he filed with the Board 8(b)(4) unfair labor charges against the Union alleging violations of the Act on jobs involving Genessee Valley and a job at Traverse City.

in so doing attempted to get them off the job. As a result reserve gates were put up on some of the A-1 jobs and picketing continued at the reserve gate. Corcoran stated that at the Genessee Valley job in 1979, the Union came on the scene with about 150 pickets, and injunctions were then issued against Local 669 and several other unions.[21] He stated that the Union picketed his A-1 jobs quite often.

On cross-examination, Corcoran testified that Schostak Brothers is an example of a customer of CAS that was later a customer of A-1 and admitted that the same is true for Miller Fire, De Jagger Construction, Davanay, Arms & Cole, Remer Plumbing, Spence Brothers, Mid-State, and Lawrence Properties.

Corcoran further testified and admitted that at no time after 1976 did he ever call Michael Johnson and inquire if he knew of any union sprinkler fitters available for work, but he had advertised in a local paper, on March 1, 1984, requesting fitters for his open shop company (A-1).[22]

Corcoran identified Charging Party Exhibit 15 as a purchase order from Visser Brothers for Fables Restauarant, a private prevailing wage job, to A-1 dated June 2, 1982; Charging Party Exhibit 16 is an order from Gerace Construction, a prevailing wage job, to A-1 on April 5, 1982; and Charging Party Exhibit 17 is a purchase order from L & L Construction Co., Tecumseh Plaza, to A-1 on June 22, 1982.

Francis Corcoran testified that in 1976, 1977, and 1978 Mike Johnson would come to the A-1 jobsites and inquire if he had union employees, and then after asking similar questions, would put up a picket line on some of the jobs (10 to 15 times) and the other trades would then leave the job. Francis Corcoran stated that he went directly to A-1 after leaving CAS.

Peter Ostrander testified that while he was working for A-1, starting in late 1975, Mike Johnson visited the jobs quite a few times (seven jobs) over a 4- to 5-year period, and on two occasions at the Kroger Stores in Port Huron he put up picket lines.

Robert Murray testified that he has been working for A-1 since mid-1975, but before worked for CAS. Murray stated that he worked on the CAS Grand Blanc High School job, and that Mike Johnson came to the jobsite and inquired if Murray had a membership card,[23] and when informed that he had no card, Johnson told Murray he would have to leave the job, and Murray did so. Murray also testified that he worked on a Kroger Store job in Essenville, Michigan, and Johnson came to the site and asked him if he had a card. Murray said he did not answer and just continued working. Murray could not recall if this was a job for A-1 or CAS. It appears that Murray also worked on a K-Mart job at Grand Rapids and testified that Johnson arrived at the site and wanted to give him and others a "sheet of paper" indicating the pending filing of unfair labor practice charges against A-1. Murray also recalled the A-1 job at Genessee Valley wherein about 100 men arrived on the scene and wanted employees of A-1 to leave the job because they were working for a nonunion company. He also testified that on this occasion the State Police were brought in.

The Employer argues that what must be initially remembered is the fact that the Union had been aware of A-1's existence as a nonunion company doing sprinkling installation work as early as December 1973; and was also aware that A-1 was doing the same type of work as CAS. Moreover, maintains the Employer, there were examples in 1974 and 1975 of the Union permitting A-1 to hire CAS employees to avoid having more of its members on layoff status, and the Union knowingly accepted the Respondent's double-breasted operation and permitted CAS and A-1 to compete for both union and nonunion jobs, and consented to its continued operation without challenge prior to November 1975, and in light thereof, the Board correctly determined that there had been no deprivation of work to CAS and its members, and accordingly, it was unnecessary for the Board to ascertain if in fact the Union had waived its right to bargain about the transfer of such unit work.

Counsel for Respondents further points out that the General Counsel and Charging Party have maintained in their arguments and contentions that George Corcoran deliberately diverted work to A-1, which would otherwise have gone to CAS, by submitting in behalf of A-1 a bid or bids which were lower than a bid already made for CAS; and then further maintains that this conduct is equivalent to unilaterally shifting of unit work reserved for CAS employees to A-1. The Employer, on the other hand, has always maintained that the fallacy in this argument is the assumption, unsupported by evidence, that work performed by A-1 would have been "reserved for CAS employees" if A-1 had not bid on it, and George Corcoran's testimony regarding the relative labor costs between his union operation and nonunion operation, as aforestated, more than supports the Employer's contention that CAS would not have received the work had A-1 bid on it.[24] Moreover, argues the Employer, George Corcoran's testimony revealed that during the year 1976 he bid on approximately 150 jobs on behalf of CAS and during that same period of time he bid an equal number of jobs for A-1, and it was not until the end of 1976, when all of his journeymen fitters had quit with the exception of Pete Ostrander and his son, when Corcoran was unable to obtain any more union fitters that he discontinued bidding jobs on behalf of CAS.

[21] By letter dated December 21, 1978, mechanical contractor Wares & Sons was advised by Local 669 that the Union had a dispute with A-1 and that they intended to engage in peaceful picketing at the Traverse City Hospital job. See C.P. Exh. 12.

[22] It appears that from time to time sprinkler fitters solicit their own jobs. Corcoran stated that you hired members of the Union first, and then if not supplied, you had the right to go on the street and pick up a man and pay him the fitter's wages and benefits.

[23] Murray testified that he sought admission to the apprenticeship program of Local 669 on three occasions (first time in October 1974), but was never admitted because during that period people in the area were being laid off.

[24] Corcoran also testified that A-1's labor costs were approximately 90 percent less than those of CAS and that the percentage figure has maintained its constancy from 1974 through the present. Corcoran stated that labor costs represented approximately 28 percent of A-1's total costs, but the figure was significantly higher for CAS and other union employer operations.

Respondents maintain that the existence of double-breasted operations whereby a single owner operates two companies—one union and one nonunion—is common in the construction industry and its legitimacy has been long recognized—South Prairie Construction Co. v. Operating Engineers Local 627, 425 U.S. 800 (1976), and, as a result of such decision, both a union and nonunion employer can exist side by side competing for the same general type of work without there being illegal transfers of work, deprivations of work, or subcontracting of work in violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act, and that under such double-breasted operations each company bids on jobs which the other cannot, or may not be able to obtain. Moreover, it is also recognized that on certain jobs contracts can only be awarded to unionized firms—see Donald Schriver, Inc. v. NLRB, 635 F.2d 859 (D.C. Cir. 1980)—and the work on such jobs may be viewed as "reserved" for employees of unionized companies for there is no possibility that nonunion companies can get the subcontract no matter how low their bids. On the other hand, argues the Employer, on jobs which do not have to be subcontracted to unionized companies, the lowest bidder will normally get the subcontract, and it can be expected nonunion companies, which have lower labor costs than union ones, are able to submit lower bids, as George Corcoran so testified. Therefore, the two companies in a double-breasted operation work in essentially different markets, and the size of the two markets is not constant—demands may decrease for one company's work and increase for the other, and if such happens the employer is not guilty of "diverting" work to one company which has been "reserved" for the employees of the other company and cannot be required to bargain about conditions over which it has no control. Cf. Brockway Motor Trucks v. NLRB, 582 F.2d 720, 729, 733 (3d Cir. 1978).

The Employer maintains the evidence here shows no more than this—that CAS and A-1 were simultaneously created, that the purpose of forming CAS was to do union construction jobs, that through this entire period of time CAS earnings were always larger than A-1 and continued to increase through 1975 despite the existence of A-1 and until the time CAS was unable to obtain further union help CAS and A-1 were operating in separate markets. Moreover, there was only one instance where both CAS and A-1 bid on the same job and that was on the insistence of the contractor that it be done, but on those jobs requiring unionized contractors A-1 could not bid nor compete for such jobs and thus could not take work away from CAS. The decline in CAS's ability to be a successful bidder for jobs and projects was attributable to the fact that more and more nonunion contractors came into being and were able to undercut CAS and all other union contractors on those jobs not requiring all the contractors be union contractors. Therefore, the Employer contends the decrease in work for CAS can properly be attributed to declining demand for contracts to be performed under union conditions rather than a diversion of work through A-1 which otherwise CAS would have performed. Furthermore, argues counsel for Respondents, in the very latter part of 1976 and subsequent thereto, George Corcoran determined that he would cease submitting bids on behalf of CAS as he did not employ two journeymen fitters which was necessary under the Union's contract to perform any job. This occurred only after the Charging Party had caused all of CAS's journeymen fitters to quit, with the exception of Pete Ostrander, whom the Union had expelled, and CAS was not able to obtain any other union journeymen fitters.

Counsel for Respondents, in concluding his argument, contends that as time went on there was an increase and proliferation of nonunion sprinkler fitting companies, but no evidence was adduced which would support a finding that jobs subsequently obtained by A-1 would have gone to CAS had George Corcoran bid on them in behalf of CAS, that it was only after CAS ceased bidding on jobs when A-1 began performing work for a few customers CAS had previously worked for—that during the period of time prior to the close of the initial hearing in August 1976, the testimony of the Charging Party's agent revealed that many of its members were out of work, and from this the indication that not only CAS but other unionized firms generally were suffering from a decline in business. The Employer argues that it was this general decline in overall business, rather than any manipulations by George Corcoran, which caused the decline experienced by CAS. An inference that CAS lost work because of a decline in its market is amply warranted, as is the conclusion that work gained by A-1 was work which would not have been awarded to CAS in any event—that A-1 was under no obligation to refrain from bidding on sprinkling-fitting work, and in the absence of a showing the work would otherwise have gone to CAS, it cannot be said that the work was "transferred" out of the CAS bargaining unit.

Counsel for Respondents, in summary, maintains that an unlawful transfer of unit work is not established merely by showing that the work of CAS decreased while that of A-1 increased. Rather, it must be shown that A-1 and CAS engaged in some kind of conduct which resulted in A-1's obtaining work that would otherwise have been performed by CAS, and no such showing has been made. Thus, Respondents contend that neither the General Counsel nor the Charging Party has proven that CAS transferred work to A-1 in violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act through a process of bidding, subcontracting, transferring, or depriving CAS and its employees of work that they would have otherwise performed.

Final Conclusions

As the court of appeals recognized, the administrative law judge made certain findings of fact and credibility resolutions based on the record evidence after the initial hearing in 1976 which pertain directly to the "transfer of work" issue and which were not disturbed by the Board on its review of the case. 676 F.2d at 833–834; A-1 Fire Protection, 233 NLRB 38 fn. 1 (1977).

Specifically the judge found that George Corcoran "changed work arrangements so as to reduce the amount of work for the employees of [CAS]" and that "since early 1975 George Corcoran operated A-1 with the apparent purpose of ultimately dissolving [CAS]." The administrative law judge further noted in his initial decision, inter alia, the following:

> Thus, in November 1975, George Corcoran, in reply to a question by [employee] Gary Sears regarding his employment security as a sprinkler fitter for A-1, stated that he generally only laid off union members but that nonunion employees of A-1 were never laid off. On this occasion George Corcoran also advised Sears that he would shortly phase out Respondent Corcoran [CAS] and that A-1 would take over the sprinkler work. Similarly, at a hearing in the fall of 1975 involving internal union charges against his son, as aforementioned, George Corcoran told Business Agent Johnson and others present that in a 6-month period there would be less people working for Respondent Corcoran. Moreover, the General Counsel's exhibit also clearly indicates that the gross earnings of A-1 have continually increased. In 1976 Respondent Corcoran had just one job, and George Corcoran likewise conceded that much of the work now being done by A-1 is being done for customers like Kroger stores and K-Mart, which were previously customers of Respondent Corcoran. Plainly, but for George Corcoran's attempts to rid himself of Respondent Corcoran and the Union, Respondent Corcoran would have performed this work. These arrangements, of course, had a serious and adverse impact on the work of the unit employees working for Respondent Corcoran and, in relation thereto, this record shows that while A-1 employed no sprinkler fitters until 1975, it now employs approximately 7 fitters, but just the opposite has occurred at Respondent Corcoran, who now employs only 2 sprinkler fitters while not so long ago it employed approximately 10. It follows from the foregoing that by so doing, and transferring work for Respondent Corcoran to A-1, Respondents withdrew and withheld recognition from the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. [233 NLRB at 43 and 44.]

As pointed out, the original 1976 record also contained two clear examples of the transfer of work from CAS to A-1. Corcoran admitted that in January 1976 he transferred one job from A-1 to CAS in the hope of appeasing the Union but, after the underlying unfair labor practice charges were filed, the job was transferred back to A-1. 233 NLRB at 44–45. The original record also reflects an incident when Corcoran first submitted a bid to Englehart Construction on behalf of CAS and then called back and obtained the job on the basis of a lower bid on behalf of A-1.

The judge also determined that in November 1975, 6 months after the parties' second contract was signed, George Corcoran sent the Union a letter (G.C. Exh. 15) rejecting its demand to be recognized as the "bargaining representative of A-1 employees." 233 NLRB at 43. In this same letter, Corcoran represented to the Union that A-1 was not performing work within the scope of the CAS unit but instead was in the business of "sell[ing] fire extinguishers, smoke detectors, alarms, kitchen hood systems, inspection of sprinkler systems and the small jobs that were being done by other companys than sprinklers companys."

There has been nothing in the remand hearing—testimony, evidence, or otherwise—to change or alter in any way my conclusions and findings, as aforestated, in the initial 1976 decision.

Before turning to evaluating the evidence adduced at the remand hearing, it is necessary to briefly define the sprinkler installation market in which CAS and later A-1 have operated. As indicated, and according to George Corcoran himself, all his sprinkler jobs are obtained pursuant to a bidding process open to both union and nonunion contractors which compete directly against one another. Sometimes Corcoran's nonunion A-1 company has been successful when bidding against union sprinkler contractors, and sometimes it has not, as the union contractor is the low bidder. Corcoran further admitted that A-1 obtains work through direct subcontracting with union general contractors and, on occasions, performs work on jobs together with union trades.

At the remand hearing in February and March 1984, representatives of three sprinkler contractors—Claflin, Timms, and Leadbetter—all signatory to agreements with the Union and in business in the State of Michigan, testified, and in so doing confirmed Corcoran's statements that union contractors in Michigan are free to bid on all jobs and that their companies compete for work and bid directly against A-1 and other nonunion companies. Conversely to A-1's business dealings with union general contractors, union sprinkler contractors often obtain work by subcontracting directly from nonunion general contractors, as Jack Leadbetter testified. Moreover, it was also established that union sprinkler contractors have, on a number of occasions, been the only union trade on an otherwise open shop construction job. Thus, as pointed out, there have been no market conditions requiring Corcoran to phase out CAS, and no external economic circumstances to mandate the takeover of CAS's sprinkler work by A-1.

As has been set forth previously herein, in 1973, CAS was established and became signatory to its first collective-bargaining agreement with Local 669, and from 1973 until late 1976, CAS employees performed bargaining unit work defined essentially as the installation and maintenance of automatic fire protection systems pursuant to the terms of the applicable collective-bargaining agreement. A-1 was likewise established in 1973, but it remains unclear when A-1 first became active in the business of sprinkler installation. As noted, Respondents submitted a summary of jobs performed by A-1 (R. Exh. 13) but, as pointed out by the Union, the summary fails to differentiate between unit and nonunit work and, as illustrated by the attachment to this exhibit, an unknown portion of the work included on the summary is probably not unit work. I am in agreement that during 1973 the amount of work performed by A-1, unit or nonunit, was not substantial. In 1974, compared to subsequent years, only small jobs were done, but in 1975, A-1 began to perform jobs of significant size, and this is confirmed by the fact that A-1 did not employ its first sprinkler fitter until sometime in 1975, and also by George Corcoran's November 1975 letter to Local 669, which stated that A-1 had been in the business of selling fire extinguishers, smoke detectors, alarms, and kitchen hood systems, and doing other work not performed by sprinkler companies such as CAS, as aforestated. Thus, it apparently was not until sometime during the middle or fall of 1975[25] that A-1 became significantly active in the installation of sprinkler systems, and as Corcoran had promised, CAS was thereafter phased out and the sprinkler work was taken over by A-1. During 1975, as far as it can be ascertained, CAS performed some 35 sprinkler installation jobs[26] and of the 31 or 32 jobs for which a general contractor was identified, 10 or 11 jobs were for contractors who later became customers of A-1, as previously named herein.[27] In 1976, CAS obtained only one or two small jobs.

As further detailed, after performing only two jobs of significant size in 1975 (R. Exh. 13), A-1 performed 24 jobs in 1976 including 8 substantial size jobs of over $10,000 each, and of the 18 sprinkler jobs performed by A-1 in 1976 for which a general contractor was identified 7 of the jobs were for a former customer of CAS. By November 1976, 3 months after the initial hearing in this matter and 1 month before the administrative law judge issued his decision, Corcoran stopped bidding work for CAS and it became inactive.

In all, and admittedly so, at least nine general contractors who were customers of CAS before 1976 subsequently became customers of A-1, and there is no indication in this record which would even tend to establish that any of these contractors suggested, much less insisted, that they would prefer doing business with A-1 rather than CAS.

As indicated in the testimony and arguments I have set forth previously herein, several different explanations were offered by Respondents for the decision by George Corcoran to stop bidding on behalf of CAS in November 1976, and thereafter to bid work only for A-1.

The first explanation was that union sprinkler fitters would not work for him, and that he was unable to employ sprinkler fitters for CAS. I am in agreement that if CAS had no sprinkler fitter employees it was because Corcoran had laid them off. He admittedly never called to the Union to request available employees and never advertised for CAS employees although he did advertise in the newspaper for nonunion employees for open shop A-1, as aforestated. Further, he was well aware that CAS was not required by the pertinent collective-bargaining agreement to employ only union members or to accept only referrals from the Union. Apparently, A-1 had no difficulty finding a sufficient number of qualified workers.

A second related contention made by Respondent is that CAS went out of business because of harassment by Local 669. However, a close scrutiny of the evidence reveals that the Union acted generally against only A-1 by way of peaceful picketing and demonstration, and not against CAS. Moreover, as also pointed out, the alleged harassment attributable to Local 669 was either picketing of A-1 jobs to protest its alleged unfair labor practices, along with a notice of picketing in compliance with Federal law (C.P. Exh. 12), or fining and expelling union members for working with nonunion A-1 people in violation of the Union's bylaws. There is some testimony in this record, as aforestated, that Mike Johnson came on CAS jobs and harassed employees. However, the testimony of Respondents' witnesses in this regard is not always clear as to what job they were on or what company they were working for at the time in question, but even assuming they were on CAS jobs, there is still lacking any real evidence that they were in any way harassed. If Johnson did visit these CAS jobs, about the only thing he did was ask questions which were followed by a few internal charges and dismissals because certain member employees were working with nonunion people. But the main thrust of the Union's complaints was directed against A-1, the nonunion company, and admittedly all the picketing was on the jobsites where A-1 was working. Due to such circumstances it is difficult to believe that Corcoran could not hire fitters for his CAS operations when this was his union company. In fact, counsel for the Union suggested that one would have thought that Local 669's continued protest of A-1's activities would, if anything, have encouraged bidding on behalf of CAS, but this was not the case.

It appears that the third alternate justification for George Corcoran's decision in November 1976, to close the CAS operation and to instead solicit sprinkler work through his nonunion company, was A-1's lower labor costs. As indicated, while wages paid by A-1 were undeniably below those in the pertinent union contract, this explanation was then undermined by Corcoran's admission that he bid state and Federal prevailing wage jobs through A-1 rather than CAS, even though there could have been no labor savings on these jobs.[28]

As further noted, another issue as to which the court of appeals solicited additional evidence was whether the Union "agreed" to the diversion of work from CAS to A-1 or "waived" its right to protest this otherwise illegal conduct. I am in agreement the undisputed record evidence clearly refutes any such contention.[29]

---

[25] While there is no specific date in the record for this change in business operation, Respondent witness Robert Murray testified on cross-examination that A-1 began operating out of the CAS fabrication shop during the "middle or towards the end of 1975." He recalled the time because he left the employ of CAS and joined A-1 at approximately the same time. Respondent's exhibits from the prior hearing reflect Murray's transfer from CAS to A-1 to have occurred at the end of September 1975. R. Exhs. 8 and 9.

[26] See R. Exh. 13.

[27] See R. Exh. 14.

[28] Even if labor savings were Respondents' primary motive, it has long been held that an employer may not shift work away from a bargaining unit simply because it is to his economic advantage, and the Board recently reaffirmed this principle in Otis Elevator Co., 269 NLRB 891 (1984)—that decisions made by management which turn on a direct reduction of modifications of labor costs are subjects for bargaining. There is no evidence in the instant case that CAS bargained with the Union at any time over the subject of the shift in work from CAS to A-1, and related labor costs.

[29] The employer maintains the clear and unmistakable standard, to ascertain if the Charging Party waived its right to bargain over CAS's de-

Continued

First, the relevant provisions in the 1975 agreement between the parties required that all work within the Union's trade jurisdiction be performed pursuant to its terms and prohibits "any sale [or] transfer . . . to evade the terms of this agreement." (C.P. Exh. 6, arts. 3 and 18.) The agreement also prohibited signatory contractors from subcontracting unit work to companies which were not signatory to an agreement with the Union. Thus, the contract clearly did not reflect an agreement or a waiver to the transfer of unit work.

Further, as indicated, there is no evidence that the subject of transfer or diversion of work was "fully discussed" or "consciously explored" during collective-bargaining negotiations in 1975, and, of course, the parties' silence cannot be equated with a waiver of the right to bargain. Moreover, the diversion of work from CAS to A-1 occurred primarily after the 1975 agreement was executed,[30] and while the Employer made reference at the remand hearing to subsequent negotiations in 1977, as aforementioned, there is no evidence that diversion of unit work was discussed and, in any event, the instant unfair labor practice proceeding was long underway by that time precluding any alleged "waiver" or "agreement" on the part of the Union.

In the final analysis, I have been directed by the Board in the order of remand to receive evidence on the following issues and to make a finding of facts limited to these issues.

1. Whether Corcoran Automatic Sprinkler (CAS) bid only on jobs requiring union labor or also bid on other jobs.

Counsel for Local 669 contends that the Board's position and statement on this issue is predicated on a fallacious assumption that the construction market for sprinkler systems is somehow segregated into union and nonunion segments but, as the three Michigan representatives of union contractors (Claflin, Timm, and Leadbetter) all testified, as aforementioned herein, that there is no such thing as a job which precludes union labor, or union and nonunion sprinkler contractors, from competing directly against one another for jobs, and also subcontracting work from both union and nonunion general contractors.

Whatever the full impact of the above argument might be, there is no doubt that until sometime in late 1975 all jobs of significant size for which George Corcoran submitted bids were performed by CAS, as this record duly reflects.

2. Whether CAS bid on jobs other than union jobs, and on what basis did CAS rather than A-1 submit bids.

I do not believe it has been established that CAS bid on projects other than union jobs. It must be remembered that Corcoran testified in the initial 1976 hearing that it was his intention in 1973 to operate one company as a union company (CAS), and his nonunion company (A-1) would bid on jobs where nonunion contractors were permitted.

3. Whether during 1975 Corcoran stopped submitting bids from CAS or continued to submit bids, but was no longer successful.

It is quite clear from this record, as noted, that from the middle or fall of 1975 onward A-1 took over progressively more of the sprinkler installation work from CAS until George Corcoran simply stopped bidding for CAS in November 1976, but in 1975, CAS did successfully submit numerous bids. (See R. Exh. 14.)

4. Whether A-1 performed any work originally bid from and awarded to CAS.

The two relevant examples in the record come from the initial hearing in which it was demonstrated that one project (Alma College) was obtained by A-1, transferred to CAS, and then transferred back to A-1 in January 1976.[31] The second example was when Englehart Construction called CAS in August or September 1975 and obtained a price for a job, but was then called back by George Corcoran on behalf of A-1 with a lower price.

5. Whether A-1's performance of work for former customers of CAS occurred at the suggestion of such customers or of Corcoran.

There is no evidence that a single CAS customer contacted Corcoran and expressly requested a bid from A-1.

As I indicated previously, we are concerned here with the protection of historic bargaining unit jobs from complete abolition. Respondents were not content to operate both sides of their double-breasted entities simultaneously. Instead, as the records plainly show, they are now engaged in an overt effort to transfer all work to the nonunion corporation thereby causing the demise of the represented unit.

Counsel for the Employer has also argued that there is no showing that work performed by A-1 would have been reserved or awarded to CAS if A-1 had not bid on it. However, this argument must be viewed in the total circumstances surrounding this case. Corcoran specifically informed Gary Sears that he would phase out CAS and A-1 would take over the sprinkler work. Moreover, after the charges were filed in the instant case by the Union he then decided to do the Alma College job as A-1—that he did not feel there was any reason for him cision to stop bidding, is not applicable in this particular situation in light of the Supreme Court's decision in First National Maintenance Corp. v. NLRB, 452 U.S. 666 (1981), and the Board's decision in the Milwaukee Spring II, 268 NLRB 601 (1984), and argues that from the holdings in these cases it is eminently clear the Union does not have any right to require the Employer to bargain over entrepreneurial decisions such as closing a portion of its operation and/or relocating a portion of its operation during the term of the contract; that such actions are considered entrepreneurial and go to the heart of an employer's managerial-making authority and as such are not mandatory subjects of bargaining. Moreover, argues the Employer, CAS had the inherent right to make the determination it would stop bidding on new installation work and thereby cease doing business, that this decision was only arrived at after CAS lost its journeymen union fitters because of the pressure and harassment placed on them by Charging Party and CAS's continued inability to hire other journeymen fitters to replace them.

---

[30] Robert Murray testified that in the middle or towards the end of 1975 the fabrication began to increase for A-1.

[31] At the initial hearing, in reference to which company would do the Alma College job, and the circumstances under which the job was shifted from one company to another—all the parties stipulated that Corcoran made the following statement in his affidavit given to the Board during its initial investigation:

> After getting the charges I decided to do the job as A-1 and not subcontract it to Corcoran. I didn't feel there was any reason for me to show the Union a sign of good faith after they filed the charges against me.

to show good faith after the Union filed charges against him. While such statements do not show that CAS would have secured the jobs in question if A-1 had not bid, they certainly do show open hostility and shed light on later events.

Prior to the fall of 1976, CAS was a successful operational sprinkler contracting company actively bidding on and performing many sprinkler-fitting contracts, and it is George Corcoran who makes the decisions for both CAS and A-1 as to which jobs to bid on. It is also noted that even after Corcoran discontinued bidding on any jobs for CAS, as of November 1976, he continued to do business with and bid on jobs for some of the same customers he had been formerly doing business with under the union contract with CAS, but now only bidding A-1, and with customers which A-1 had never before dealt with or submitted bids to. Further, nonunion A-1, since George Corcoran stopped bidding any jobs as CAS, has bid against union sprinkler contractors, sometimes winning such contracts and sometimes not. There is also testimony that since the cessation of CAS bids A-1 has performed work on construction sites where union trades are also present and, as further pointed out, A-1 has performed subcontracting for a mechanical contractor. Moreover, despite George Corcoran's testimony that A-1 became more successful on bids because its labor costs were lower, he still utilized A-1 to bid on jobs rather than CAS even when the labor costs for A-1 and CAS would be virtually identical because of the Davis-Bacon Act requiring the payment of the prevailing wage—normally the union pay scale in the area involved.

In view of the above, I am convinced that CAS would have successfully bid and secured several jobs, at least from its old customers, had A-1 not been in the bidding. In this respect it is noted that B. L. Harroun, Viking Fire Protection, and Safeguard of Marquette, represented in the remand hearing by Claflin, Timm, and Leadbetter, are signators with Local 669 as union contractors, and also actively competing against several nonunion companies in the sprinkler business, and all three of them obviously getting their share of the projects on which they bid, as aforestated. Certainly, if these union companies over the many years can remain profitable enterprises in their bidding endeavors, then there must be constant demands for sprinkler work by signatory companies with Local 669, and in view of the good past record of CAS in getting such jobs, it is most likely that had this company continued in their endeavors, it too would have been awarded its share of the union work.

On the basis and for the reasons as set forth and discussed above, I reaffirm my findings that George Corcoran deliberately phased out CAS so that A-1 could take over the sprinkler work here in question without bargaining with the Union and that the Union did not agree or waive its right to protest Respondents' conduct.

Accordingly, I adhere to my original decision.

* U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1986-461-629:20003